Psychologist speaks on men's sex roles

Men unwilling to accept changing sex roles in society face a lonely future, psychologist Dr. Joseph H. Pleck warned last night.

Speaking before a mixed crowd of 200 in the Student Union Ballroom as part of the Distinguished Visitors Programs, Pleck said unchanging men would find themselves "left out in the cold".

"There is no choice about the matter. The number of women willing to accept the traditional values will continue to decline in the future. Men who refuse to change will find themselves faced with an increasingly smaller pool of mates to draw upon," Pleck said.

Pleck's speech highlighted a day-long conference on "Men and Masculinity", sponsored by the Southwest Men's Center. The conference, which featured workshops dealing with "men's issues" throughout the day, was the first of its kind in New England, according to Southwest Men's Center Director Frank Dorman.

Pleck, a psychologist with the Institute for Social Research in Ann Arbor, Michigan and co-editor of Men and Masculinity, said men need to re-define their roles from two perspectives.

First, he said, men must consider their relationships with women. The "womans movement" over the last decade has served to heighten men's awareness of changing female roles, said Pleck, providing a "powerful impetus" for men to consider change.

Although the acceptances of womens changing roles would mean that men would sacrifice some of their "priviledges", Pleck said men have many things to gain in terms of establishing more meaningful relationships with women. "Besides, it's fun being liberated," he said.

A much more subtle facet of "men's liberation" concerns men and the outside world, continued Pleck. While the male's role in the family, at work and at leisure is not often considered, he said it nonetheless represents an equally important consideration.

With men taking an increasing role in the care of children and the household because of working mothers, men can establish more intimate family ties. This would eliminate the "I - never - really - knew - my - father" syndrome, Pleck said. "While it is easier to focus on number one, it is the responsibility of the male to also focus on the second. There is a complex interrelationship between the two. The real challenge is to combine the two," he said.

Pleck will become a UMass faculty member next semester. He said the traditional role of the male as the sole economic provider of the family has created many of the problems facing men today. Men should not have to feel inferior or unworthy if their wive's work.

Students, faculty to protest cuts

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

A joint effort by students, staff and faculty will result in a rally against Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' proposed "level funding" high education budget Tuesday at noon in front of the Student Union building.

Speakers and workshops are designed both to educate people about the effects of "level funding" on UMass and to "show the legislature that people are concerned that the quality of education is on the downward swing," according to Jim Gagne Student Government Association's Director of Communication.

"It'll help to show the legislature that the people are aroused and upset and willing to fight 'level funding'," Jim Lees an organizer from the Budget Cuts Task Force, said.

The task force originated at a town meeting by the student senate when the Dukakis' plan first came out.

Dukakis' "level funding" proposal would allocate $68.1 million to UMass, a budget which does not take inflation or other increased costs into account. The proposal could result in drastic cutbacks in departments, student services and personnel.

Speakers at the rally will include: John Bracey, chairperson from Afro-American Studies; Laszlo Tikos, chairperson from Slavic Languages; Susan Birmingham, from the Student Organizing Project; Bill Lazarus, from the Budget Cuts Task Force; Student Government Association co-Presidents Jon A. Hite and Pinky Batiste; Richard Minear, representing Asian Studies; Bruce Laurie, from Massachusetts Society of Professors and a representative from the Graduate Student Employees Union.

Birmingham said speeches will analyze the effects of "level funding" on the university, how Provost Paul L. Puryear's Five-Year Plan fits into the "level funding" proposal, and how faculty, staff and students can work to counter the proposals.

Specific topics for the speeches will be decided at a meeting today at 4 p.m. she said.

Workshops will be held in the Campus Center following the speeches. Topics are: Puryear and Faculty Senate reports, public and private education, student services and "level funding," "level funding" and student governance, graduate students and the university administration, and organizing further action against budget cuts.

Times and places for workshops will be available in a leaflet to be distributed at the rally.

While the rally is not specifically to oppose the provost's long-range plan, Lees said, "The Puryear report is the administrations way of accommodating level funding. This report is only the first step in destroying public higher education. It singles out the most vunerable departments. Any other department could be next."

Lees said he expects a lot of people to attend the event. "Many people are enraged about the treatment the University is getting. Tuesday is a change to make a united visable action."

The rally, sponsored by the student senate, originally was to be a teach-in. The teach-in proposal was changed to a rally about two weeks ago at a Budget Cuts Task Force meeting.

Hite will represent Amherst Democrats

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association Jon A. Hite was elected Saturday to represent Amherst Democrats at a Democratic Co-President State and Issues Convention to be held in Worcester on June 18th.

The convention, which has not been held in five years, will be concerned with setting down platforms issues along guidelines proposed by delegates.

Over 15 candidates vied for delegate spots during the Amherst Democratic Town Committee Caucus held this weekend at Town Hall. Kenneth Mosakowski, Dee Sutton, Diane Barcalaw, and Democratic Town Committee Chairperson Professor Jerome Milleur were elected with Hite on the first ballot. Voters added Jane Hollappi to the summer delegation on the second ballot.

Delegates have been requested to submit platform planks on the following areas: nuclear disarmament and arms control, health care, energy policy, tax reform, full employment policies, welfare reform, state and local finance reform, court reform, international economic-policy, and U.S. policy on human rights.

Formal wording of the proposals will be drawn up next weekend. Professor Milleur yesterday said that "While the issues of state and local finance reform and court reform will be highlighted for their importance to the area, greater attention will be given to the addition of a plank to be drafted by Jon Hite on higher education."

"With four billion dollars budgeted this year for education in Massachusetts we cannot negate the necessity of placing public higher education as the top priority in the June platform," Hite said in a telephone interview yesterday.

Amherst to consider trade ban

By THERESA M. HANAFIN

The Amherst Board of Selectmen will consider a request tonight that the town cease to do business with United States corporations that have "significant investments in South Africa when alternatives are available."

The petition, being distributed by the South African Support Committee, names the First National Bank of Boston, Burroughs Machines and Xerox Corporation as those organizations which the town should stop doing business with.

The petition also asks the town to sell "any securities it holds in corporations which operate in South Africa."

Diana Romer, chairperson of the selectmen, said last night the selectmen had placed the committee on the agenda tonight but said she was "almost certain" that the town does not have any investments or trust funds in South Africa or with corporations that have anything to do with South Africa.

The committee is comprised of Five-College students, members of the Revolutionary Student Brigade, and the Student Organizing Project, and various Third World organizations at UMass.

Town Manager A. Louis Hayward, primary financial officer of the town, said although his review of the situation would not be completed until late this morning, to the "best of his knowledge" all investments by the town have been local ones.

Hayward said he will make a full report to the selectmen at their meeting tonight.

But whether the selectmen will issue any type of statement condemning the white rule in South Africa as racist as the committee would like it to do is another question.

Romer said the selectmen as a body traditionally have been unwilling to make "that kind of political advisory statement" on the grounds that they were not elected to handle affairs outside of the town's borders.

"I think this traditon will probably prevail, but you can never tell," she said.

There is also a question raised by Romer as to whether the selectmen can legally put a restriction on companies who may bid on any of the town's bonds.

Romer said she feels the organization's best route would be to put some sort of motion on the agenda for the fall town meeting rather than try and get a special town meeting called this spring.

The petition reads in part: "The Town of Amherst should join with the growing international movement of support the liberation struggles of the black majority in So. Africa."

The petition makes five requests; first, "That the Town of Amherst should go on record condemning the racist South African regime and urging U.S. corporations to withdraw from South Africa."

Second, "That the Town of Amherst should cease doing business with U.S. corporations with significant investments in South Africa when alternatives are available. Those corporations presently include Xerox, Burroughs Machines, and The First National Bank of Boston."

Third, that "Copies of this adopted resolution be forwarded to the appropriate representatives of each of the above companies."

Fourth, "That the Town of Amherst should sell any securities it holds in corporations which operate in South Africa (re. trust funds)."

And lastly, "That the Town of Amherst should send a representative to the County Pension Fund Program to urge the Program to divest itself of any securities it holds in corporations which operate in South Africa."

Teaching Assistants strive to save their jobs

By M.A. LEWITT
Collegian Staff

With job cuts pending at UMass, Teaching Assistants are summoning up all their strength to pull their heads off the chopping block.

The Graduate Student Employees Union (GSEU) which represents, teaching assistants (TA), teaching associates and research associates (RA), will open a Campus Center information table on Monday. A GSEU representative will speak at a level funding rally to be held Tuesday and a picket on Whitmore has been scheduled for Wednesday.

"We really have to give people a sense of what this emergency is all about," said Political Science TA, Chris Distefano at last Friday's meeting. The meeting was the second in two days for the group.

The group met Thursday to draw up its eight point platform which it submitted to the administration Friday morning. Provost Puryear's plan, which states multiple graduate jobs for elimination next year, has been specified as the main target of the platforms demands.

The platform opposes Graduate Student Job cuts and tuition hikes. The T.A.'s don't want to keep their jobs at the expense of undergraduates. GSEU demands that the Administration recognize their group and collaborate with them on allocation of Graduate Employee money.

While the GSEU awaits legal bargaining power from the State Labor Board, chairperson Sherry Flashman says Whitmore retains the services of a Boston lawyer who specializes in union breaking.

GSEU also wants current T.A.'s, if judged elligible by their department, given first rehiring priority.

Current tuition waiver guidelines are to be maintained as well as the current 29th week requirement. Many T.A.'s work over twenty hours a week. Hardly any receive $3600 a year which is what the Teaching Assistant arrangement promises.

The union did not demand pay increases, but did ask summer session tuition waivers to be re-instated. The final demand calls for the maintenance of Affirmative Action in hiring of Graduate Employees.

A majority of GSEU members want to back their demands with grade withholding. "They're not going to pay attention until they see we are going to do something," said Mike Forester another T.A. from Political Science, a department whose presence at meetings is always strong.

Over the weekend the union made up special organizing packets to present organizers with available facts about T.A. cuts.

Because the union seeks the support of the University as a whole, each organizer is circulating a petition for faculty, undergraduates and graduate endorsements.

Articulating the belief behind GSEU's campaign, chairperson Sherry Flashman stated, "The potential support is there. When everyone knows what all this is about we will have it."

OHAG plans May Day

By LAWRENCE HIRSHBERG
Collegian Staff

The final arrangements for the Orchard Hill-Central May Day were announced by Spring Concert committee chairperson Gary Shuster last night at an Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) meeting. The concert will take place on Sunday, May 1 in the orchard between Central and Orchard Hill areas. Five bands will be presented, including Zacharaiah, Pam Bricker Band, the Baily Bros. Band, The Atlantics, and The Ellis Hall Group. May Day starts at noon and will continue until approximately 10 p.m.

The Orchard Hill crafts fair was held yesterday in Field and Grayson dorms. "Handpicked," a country-rock band played and jugglers, torch throwers, fire-eaters and magicians entertained. The people at the fair, numbering between 500 and 900 for the day gave the entertainers a good response.

OHAG vice-president Mark Hergenrother said that a manager for the OH snack bar has still not been chosen. According to Hergenrother, the night that the interviews were to be held four of the seven members of the interviewing committee tailed to show up. The interviewing process has been postponed due to the inability of the committee to meet with Affirmative Action standards.

Sylvan spring party this weekend

Sylvan Area's Annual Spring Weekend will be held this weekend in Sylvan's courtyard. The festivities will begin Friday night at dusk featuring the film "Fantastic Planet" and other short movies. Beginning at 3:30 p.m. on Saturday live music will be provided as well as a talent show sponsored by the Sylvan Cultural Society. All those interested in performing in the talent show should contact the Cultural Society, located in Cashin dorm. Free popcorn will be available at the movie, and food and beer will be served on Saturday.

Beth Tibbetts, president of Northeast Area Government was present at last night's Sylvan Government meeting. She asked for help in fighting against the 6 per cent budget cuts that area governments will be faced with in the upcoming year. She also expressed a desire to work more closely with Sylvan in the future.

In other area business, WSYL Radio (95.5 F.M.) has announced its new directors and engineer. Kay Ward and Cliff McCarthy were chosen as co-directors and Rick Maltzman was selected as the station's engineer. The trio informed government meeting members that WSYL has purchased new equipment including a tape deck.

Town Meeting member Rick Sheara expressed his gratitude to area government members for their support in his recent election. He also announced that there will be a Town Meeting on Monday, May 2. Four other Sylvanites were elected to represent Precinct 3, which includes Sylvan.

Area President Timothy Bernard announced that there will not be a referendum proposing an amendment to Sylvan's constitution which would change the date of the Government's elections from fall to the spring.

Notice

The newly-elected Central Area Council (CAC) executive officers begin their terms tonight at the 7:15 CAC meeting in Chadbourne dormitory. They will serve until the third week in March, 1978.

Mark Zinan, co-vice president for the past year, defeated his office colleague, Andy Topalian, by 90 votes in the presidential contest of this special election last week.

The election was postponed a month upon the advice of the Undergraduate Student Attorney General, Paul Yanowitch. There was only a 20 per cent turnout of Central area constituents for the April 21st election.

The other new officers are Richard Fryer, vice president secretary, and write-in candidate Gary Anderson, treasurer.

The out-going officers who did not seek re-election were President Janice L. Perry and Treasurer Robert Cannon.

Faculty engaged in power struggle

By JOE QUINLAN
and MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

NEWS ANALYSIS

The Faculty Senate is engaged in a struggle to retain collegiality in campus governance and thus retain a purpose for its existence.

The second special meeting in as many weeks has been called by the Faculty Senate for this Thursday, in an attempt to convince Provost Paul L. Puryear and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery that the senate should still be intimately involved in the formulation of academic plans and policies.

In their regular meeting last week, the senate made clear to both Puryear and Bromery their opposition to the use of phase one of the five-year plan, which would reallocate departments to fit student demand, in making tenure decisions this year.

Puryear sent copies of the five-year plan to deans and directors of special programs on March 24, requesting their suggestions on it, before drawing up the final draft. The final draft will then be given to the Office of Budgeting and Institutional Studies in order for a five-year budget to be drawn up.

Senators have consistently objected to the original draft of the plan, drawn up without faculty consultation, the more traditional way of formulating academic policies.

But Bromery and Puryear made clear to the senate that the administration will be making decisions from now on. While faculty will be given the opportunity to critique proposals, the myth of collegiality is dead.

The fact that UMass now has a faculty union, recognized or not, which will at some point be sitting down to negotiate a contract with the administration, is intricately related to the administration extending their control over academic policy.

And while the union is publically decrying the provost's plan, it can't help but privately hope that Puryear and Bromery succeed in disarming the Faculty Senate.

With a meaningless senate, faculty will be attracted to a union which will protect their interests at the bargaining table.

At last Thursday's meeting, however, the more immediate concern was over tenure decisions which will be made on the basis of the provost's preliminary drafts.

As with governance, the provost and senators held different interpretations of personnel policy. Roughly 20 professors will be denied tenure in the next few months if the provost's plan is enacted as it now reads.

The University "Redbook" which dictates academic personnel policy, again allows for faculty participation in the tenure process. Again, the administration is granted the priviledge of making the final decisions.

The senate was properly abhorred that tenure decisions would be made on what they considered "arbitrary grounds", while Bromery and Puryear defended the need to meet student needs which they say are not being met in many departments.

Puryear told the senate that there are 600 students who currently cannot be admitted to high demand programs, with the admissions process not yet complete.

Employment limited for non-technical grads

By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

Employment prospects for the Class of '77 may be limited for graduates in non-technical disciplines, according to Alumni Placement Director Robert J. Morrissay. He added that for those graduates in technical fields — engineering, accounting and auditing especially — the prospects of getting a major-related job "appear to be shaping up as the best in several years."

Morrissay's figures come from a recently released survey conducted by the College Placement Council, of which UMass is a member. This survey records offers made to a graduating class, not jobs accepted.

Overall, companies have made 49 per cent more offers to graduates at the bachelor's level than at this time a year ago. Engineers continued to be most popular with employers, attracting a full 47 per cent of the offers. Accountants and auditors copped 25 per cent of the overtures, and the remaining 28 per cent of employers sought people in 21 other functional areas.

Business employers stepped up their recruiting the most, making 59 per cent more offers than last March. Manufacturing-industrial and non-profit-educational institutions made 50 per cent more offers, but governmental agencies made only slightly more offers than a year ago.

Women with BA's and BS's received 68 per cent more offers this year from employers. This gain is above and beyond a 27 per cent gain last March. Despite this encouraging figure, though, women still received only 18 per cent of the total job offers made.

At the Master's Degree level, volume for women increased 80 per cent over last year while men received 60 per cent more offers. In total volume, women only received 16 per cent of the offers.

In plain dollars and cents, the small-but-growing field of petroleum engineering is the top field for this year's class. At the bachelor's level, employers are offering $1,508 a month ($18,096 annually). Other bachelor's averages include roughly $14,184 per year for civil engineers and $16,560 for chemical engineers.

Scientific disciplines rose 2 per cent to 5 per cent in salary levels. Various recent-grad biologists are making $10,212 per year. Computer scientists are being offered $13,020 this year.

The top percentage gains for Master's degrees are again in the scientific disciplines, but also for new MBA's. Science majors are gaining an average 6 per cent to 8 per cent over their counterparts of last May. Rates are not yet settled for MBA's, because their dollar averages usually do not settle out until late in the season.

EPA counsel believes Seabrook nuke to be built

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

Robert Thompson, regional counsel for the Environmental Protection Agency (ERA), said he feels that the Seabrook Nuclear power plant "will probably be built in one form or another."

Thompson assisted the writing of an EPA decision that rejected the cooling system of the Seabrook plant last November.

Calling the decision "a monument to the integrity of the legal process," Thompson spoke on some of the reasons that led EPA regional director John McGlennon to stop construction of the $2 billion plant.

Plant design called for the extraction of 1.2 billion gallons of water out of the ocean per day, running it through the plant, and dumping the water back into the ocean with an increased temperature of 40 degrees.

To facilitate this plan, the plant's designers decided to dig two tunnels out to sea. The tunnels would total about seven miles long and cost nearly $3,000 per foot to dig. The high cost was due to necessary digging through granite said Thompson.

The EPA rejected the design mainly because the plant would kill anything sucked into the intake of the plant according to Thompson. "The pressure that far underground and the turbulence in the pipe would kill anything, including fish, that went through the pipe," said Thompson.

One of the species the EPA was most concerned about was the soft shell clam. The Public Service Company of New Hampshire, owners of the plant, said that only about five per cent of the clam larvae would be killed because the plant would only take in that much water.

However, other scientists estimated that as much as 50 per cent of the water could have been taken in because of current changes Thompson said.

"The Seabrook controversy has been painted as a battle between nuclear power and a few bushels of clams, but the clams were representative of many other species," Thompson said.

Asked about the effect of public opinions such as the anti-nuke protests, Thompson said that the EPA "isn't legally entitled to take that into account. The statutory test is whether or not it affects the marine environment."

The decision by McGlennon has been appealed to by EPA director Douglas Costle in Washington. Thompson said he expects a decision in about two weeks.

Thompson also said that "the same standards that applied to Seabrook don't mean that you can't build a nuclear plant if you site it properly." The EPA recently issued its approval of the plans for the Pilgrim II Nuclear Power Plant in Plymouth. Thompson said that the Pilgrim plant was located right on the coast, not in an estuary like Seabrook. As there is a plant at the site already, many studies that are concerned with nuclear plant effects have been conducted.

The Seabrook case may bring about changes in the way nuclear power plants are licensed. Thompson said that power companies order much of the expensive parts of a reactor before they apply for the permits because there is a longlead time needed for these parts.

Thompson outlined a procedure called area site review. Under this procedure, the company would be required to obtain approval of the site before they begin ordering the components. This would prevent a situation like Seabrook.

There would also be less pressure to approve the plant if there wasn't so much money invested in it already. "You can imagine the pressure that John McGlennon was under knowing that if he turned down the plant it might cost someone as much as $300 million," said Thompson.

Thompson also said he feels that power plant opponents play "a vital role in bringing information to administrators" by intervening in hearings. "I think that the government should financially assist intervenors."

"Seabrook will have several effects. Power companies will do a lot better job presenting their case to the EPA. Secondly it will affect power companies ability to borrow money before they get EPA clearance. It's also heading towards an early site review concept."

UMass celebrates Israeli founding

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

The sign atop the arch of the Cape Cod lounge read, "join us in Israel." Along the lounge walls, twelve tables ranged from a constantly changing slide show to the latest up-to-the-minute details on living, working, and studying in Israel.

The celebration sponsored by the UMass Hillel and Resources Judaica which attracted over a hundred people for the three hour festivities, was held in honor of the 29th anniversary of the founding of the state of Israel.

The festivities began early with a special hour and a half segment of Zamir, WMUA's Israeli radio show. The cast then played music used in the show while people browsed through tables of imported Israeli merchandise and pamphlets giving the Israeli side of assorted middle eastern problems.

Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter gave a brief introduction which included three poems by Israeli authors. Moments of silence followed for those who have died "so we could all be here today."

Independence Day in Israel traditionally follows Holocaust Day; a memorial to the more than six million Jews who were murdered in World War Two.

"Independence Day usually starts in Israel with loud sirens in the streets telling people to stop mourning and start celebrating," Perlmutter said.

A guitar duet "Kol Sasson" heralded the start of the day's entertainment. "Kol Sasson" sang festive songs ranging from "Ha Shannuh Habauh" (next year) to "Lou Yahe" (it shall come to pass), a song that came out of the 1973 Yom Kippur war.

A demonstration of another middle eastern art form followed. Belly dancing was performed by three UMass women who performed under the stage names of Yaminne, Tammari and Geleenha.

The dancers prompted enthusiastic applause mostly from male members of the audience.

Chairs were then pushed back as Perlmutter began en masse teaching of three simple Israeli folk dances keeping the audience busy until the arrival of popular Middle Eastern food such as Falaffel, (soy beans, cucumbers, tomatos all folded into Syrian bread) and humuuse, a bean mixture.

Roadrunners rebuff rain

By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

I'm a romantic. My brain knows better, but my soul still believes in heroism, perseverence and gutsiness. After being rained out of a camping weekend, and hearing the theme from "Rocky" several dozen times on the radio, I decided to enter the Greenough First Annual Seven Mile Road Race. It didn't matter that I hadn't seriously run cross country since I was a wet-eared high school sophomore. I'm in reasonably good shape, I told myself. As I munched a bagel dipped in honey and laced on my green John Havlicek sneakers, I resolved to run the distance on little more than grit.

It was now one hour to race-time. I trotted over the fields between Sylvan and Greenough. As I wheezed over the crest of the hill, I pictured Sylvester Stallone pounding down the streets of Philly. I squared my shoulders, glided down the cinder path; and through the front doors to the registration table.

I was number 32. Despite the rain, there was eventually a turnout of 40 or so. Some would-be joggers after registration and one even came came two minutes after the race started.

We joked in Greenough's lobby about the steady rain. A cloudburst drenched us as race organizers moved contestants outdoors.

"There will be two commands," bellowed starter Mike Bars. "On your marks and go. ON YOUR MARKS ... " I never heard "Go". It was lost over the thundering herd. My head told me to hold back in the pack for a steady pace. Seven miles is a long distance. Unfortunately, my feet told my head to buzz off and for about a half a mile I was one of the leaders.

Rain poured on us, puddles splashed back at us, and my glasses fogged over. We trampled down East Pleasant towards Amherst Center. Then, turning up North Pleasant, we climbed back up Butterfield Terrace and Clark Hill Road. Up hill, my spirit started to fade. Last night's beer cramped my stomach. I started to walk the incline. Barbara Callanan, one of the women in the race, overtook me while offering encouragements. She paced me up the hill and went on to finish 19th.

Trotting past Greenough again, I handed my glasses to a friend and struggled on. Rounding the dorms back to East Pleasant, I saw one runner take a strategic detour into Grayson and back, I'm sure, to his room.

We splashed up East Pleasant, around Pine and Henry Road to North East Street. I was now in the place I would finish — roughly 30th. There were three other UMass men helping me bring up the rear and 54 year old Hank Ainsworth of Westboro. Hank was here because his daughter Nancy was a Greenough resident.

I paced myself with Hank for over half the course. When he came up behind me, he advised me to skirt puddles, not run in them. "I can't see 'em," I laughed. "My eyes are back in Greenough." He encouraged me and the rest of the back-pack to stay loose. I didn't find out until after the race that Hank has run two BAA Marathons, one in 1972 and on his 50th birthday in 1973. He currently runs six days a week. "But I haven't run competitively in two years." The Ainsworth's made the roadrace a family affair. Hank and Nancy running, Mrs. Ainsworth taking times at the finish line. She was one of a total of 15 officials taking times and pointing out the route for us.

As the tail-enders rounded the one-mile-to-go mark, the other three students rallied ahead of Hank and me. We pumped along; up Strong Street, back up East Pleasant, to Orchard Hill. Hank surprised me with a last minute burst of speed. He took 30th, I took 31st. Shortly afterward, his daughter Nancy, nursing a ligament pulled two weeks earlier, finished 32nd.

I finished — in 57 minutes, 14 seconds. Winner Stephen Hillyard had run the seven miles in 40:15. Hillyard, and the top ten runners, all received Greenough First Annual Seven Mile Road Race t-shirts. Hillyard was given a $15 gift certificate from the Sports Store in Amherst. Second place Craig Bloodgood (40:16) won a T-shirt and a $10 certificate from Fenton's Athletic Supplies. Bob Rosen, of the Sugarloaf Track Club, had run seven miles just before the race and arrived two minutes after the start. He finished third and won a T-shirt and a case of Lite beer.

Melba Moore

Melba Moore sings at FAC

Melba Moore, Broadway star and recording artist, performed for a spirited full house at the Fine Arts Center last Friday night as the highlight of "African Woman's Week", sponsored by the Black Cultural Center and the Malcolm X Center.

Although it was Ms. Moore's first appearance in this area, she by no means came unheralded. She first came to stardom on Broadway in the musical Purlie, where many theatre-goers fell in love with her impish stage presence and her open-hearted and happy-go-lucky style. One of Purlie's show-stoppers was the tune "I Got Love", which was written into the show especially for Ms. Moore. It was a song that won the Purlie audience over for her, and when she sang it at Friday night's concert, she sang it with every bit of the feeling and power with which she did it on Broadway. The Fine Arts Center audience's response was as enthusiastic as the Broadway audience's; throughout the performance Ms. Moore created that same electricity and energy that she had created on Broadway.

The music was prefaced with a few announcements concerning "African Women's Week".

The show opened with the Pizant Brothers and the Bluebird Express, who served as Ms. Mooore's back-up band, getting the people in the spirit with a few jumping tunes that had the audience clapping their hands. One of the Pizant brothers was outstanding, showing the crowd a musical wizardry on the saxophone and onssome other wind instruments that he kept about his chair.

The focal point of the show was the vibrance, excitement and sheer power of Ms. Moore herself. She captivated the audience with her dazzling personality; and her charm. Her astounding vocal quality and range put the audience in the palm of her hand, where, I must say, she took very nice care of us.

Thieves hit craft shop

Selfish people are once again stealing tools and other equipment from the student union craft shop, according to a craft shop worker.

Ed Keyes of the Recognized Student Organization (RSO) Craft Shop said these thieves are depriving others the use of the stolen equipment. He is asking those who have abused the services of this non-profit craft shop to return the stolen property as soon as possible.

Syrians battle guerrillas

BEIRUT, Lebanon [AP] — Syrian troops and tanks battled radical Palestinian guerrillas for the second straight day yesterday on the outskirts of Beirut's Sabra Palestinian refugee camp.

Unofficial reports said at least two persons were killed in the fighting near Beirut's international airport. But Palestinian sources said the number of casualties could not be determined immediately because ambulances were unable to reach the battle area.

In Israel Sunday, a newspaper quoted Defense Minister Shimon Peres, who has taken over the duties of prime minister, as saying Israel would intervene to protect Christian villages in south Lebanon from Palestinian guerrillas.

The Syrians used Russian-made T54 and T62 tanks and columns of armored personnel carriers to lay siege to radical guerrilla strongholds at the Sabra camp.

Reports said there was a panicky exodus from nearby residential areas.

The outbreak of fighting followed the kidnap of a radical guerrilla leader Thursday and the slaying of two Syrian soldiers Friday, allegedly by Palestinian radicals.

The Syrians provide the bulk of a 30,000-man Arab League peacekeeping army that halted Lebanon's civil war last November. For several months leading up to the cease-fire, the Syrians aided right-wing Christians in their battle against a Palestinian-leftist Moslem alliance.

Fighting between Christian and Palestinian groups has continued sporadically in the south, where the two sides are seeking control of a string of settlements along the Israeli border.

The Israeli newspaper Haaretz said Peres told a cabinet meeting that "if there is a blow struck against the Christian villages, whose fate and future concern us... Israel will be required to intervene."

A Peres spokesman said he could not confirm the report.

The newspaper quoted Peres as saying Israel would not tolerate a Syrian or Palestinian presence in the border area," which the Palestinians used as a staging area for raids before the Lebanese civil war.

Frisbee team set to play

By LISA MASSIMIANO
Collegian Staff

UMass women are really getting into the "toss" of things as the new all-women's Frisbee team rallies to play its third intramural game next weekend.

According to Charlotte Allen, member of the UMass Frisbee Club, the team will draw more women into the sport, giving them the chance to gain Frisbee experience, while getting exercise and having a good time.

"Sometimes you notice on a co-ed team that women don't get the disc passed to them as much," she said. "With an all-women's team you don't have that problem."

The women's team has been together for three weeks now and will play through the semester.

"A couple of friends on the Frisbee team suggested that it might be a good idea to get a women's team together," Allen said. "Then the women who had been playing all along got together as a team and we recruited around campus."

"Women compete on the same events as men and are judged the same way, but they aren't judged against men," she said.

The women's team is composed of 15 people who play every Thursday. They now compete against co-ed teams but Allen said she hopes more women get involved so they can establish their own intramural system this fall.

In addition to the intramural teams there is an intercollegiate team on campus that competes with other colleges from the Northeast. This weekend there will be championship frisbee games on the Southwest fields. Sixteen teams from the east coast will attend.

Showers pelt East

'Unneeded' rains brush fire fears...

BOSTON [AP] — April rains have come to New England and should benefit some parched areas while raising the danger of flooding in other sections.

The National Weather Service said yesterday that normally by this date in April, the six-state region would have received 16 inches of rain, two more than had fallen.

But, the rain was still falling. In Boston, 1.1 inches fell between Friday night and Sunday noon, and a weather forecaster said another two inches probably would fall before the rain ends Monday or Tuesday.

There were flash flood warnings in southern Vermont and parts of New York, but no flooding was reported in Massachusetts.

The weather service said the rain eliminated extremely dry conditions in western Massachusetts and southern and central Maine. More than 1,200 acres of forest and woodlands were destroyed by fires in those areas last week.

In Amherst, soil specialist Franklin W. Southwick said Massachusetts' agriculture needed the rain to spread fertilizers through the soil, but the state's vegetation was in no danger of drought.

Southwick, chairman of the Plant and Soil Sciences Division of the College of Food and Natural Resources at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, said farms and orchards were not under any moisture stress, and the rain had little impact.

"The winter snow melt added good below surface moisture," Southwick said in a telephone interview Sunday afternoon.

"Because planting hasn't started in much of the state, there has been little or no moisture demand by vegetation."

Southwick said the danger of forest fires is over at present.

Dry, windy weather was blamed for the dangerous conditions that contributed to the spread of last week's forest fires.

"Orchard trees could have made it until the end of April without rain," Southwick said. "The trees' roots are two feet long and very wide-reaching, easily tapping into tremendous moisture reserves."

The rains will help carry fertilizers spread on soil surfaces during the spring into the soil mass, he said.

He said the short dry spell here doesn't "compare to the extended drought periods experienced in the Midwest."

Drought dries West

...while recycling notion is kindled

[PNS] — "People are going to get damn thirsty before they drink recycled water," said a federal Bureau of Reclamation official recently. But if the Western drought continues and current water-purification projects are successful, the thirsty public may soon have to swallow not only its pride but the water that once coursed through its sewers.

Waste-water reclamation has already succeeded in providing some recycled water, pumped through expensive pipelines separate from the regular water supply, for agriculture and industry. But the prime goal of reclamation is drinkable water.

Reclaimed water could then be pumped more economically into existing water systems, avoiding the expense of new pipelines.

The technology is still being refined, and public uneasiness over processing sewage for human consumption is widespread. But the pressures of population growth and drought have already spurred advanced recycling projects in various parts of the country.

Denver, Colo., has committed itself to waste-water reclamation "more publicly and forthrightly" than any other water district in the country, according to Robert Harris of the Environmental Defense Fund in Washington, D.C. "There's just not enough fresh water in those mountains," he says.

Kenneth Miller of the Denver Board of Water Commissioners says his agency expects to have a prototype working for one million consumers by 1990.

According to Harris, New York's Suffolk and Nassau counties on Long Island will begin some uses of recycled water in two or three years and will reclaim half of the region's waste-water within 10-15 years.

Jean Auer, member of the California Water Resources Board, claims, however, that "the real progress (in waste-water reclamation) is going to be in California." The nation's most populous state is the best example of the problems and hopes for the future, she says.

California spends about $600 million annually — 75 per cent federally funded — on waste-water development. Already 194 recycling projects are in operation in the state — most for irrigation, some for industry, none as yet for human consumption.

California uses about 32 million acre-feet of water annually. Of that total only 180,000 acre-feet are reclaimed, the remainder lost. (One acre-foot is an acre of water one foot deep; three acre-feet equal one million gallons.)

John Bryson, chairman of the state Water Resources Control Board, told a U.S. Senate subcommittee last week that 60 per cent of the water deficit projected for California by the year 2000 could be made up by waste-water reclamation.

ADVANCED PROJECTS

The South Tahoe public utility district's advanced waste-water reclamation plant in California's Sierra Nevada mountains draws water experts from all over the world. Processed through nine different biological and chemical purificants, the plant's effluent is considered technically pure and drinkable.

Domestic use, however, is prohibited until the state health department sets standards for reclaimed water. By the official timetable, such standards will not be set for another three years.

State law even prohibits the Tahoe plant from pumping the water into Lake Tahoe. Instead, the effluent is piped 24 miles over the mountains to Indian Creek reservoir, a water recreation area.

The Irvine Ranch water district in Southern California currently reclaims every drop of its waste-water — 4.9 million gallons per day, all used for irrigation.

Public opinion for such use of treated sewage has been "very positive," according to the district's public relations director, Edie Van Lehn. But she admits that much more public education will be necessary for acceptance of reclaimed water for human consumption.

A recent study by Professor William Bruvold of Berkeley's University of California showed that "a substantial portion of the public is not yet ready for the intimate use of reclaimed water."

Public opinion aside, water experts such as James Cofer of South Tahoe believe the technological breakthrough for bringing waste-water to acceptable health standards, if research funding rises, will be just around the corner.

But public health officials like California's Henry Ongerth caution that too hasty an advance will endanger public safety. Some officials claim privately that it will be 10 years before the state will accept domestic use of reclaimed water.

Ironically, however, as University of California professor of sanitary engineering Erman Pearson points out, when waste-waters are given thorough treatment the processed water is often of higher quality than many waters used for domestic water supply.

Much of the pressure for more expenditure on waste-water reclamation comes from environmentalists. The Environmental Defense Fund (EDF) argues that total costs — such as the loss of a wild river bottled up by a dam — are never considered when the high cost of reclamation is compared to fresh water diversion projects.

A landmark decision for the waste-water controversy is expected soon from the California Supreme Court. The EDF is suing the East Bay Municipal Utilities District (EBMUD), which supplies water for the East San Francisco Bay Area.

EBMUD wants to build a dam to divert water from the American river. The EDF and Sacramento County, which joined the suit, claim EBMUD is not following state constitutional procedure calling for a complete analysis of waste-water reclamation possibilities.

GROUND-WATER RECHARGE

The first hope for economical reclamation of water free of nitrates, viruses, heavy metals and cancer-causing agents was a procedure called reverse osmosis. The process demineralizes water by pressuring it through a semi-permeable membrane. But because reverse osmosis requires an intense amount of energy, the process has temporarily been scrapped.

The current big hope is ground-water recharge. This process calls for the recycling of already treated water into ground-water basins. In addition to prior technical treatment, the process utilizes the earth's natural filtering capacities.

Moreover, Jean Auer contends that Californians are using 2.2 million acre-feet too much every year from ground-water basins. This "overdraft," she says, is tantamount to "borrowing from the future." By adding reclaimed water to the basins, she believes, the state can make up the difference between supply and need.

The state Department of Health is in the process of establishing guidelines regulating ground-water recharge. James Crook, the department's associate engineer, expects the guidelines to be completed by the end of the year.

Ethiopia dismisses American consulates

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia [AP] — Ethiopia's leftist military rulers announced yesterday they had closed the consulates of the United States and five other countries in war-torn Eritrea province.

The order came a day after the government closed down four other U.S. facilities in Ethiopia, saying they contradicted the ideology of the Ethiopian socialist revolution.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said the U.S., Italian and Sudanese consulates and the honorary consulates of Belgium, France and Britain in Eritrea, Ethiopia's northernmost province, were closed effective Saturday.

Consular officials were given four days to leave the country. Neither order affected the U.S. Embassy here.

No reason was immediately given for shutting down the consulates. Guerrillas of the Eritrean Liberation Front, ELF, who have been fighting for 16 years to win independence for Eritrea, claimed earlier this month they were closing in on Asmara, the Eritrean capital, and would "liberate" the province this year.

On Saturday night, the government radio announced that the U.S. Information Service center, the Military Assistance Advisory Group program and the Naval Medical Research Center, all in Addis Ababa, and the Kagnew radio communications center in Asmara were ordered closed.

About 100 American staff members and 200 dependents, including 46 officers assigned to the military advisory program, were affected by the expulsion order, which reportedly was conveyed to the U.S. Embassy only a few hours before it was made public.

The Americans were expected to begin leaving Monday on commercial flights.

The radio announcement said the American facilities contradicted the goals of the Ethiopian socialist revolution and its "nonaligned" foreign policy.

The closings followed an escalation in anti-American and anti-Sudanese statements over the past week by the increasingly pro-Soviet military council, which rules the country under the leadership of Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam.

President Jaafar el-Numairy of neighboring Sudan has openly aided the ELF rebels.

The Carter administration halted $6 million in military assistance to Ethiopia in February because of alleged violations of human rights. Under the late Emperor Haile Selassie, Ethiopia had been entirely dependent on the United States for its military equipment.

Meanwhile in Washington, the State Department protested the short period the Ethiopian government is allowing for closing the facilities. But U.S. spokesmen said that the United States had been planning to phase out the obsolete Kagnew station and to cut the military mission in half.

There also has been persistent speculation in Addis Aaba that the 30-month-old military government was preparing to reduce the U.S. presence in Ethiopia as part of its move away from the West and toward Moscow.

Since Carter halted military aid to Ethiopia, it has reportedly taken delivery of 31 T34 tanks, 40 armored personnel carriers and six antiaircraft guns from the Soviet Union.

Observers in neighboring Kenya believed the weapons might be destined for use against the ELF. Eritrea, on the Red Sea, is Ethiopia's only outlet to the sea and Mengistu has repeatedly said the government will never let it secede.

Eritrea, a former Italian colony, was federated with the Addis Ababa government in 1952 and integrated into Ethiopia in 1962.

The military regime is also struggling against guerrillas of the rightist Ethiopian Democratic Union EDU and scattered armed resistance in at least seven of the nation's 14 provinces.

Gun battles between opponents and supporters of the government are a regular occurence in Addis Ababa and other Ethiopian towns.

The leftist military officers came to power in a gradual takeover that began in February 1974. Emperor Haile Selassie was deposed on Sept. 12, 1974 and in November of that year 60 political prisoners were executed.

Pakistan government jails 48 opposing politicians

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan [AP] — The government jailed 48 leading opposition politicians yesterday in a counteroffensive against a six-week old campaign of street protests against Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto.

Most leaders of the opposition coalition, the Pakistan National Alliance PNA, are already in jail, and the new wave of arrests included acting PNA chief Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan and other second-echelon leaders in major cities.

The PNA promptly announced that Pir Pagaro, a bearded political leader from southern Sind province, had been named its new acting head.

It also called for a march on the National Assembly next Saturday in this capital city to press its demands for Bhutto's ouster and the resignation of other office-holders. The march initially was set for Tuesday, the day the assembly opens a 15-day session.

The PNA is boycotting the assembly, charging that Bhutto's Pakistan People's party rigged the March 7 elections to gain a two-thirds majority in the assembly.

No major violence was reported Sunday.

Almost 200 persons have been killed in clashes between rival political groups and security forces since the elections.

Opposition sources said Nasrullah Khan was planning to meet with army generals in Islamabad as the head of a three-man PNA delegation when he was arrested. The army has intervened in some past Pakistani political crises, and the PNA has asked the military not to follow Bhutto's orders.

Others arrested included Jan Mohammed Abbasi, Syed Mohammed Zafar, Wazir Ali, Ihsan Elahi Zaheer and Begum Nasim Wali Khan, a woman PNA leader.

In Lahore, an elder opposition leader, Maulana Abul Aala Maudoodi, charged that the martial law imposedon Karachi, Lahore and Hyderabad Friday was "unconstitutional and illegal."

"It is quite evident that at least 95 per cent of the population is against Mr. Bhutto and his unrepresentative government," said Maudoodi, one of the few opposition leaders not in jail. "This also means the national army is being used against the nation to keep an unpopular government in power."

He said antigovernment demonstrations must continue, even under the martial law.

In the twin cities of Rawalpindi and Islamabad, the PNA mounted a procession to protest the killing of one of its supporters by PPP men on Friday.

Fuel deposit could pose policy problems

NEW DELHI, India [AP] — One of Asia's largest atomic electric plants is running low on uranium fuel, and the problem of resupplying it is the first major test of relations between the new governments in both India and the United States.

Talks are expected in the next few days in Washington on at least a stopgap supply of American enriched uranium for the U.S.-built Tarapur complex in south India, which provides power for much of the Bombay region.

"It is very urgent ... a matter of weeks" before Tarapur might have to be put on reduced load, said an authoritative Indian official. "The complex is already using scrap fuel."

The Tarapur issue is building up just as both new governments have shown a desire to improve the often sour relations that developed between former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and the Nixon and Ford administrations in Washington.

Aside from Tarapur, prospects are bright for U.S.-Indian relations.

Indian officials have welcomed President Carter's statement advocating an Indian Ocean free of nuclear weapons and they applauded his decision to send his mother, Lillian, as his representative to the funeral in February of Indian President Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed.

Officials in Washington have acclaimed as a return to democracy the Indian parliamentary elections in March that swept Mrs. Gandhi from power after 21 months of authoritarian rule. The new government is headed by Prime Minister Morarji Desai, a critic of Moscow-style Communism and of special relations with the Soviet Union.

But the Tarapur issue also comes in the wake of Carter's announcement of a new U.S. nuclear policy stepping up efforts to halt the spread of nuclear materials and technology that could be used to make weapons.

"If we felt that ... atomic fuel was being delivered to a nation that did not share with us our commitment to nonproliferation, we would not supply that fuel," the President said in his April 7 nuclear policy statement.

The problem is that India has rejected the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, saying it is discriminatory in favor of the nuclear powers, and in 1974 it exploded a nuclear device.

The Gandhi government declared it would not make nuclear bombs and insisted that the 1974 blast was for peaceful purposes, but the explosion was seen in the west as a sign that India was prepared to make nuclear weapons whenever it felt a need for them.

India points out that when the United States loaned it $75 million to buy the Tarapur works it signed a contract to supply enriched uranium, which the reactors use at the rate of 170 pounds a day. But the original agreement was signed 11 years before India exploded its nuclear device.

SHIPROCK, N.M. — Claudeen and Harris Arthur are concerned about corporate takeover of their Navajo land. "The key to Navajo self-determination," Harris says, "is control of our water. Water for farming, for energy development, for life." If the Arthurs have one immediate goal, it is to gain tribal control over what is now a giant corporate enterprise farming 10,000 acres of government-irrigated Navajo land. (PNS)

Navajos are concerned over 'energy wealth'

SHIPROCK, N.M., [PNS] — Two untraditional Navajo leaders named Harris and Claudeen Arthur are locked in a traditional battle here against an imposing array of energy corporations and federal bureaucracies cool to Indian aspirations.

At stake is control over the development of a vast store of mineral wealth buried beneath the country's largest Indian reservation — 100 million barrels of oil, 25 million cubic feet of natural gas, billions of tons of coal and unmeasured uranium deposits.

Also at stake is the promise of instant wealth — cast in hand — promised by outside developers to a people who, with average annual incomes of $900 and unemployment ranging from 45 to 60 per cent, represent one of the most economically depressed minorities in the nation.

But unlike more traditional Indian militants who see all development as further invasion and rape of Indian lands, the Arthurs hope to control — not block — the development process.

The key is self-determination: They want to harness the benefits of modernization for the Navajo nation itself.

"We know the question is no longer development versus no development, but who's going to make the decision on how our land is exploited and how we live," Harris Arthur explains.

The answer for them, and for a growing number of young, educated Navajo, is to stall the exploitation of Navajo resources — foregoing the resulting cash in hand — until the tribe develops enough political muscle and economic savvy to control the development process.

Their principal political tool is the Shiprock Research Center, founded three years ago, which now monitors all outside developers and pushes for alternative economic schemes to spread the benefits of development more widely.

Now in their mid-30s, the Arthurs first met when they were second graders in a Farmington, N.M. mission school. They went through high school, several colleges and numerous crises together.

Claudeen, today the tribe's first woman lawyer, is cool and precise. Her husband Harris, an agricultural engineer-economist, is more mercurial and passionate as he pinpoints the effects of years of unregulated corporate exploitation and government-sponsored development projects.

Ticking them off with his fingers, he begins with a description of Shiprock, their hometown, which lies downwind from an abandoned uranium mine and mill that still emits dust particles.

He tells of the stripmining leases through which the tribe lost control over already depleted energy reserves and saw their scarce water siphoned away from potential food production.

He describes the federal government's Navaio Irrigation Project. Decades in the making, the project has reduced rather than secured the tribe's rights to San Juan River water and turned farming of irrigated reservation land into an agribusiness venture.

And he points to the crumbling remains of several nearby Indian cliff-dwelling societies — mute reminders, he says, of what fate holds for communities that consume their resources as fast as their technology allows.

The only countervailing force in sight, according to the Arthurs, is a growing coalition of younger people like themselves and older traditional Indians, many of whom don't want any development — controlled or otherwise.

The obstacles to welding these diverse elements into a "new breed" — equipped with the technical knowledge, legal skills and political power to lead the tribe to self-determination — are awesome.

Beyond the simple economics of poverty is the geographic scattering of tribal members. The nation's largest tribe, the 125,000 Navajo are spread across 16 million acres of reservation land.

Straddling the four corners where Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico and Utah meet, the reservation itself is held together by a tribal council of 74 members. With an average fifth grade educational level, they are elected from 102 grossly misapportioned districts whose populations range from 300 to 7,000.

With this unrepresented government structure and a perennially tight tribal cash flow, the Navajo have found if difficult to resist the enticement of the promoters — even when the Arthurs and their allies are there to illuminate alternative options.

Last August, for example, while Harris Arthur was meeting with Jimmy Carter in Plains, Ga., as a member of the then - candidate's energy task force, tribal chairman Peter McDonald pushed through the renewal of a 20-year stripmining lease with El Paso Natural Gas and Consolidated Coal.

The 49-11 vote to approve the lease came after three dreary days of contract reading and a truncated debate over the merits of the old lease versus the proposed new lease. During the recesses of the three-day meeting, Claudeen had in vain passed the word that there was a third option: no lease at all until more favorable terms could be negotiated.

A total of 107,000 acres — the equivalent of a one-mile strip of land nearly 170 miles long — are being stripmined under a variety of lease agreements. Tribal officials like McDonald argue the leases — worth $5.6 million advance royalty plus $5 million per year — are a necessity to support the tribe's education and employment programs.

NOW task force claim discrimination exists in church

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Roman Catholic Church needs to "purge itself of sexism and related forms of idolatry" and ordain women and married men to the priesthood, a task force of the National Organization for Women said yesterday.

In a mock pastoral letter, following the form of pronouncements made by bishops to the faithful, the NOW task force on women and religion said,

"Maternally, we admonish you to develop a self-critical ability with which to combat the blind idolatry of self which has resulted in sexism, racism and classism within the church, and has contributed to those great evils in society at large."

The task force singled out the Detroit Call to Action Conference of the U.S. bishops as having "delivered a prophetic message to the church" for its call that they petition the Vatican to rule that marriage or sex is not a barrier to the priesthood.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Strikers return to work

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — The 1,200 workers at Milton Bradley Co., the world's largest manufacturer of games, return to work today after a three-week strike.

Members of Local 224 of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Workers Union voted 529-129 Saturday in favor of the company's third offer. The strike was called April 3 when the last contract expired.

It was the first strike at Milton Bradley's East Longmeadow plant since 1941.

Man, child die in fire

WINOOSKI, Vt. [AP] — An early morning fire killed a man and a child yesterday morning in Winooski.

Authorities said Julius Parker, 24, and Albert Viens died as a result of injuries received in the blaze. The child's mother — Catherine Viens was described in critical condition at the Vermont Medical Center hospital in Burlington.

Fire officials said the fire swept through a two-family home. One of the apartments was not occupied. Winooski police say that the fire was reported at two a.m.

Unusual runaway causes problem

STAVANGER, Norway [AP] — American experts will try today to cap a runaway oil well that has been spewing millions of gallons of crude oil into the North Sea.

Authorities said the 12-mile-long slick flowing from the off-shore oil rig was expected to remain far from the coast for the next two days, giving anti-pollution vellels time to clean up much of the oil before it reaches Danish and Norwegian beaches.

"I am more optimistic about avoiding a major pollution of coastal areas," said Norway's environmental affairs minister, Gro Harlem Bruntland, after flying over the slick yesterday.

G.W. Carver honored

TUSKEGEE, Ala. [UPI] — Black scientist George Washington Carver, who discovered more than 300 uses for the peanut, has been inducted into the Hall of Fame for Great Americans.

Carver became the second black to receive the honor. A bronze bust of the scientist was unveiled during ceremonies Saturday at Tuskegee Institute, where he taught from 1896 to 1943. The statue will be transported later to the Hall of Fame colonnade at Bronx Community College in New York.

Workers may be re-hired

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — U.S. Rep. William Cotter, D-Conn., said yesterday United Technologies Inc. should hire back the 500 aircraft workers it laid off last November.

Cotter said a resurgence in aircraft sales dictates that Pratt & Whitney, a division of United Technologies, rehire the laid off employes.

In a letter to board chairman Harry Gray, Cotter said he had heard that United Technologies plans to expand its Pratt & Whitney workforce.

N.H. has budget surplus

MANCHESTER, N.H. [AP] — Gov. Meldrim Thomson says the state will meet its expenses and still have more than $4 million left at the end of the next two fiscal years.

Thomson was quoted by the New Hampshire Sunday News as saying that he is confident the state will have a surplus at the end of the 1979 fiscal year.

He put the surplus figure at better than $4.5 million if the legislature goes along with his austerity budget recommendations.

High health care costs displease interns, doctors

CINCINNATI [UPI] — More than 12,000 members of the Physicians National Housestaff Association, a national group of medical interns, demanded an end to spiraling health costs at an annual convention this weekend.

PNHA President Dan Asimus of Cincinatti said hospital costs have skyrocketed the last few years because of waste, mismangement and an emphasis on profits rather than patients. Asimus, whose term will end this June, was recently appointed to President Carter's Advisory Committee on National Health Insurance issues, which, he said, will give interns and residents "an opportunity to participate in the planning of policies which will dramatically affect our lives and the welfare of our patients."

PNHA President-elect Jay Dobkin of New York said, "Any solution to this complicated problem must involve the unique perspective of interns and residents who deliver approximately 80 per cent of the direct patient care in the nation's teaching hospitals."

The president-elect of the American Medical Association said price ceilings on health care will not solve the problem of rising medical costs.

"It will cost patients services in the long run," said Dr. John Budd of Cleveland, Ohio. "A ceiling on health care costs will affect the recipients, rather than the providers of the service," Budd said.

The president-elect said the AMA is opposed to stabilizing the cost of medical care by imposing a ceiling on hospital costs.

President Carter is expected to propose such a ceiling today when he reveals his health care proposals to Congress.

"By oppose, I don't mean flatly reject," said Budd, who addressed the Arkansas Medical Society. "We may be able to negotiate something acceptable."

Budd said National Health Insurance would not solve the problem of rising medical costs, either.

There are places where costs can be cut, Budd said, and the AMA is trying to identify those areas. One area, he said, was in not "over using services not pertinent." By that, he said he meant doctors should not order a brain scan everytime a patient complained of a headache, or ulcer tests for every instance of indigestion.

One suggestion he made was that doctors receive copies of their patients hospital bills.

"It might really startle a doctor to see some of the hospital bills their patients have," Budd said.

The factory

By JIM MCCALLUM

In the beginning there was a factory, a small agricultural factory, but a factory nonetheless. This was a very beautiful factory nestled in a small valley in the mountains to the west. Workers produced agricultural products which did very well in the market in those days. The factory was small and specialized — low overhead, effective management and no unions. Yes, there are many today who debate as to whether or not this was even a factory. But no matter, for that was the gentle and leisured past, not today's instantaneous present or tomorrow's fatalistic future.

Over the years, the factory has changed and evolved into the giant conglomerate it is today. It is not the tiny, specialized factory it once was. Today it is very diversified. It now produces many different brands of products for the consumer unlike the olden days when only agricultural products were manufactured.

Because of these changes, new buildings were constructed in order to keep up with production and consumer demand. For years, it always seemed that contruction was going on at the factory. Management decided that the factory should be magnificent, gigantic, colossal, profuse. Something which the common person would look upon with awe and wonderment. It should reflect the important "going's on" inside the walls. Hence, each building constructed should be unique unto itself, not resembling any other building in form, design or structure.

Many famous architects were called in to create this "Disneyesque-like" Babylon. Management was delighted in the low cost but seemingly brilliant ideas they came up with. There was the fellow who designed and built the warehouse which resembled an monstrous waffle. It was a magnificent piece of pop art sculpture. Newcomers to the valley would mistake the factory for the old 1964 World's Fair and when they gazed upon this building would say, "Oh look, that must be the Russian exhibit!" The architect had designed it so it would appear as if the workers and products would be walking into the top of a giant toaster with a waffle popping out of it. "How comical!", he thought, but that is what management wanted.

Then there was the fellow who it was rumored had a problem with his sexual potency and wanted to build this giant phallic symbol. Mind you, this is only a rumor. He secretly wanted to build the world's tallest reference warehouse located in a factory. After consulting the Guinness Book of World Records, he erected that giant reference warehouse and today, it stands for all to marvel at and mumble to some nearby disconcerted surveyor, "Did you know, that there is the world's tallest reference warehouse?" He was a pathetic architect though and bricks have been falling off that building ever since it was constructed. It go so bad that factory maintenance personnel had to construct a fence around it to keep workers, management, and products from being bombarded as they passed underneath.

The architect who designed the building which eventually housed management was specifically told to build a ramp at an elevated angle from the roadway to the building so that workers and products would have to walk "up" to the building in order to enter. Management wanted the workers and products to know who was the boss, who was running the show and making all the important decisions concerning the welfare of the factory.

Presently, this factory has 26,000 products on the assembly line with a projected annual output of 5,000. Estimates vary because of products which are put into storage for awhile (suspended, interned, time off, etc.) or ones which are cast aside because of deficiencies accrued along the assembly line (dismissed, dropped out, etc.). All products are not created equal though. Management and workers have devised a plan whereby each product is given a numerical code from 0.00 to 4.00 based upon the product's withstanding the various tests which take place along the assembly line.

At the end of the assembly line when a product is ready for sale and distribution, these cumulated numerical codes are put into the factory's computer — OSCAR and out comes the "CUMULATIVE QUALITY POINT AVERAGE". This, according to management is the best method available of quantifying and determining a product's worth on the market. Products are unceasingly concerned with this number. They strut about the factory grounds asking other products, "What's your Cum?" All this is rather silly though, for nowadays consumers are only concerned as to whether or not the product has gone through the factory and received his or her factory certificate. The "Cum" is only important to those products who wish to go on to higher, more specialized factories for further conditioning and assembly line work.

Nowadays, things don't appear too promising for the factory. Beset by financial problems and budget cutbacks, management has had a difficult time lately. The national union has moved in and now the assembly line workers are fast becoming the "Rank and File", forming their own local, eagerly ready to commence collective bargaining. Management wasn't surprised; after all, it eventually happens to every growing conglomerate nowadays. Consumer demand is down for the products and the fact that a product has gone through the factory isn't as important as it used to be. Yes, it seems like every product on the market now has a certificate from some factory somewhere. Someone has even coined the phrase, "Everyone has a factory certificate nowadays!" Consumers will even have the audacity to tell products bluntly in job interviews, "I'm sorry, but I can't purchase you because you're overqualified with your factory certificate."

What then is to be the future of the factory? Will it go the way of Pullman Co., National Wool Inc., and Penn Central down into the graveyard of extinct corporations? Will it adjust, evolve, and change as consumer and product demands and needs change? Or will it remain primitive, crude, stagnant, pernicious, intellectually digressive, and an institution whose primary stimulus for learning is motivation through fear and not interest? No doubt it will continue.

Begin with the individual

By DREW CRANE

One of the most obvious examples of the trend toward socialism in this country today is the Third World solidarity movement. The commentary and news articles of the Black News Service and Nummo News are explicit examples of collectivist propagandizing. These authors are so blatently racist that I am surprised no one has previously exposed them. Perhaps this is a indication of the small size of their audience or the fact that their methods intimidate objectors.

Attacking white racism with black racism only intensifies the problem. The solution is to begin with the individual. All human beings are individuals by nature. There is no such thing as a collective (or racial) mind or achievement. A culture is not the product of some nebulous collective "society" but the sum of the intellectual achievements of individuals. Every race has its geniuses and morons, the number of which is irrelevant to the condition of any one member of that race. The individual must be judged by the content of his mind — not the color of his skin.

But collectivism obliterates the concept of the individual. Everyone is a brother and sister and the ruling "parent" is whichever gang is more powerful at that moment. The members of a collectivist society are suffering from a lack of self-esteem. This magnified inferiority complex leads to inner group associations — the most natural being by physical characteristics of color, sex, etc....

The Black News Service authors presume to speak for the entire Third World community in their advocacy of a socialist system. They exaggerate the economic exploitation by the capitalist systems as justification for this solidarity movement. They and almost everyone else have failed to identify and correct the flaws in our system.

The only rational solution is the recognition of the philosophy of individualism and its politico — economic corollary, laissez — faire capitalism. It is not a person's ancestors or relatives or genes that count in a free market, but only one human attribute: productive ability. Under laissez — faire capitalism the individual's ability and ambition are judged and rewarded accordingly. The United States is the only country to ever have briefly come close to this achievement; and to that extent it became the freest in history.

It is the moral obligation of every individual to repudiate the socialist doctrines of the Black News Service and any other group which attempts to negate the concept of individualism. Only then will the problem of racism begin to evaporate.

Toward united student opposition

To the Editor:

Last Tuesday night a number of departmental councils met and took the initial steps toward consolidating united student opposition to Provost Puryear's Five-Year Plan and level funding. We resolved that:

1 — Provost Puryear has ignored university governance regulations which require seeking the advice of the university community on academic policy matters. [Contrary to other claims, there is no question that departmental funding reallocation is an academic matter.] We view this as an infringement upon our rights.

2 — Furthermore, these regulations are clearly inadequate, as they provide for only token input and leave the administration free to arbitrarily disregard it.

3 — Student divisiveness on the basis of apparent departmental gains and losses should be avoided at all costs. We remind those who are silently awaiting Provost Puryear's possible favor that they are leaving their futures to the whims of the administration and the vicissitudes of the business cycle. We affirm our solidarity with all those departments on the verge of cuts and elimination and strongly encourage all members of the university community to do likewise.

Lastly, we condemn the concept of level funding, and exhort students, faculty, and workers to join in the rally being held on Tuesday in front of the Student Union at noon.

Nuke news

It shouldn't be long before the nuclear energy controversy makes national headlines once again. For months now nuke opponents from around New England and even farther away have been planning the third peaceful occupation of the Seabrook, N.H., nuclear plant construction site.

President Carter's recently-proposed energy plan puts the Seabrook issue in an interesting light. Carter has stated his support for the growth of nuclear power in the U.S., although has has wisely curtailed indefinitely any further development of the fast breeder reactor, a nuclear reactor which can produce more radioactive plutonium fuel (the stuff of which A-bombs are made) than it consumes.

Nonetheless, Carter's endorsement of nuclear power, is an unenthusiastic one, leaves the anti-nuke movement with a continued challenge to halt the spread of these menaces.

And menaces they are. No, a nuke cannot explode and bring Hiroshima to New Hampshire. But it can melt down if its cooling systems fail, releasing radiation into water supplies or he surrounding air. Nukes are also vulnerable to terrorist attacks, which seem more prevalent each day.

Perhaps the soundest argument against nuclear power, however, is that we really have no idea what to do with nuclear wastes, the highly dangerous by-products of nukes that remain dangerous for thousands of years. Economist E.F. Schumacher, in his book Small is Beautiful, poses nuclear power as the prime example of modern technological insanity — we assume that technology will come up with an answer to the unsolved dilemma and then let future generations bear the responsibility of finding it. Ultimately, future generations will bear the agony of our assumptions, as well.

While supporters of nuclear power repeatedly point to its accident record as evidence of its safety, they quickly change their tune with it is suggested that nukes be insured for full liability in case the "unlikely" should happen. Presently, a federal law called the Price-Anderson Act limits nuclear accident liability to $560 million, for which a maximum of only $95 million is the power company itself liable. (you and I pay the rest in taxes.)

The Price-Anderson Act became law in 1957, and as of 1965 the Atomic Energy Commission estimated that damages resulting from a nuclear accident might reach more than $17 billion — and of course that estimate would be even higher today. Yet in 1975 Congress voted to extend the original bill, unamended, to 1987.

A recent federal court decision in North Carolina found the act unconstitutional, and the power company affected is appealing directly to the Supreme Court. Should the ruling stand, power companies may finally become fully responsible for nuclear accidents. But if nukes were truly as safe as they are claimed to be, insurance costs wouldn't be so astronomical, — competition for diminishing profits would surely induce the insurers to take on the "minor" risk. Perhaps, though, the insurance companies don't view the risk as such a minor one after all.

Regardless of the outcome of the battle on that front, and in spite of a recent injunction that has temporarily halted most major construction at the site, protestors will gather at Seabrook on Saturday. That is, they say, unless construction is permanently canned, which seems unlikely.

At a time when the discussion of energy policy is at a peak and it is apparent that the country is destined to suffer a rocky energy road ahead, it may be difficult to actively oppose an energy source that could help alleviate the problem — the source that heralded in the "Nuclear Age". But oppose it we must...if not for ourselves, then at least for those much neglected "future generations".

Sexism and freedom of the press: Two views

Want a job? Be a sexist...

By BOB MELIA

As sexism is necessary to keep our economy healthy, it is the patriotic duty of every student who wants to graduate into a stable society and find a job to practice sexism.

Unfortunately, the most we males can do to discharge this duty is to degrade our women friends. However, the male-dominated Collegian Board of Editors can do much more. It can help shape the consciousness of 20,000 students by continuing its policy of accepting and prominently displaying sexist advertisements.

That sexism is essential to maintaining the economic status-quo is easily seen. Economist John Kenneth Galbraith tells us that the health of our economy is keyed to a constant increase in consumption. But, associated with the consumption of goods are the menial tasks of maintaining, cleaning, servicing, storing, transporting, repairing and preparing the goods to be consumed. Few people would consume as much as they do if they had to do all these chores themselves.

So to keep consumption increasing and our economy strong, some people must be made to do all the menial tasks associated with consumption. A century ago, these jobs were done by personal servants, but as everyone who has tried knows, you just can't hire good personal servants anymore.

But although you can't hire them, you can marry them. Mr. Galbraith believes that the major "accomplishment" of our society's power-elite (meaning wealthy males) has been the creation of a "convenient social virtue (which) ascribes merit to any pattern of behavior, however uncomfortable or unnatural for the individual involved, that serves the comfort or well-being of, or is otherwise advantageous for, the more powerful members of the community... The ultimate success of the convenient social virtue has been in converting women to menial personal service."

But to force women to do the menial tasks that consumption requires, we must first degrade them, because how else could we justify exploiting women if we regarded them as our equals?

This is where sexism enters in. By depicting a women's role as that of amusing and entertaining men, we can believe them inferior, and believing them inferior we can justify forcing them to perform all the menial tasks that our consumer society requires be done.

Sexist advertisements obviously perpetuate sexism and reinforce Mr. Galbraiths convenient social virtue, and by printing such advertisements (notably from beer companies) the Collegian is acting in a socially irresponsible manner.

The Collegian has tried to justify its failure to censor blatently sesixt ads by saying that "Freedom of expression, be it spoken or written, has long been a keystone of political liberty in our society," but responsibility cannot be evaded so easily.

Without social and material equality, political liberty has little meaning because the provision of equal political rights to all in effect confers a major advantage on those who have the most resources to mobilize in defense of their interests.

As large corporations have far more resources than do students, the Collegian's suggestion that we combat these corporations by writing letters is ridiculous. To imply that a student's letter can effectively repair the damage that a corporation with millions of dollars worth of professionals can do is absurd. Yet this is precisely what the Collegian has implied.

The Collegian's Board of Editors has failed to realize, or has conveniently ignored, that by citing the First Amendment and providing corporations uninhibited access to student's consciousness, they are putting students at a severe disadvantage vis-a-vis those corporations.

For the sake of a few advertising dollars, the Collegian has abdicated its social responsibility and is contributing to a system that exploits the approximately 10,000 women on campus.

Such irresponsibility must stop.

Bob Melia is a Collegian Commentator.

The right to decide

By GEORGE SOMMERS

Every person on this campus has the right to denounce certain ads in the Collegian as sexist, the comic strips of Dick Janssen and others as offensive, or the films of Baroque Enterprises as oppressive to women. At the same time, though, these people should respect the right of the above mentioned individuals and organizations and others to express themselves in the manner they choose.

The self-righteous moralists who would have porno flicks banned from campus or would otherwise suppress some form of expression, fail to realize that they are being the ultimate "sexist oppressors" by taking away the right of every person, regardless of sex, to see what he-she wants to. There is still, after all, a First Amendment in this country. We are all capable of judging for ourselves what is good and what is evil. Besides, if someone's arbitrary judgement dictates what films are too oppressive for our tastes, eventually the censors will go after what they perceive to be excessive violence, poor taste, or whatever. The result will be a bland diet of G-rated movies which stifle the imagination and dull the wits of the viewers.

Those who would imitate the book-burning tactics of the Nazis would do better to channel their energies into some useful diversion. Certainly, there are plenty of problems at UMass in dire need of rectification. Anyone who attempts to cash a check on Thursday or Friday can expect to spend at least twenty minutes in line because of the closing of the Student Union cashier windows. This situation is a disgrace. Budget cuts are the number one issue on campus, affecting every single student. Activists would do well to fight against the declining quality of education in the state. State aid to education in Massachusetts has slipped from second in the nation to second to last, thanks to the Duke. The University's stock in companies involved in shady dealings in South Africa is another problem which should be looked into. More national concerns such as ecology, fighting of nukes, and women's rights are another good outlet for the politically active student.

Feminists are often at a loss to explain why so few people take them seriously. One national leader of the movement recently lamented the fact the the women can't "scare" the white male power structure as the blacks did in the sixties. The reason for this is obvious. The feminist movement is relatively new and divided into several opposing factions.

One issue of controversy is over sexist materials. One side wants to move in a positive direction establishing equal opportunities for women in jobs and other areas and leave the condemnation of movies to the Pope, (who incidentally should not have the right to dictate people's private lives, either.) Others see as their primary goal the restriction of the type of entertainment people choose to go to, the movies they watch and the materials they read. This tends to make some people look with somewhat of a leery eye at some of the aims of the women's movement. I personally support the Equal Rights amendment as well as the Fifth Amendment. The pro-censorship movement in the guise of a device against oppression of women is a dangerous thing and I hope feminist leaders latch on to this fact before they go too far.

George Sommers is a Collegian Commentator.

Dental care survey

The Health Services' Dental Division has completed a survey of patients who used the service during its first six months of operation — the fall and winter of 1975. They were asked to report on their experiences and reactions to the services.

The results of the survey were highly favorable. Ninety per cent of the patients reported that staff was courteous and concerned for patients' welfare and 80 per cent felt the quality of dental work done was high.

The clinic emphasizes education and preventive care throughout its program. Ninety-seven per cent of patients surveyed felt their treatment was well explained, and many students singled out the educational and preventive emphases as the most positive aspects of the clinic.

Problems registered were in the area of waiting, either for an appointment or at the office. — Over two-thirds of the people who responded felt this was the most problematic aspect of the clinic. Dr. Henry Lubin, director of the Dental Service, commented that "even before we compiled the results of the survey we had taken steps to relieve the waiting problems. We now have time set aside for patients with emergency problems; since emergencies are no longer squeezed in between appointments, there has been much less waiting all around. The staff is also making better use of referral to local dentists."

There were also concerns about the inability of the clinic to serve all students. Lubin explained that on one hand it is encouraging to see so many students attending to their dental needs, but the service was not designed to handle all the routine dental needs of all students on campus; it just is not big enough. For this reason there will always be some people who will have long visits to get an appointment, or who will have to be referred to a local dentist for treatment.

To see the complete survey results, stop by the Health Education Office at University Health Service.

Torture in Bangladesh

AMSTERDAM [PNS] — Despite recent U.S. State Department conclusion that there exists no evidence of government-condoned torture in Bangladesh, a different reality emerges inside a Dacca jail.

The State Department, in its highly publicized report on human rights violations in the 82 nations that receive American aid, acknowledged that "arbitrary" arrests for political activity occur in Bangladesh today.

But the document stated, "There is no evidence that the present regime encourages or condones torture, degrading treatment or killing." And State Department officials say U.S. foreign aid to Bangladesh — more than $1.08 billion since 1972 — will not be cut back, as it will be to Argentina, Uruguay and Ethiopia.

Yet during 10 months in a Bangladesh prison, this reporter saw prisoners unable to walk for weeks after interrogation, others in complete mental disorder.

I was lucky. As a foreign journalist, I escaped the more cruel forms of torture. But again and again I heard the horror stories from other prisoners, describing a process that begins with isolation and ends, for some, with death.

In the first stage, the isolation cell, prisoners are left blind-folded for weeks, sometimes months. Later, in interrogations, they are threatened, scolded and sometimes thrown back in their isolation cells nude.

Violence is also used, the method varying according to the specific police department involved. The "Special Branch" specializes in beatings. Guards in National Security Intelligence use sharp and piercing ropes on the most sensitive areas of a victim's body.

At some local police stations strings of jute are tied around a detainee's legs and set afire. At the Dacca Cantonment, headquarters of the ruling military, people are hanged with heavy stones tied around their genitals.

Other victims are made to stand for days looking at high-voltage bulbs, a method that ruins both eyes and nerves. Some are hung upside down from a spinning fan, others submerged in water for minutes at a time.

And according to victims, Bangladesh intelligence services are also familiar with traditional methods like piercing needles under one's fingernails or touching one's back with burning cigarettes.

According to prisoners with jail experience in the past, present torture practices are worse now than prior to Bangladesh's independence from Pakistan, in 1971. They say that while authorities under Pakistani rule took into consideration the victim's physical capacity for suffering, today prisoners are sometimes tortured to death.

The present government, led by Maj. Gen. Ziaur Rahman, came to power in November 1975 in a rank-and-file army revolt. It immediately established martial law and turned upon the left-wing National Socialist Party (JSD), which has been instrumental in the revolt and claimed the allegiance of 70 per cent of the army's 50,000 enlisted men.

The JSD's most powerful military man, Lt. Col. Abu Taher, was arrested, secretly tried and hanged. And hundreds, if not thousands, of the party's members were rounded up and jailed.

In its 1975-76 annual report, the respected human rights organization Amnesty International estimated there were 62,000 political prisoners in Bangladesh.

Today the military regime's iron hand extends to all parties. In November, Maj. Gen. Rahman canceled parliamentary elections scheduled for February and arrested all major politicians, along with thousands of their followers.

Under martial law, demonstrations and strikes are illegal, the national press is heavily censored and freedom of speech is drastically limited. Criticism of the martial law policies is punishable with up to 10 years in prison.

Concern needed for rights of all

To the Editor:

Certain groups at UMass have urged that the University divest itself of all its stocks in companies involved in South Africa, calling this an action in human rights. Indeed, we hear often of the artocities of South Africa and every political aware undergraduate should be able without hesitation, to name at least four other countries wherein human rights are flagrantly violated — does Rhodesia, Korea, Chile and the Phillipines sound right? [truly, a person of more delicate sensitivities would have to mention violations of human rights in this country.]

But is it true that the primary human rights violators of this world happen to be right-wing givernments? Solzhenitsyn estimates that 66,000,000 people have been killed in the U.S.S.R. since 1917 [no Stalin apologies, please]. Even if he's off by an order of magnitude this result is comparable to that of the Nazis. Do these killings elicit as much rage from our community as does the killing of 78 people in Soweto? Do we respond to political repression of the Chinese the way we do to the repression of blacks in Rhodesia [or do our racist attitudes toward the former and our racial guilt concerning the latter held provide completely different responses to what are both travesties of human rights?].

There are even small countries that deserve as much attention as is heaped on South Africa or Chile. In Asia, consider Vietnam and Cambodia where the continuing presence of "re-education centers" has not mitigated our attempts to "renormalize relations" and initiate trade. Africa abounds with violators: Uganda, Angola, Mazambique, Burundi [where, reportedly, 100,000 people were killed in one six week period last year] and Tanzania; the latter, in spite of having more political prisoners than Chile, is often called a "benevolent dictatorship."

Even as Fidel is touring Africa in search of countries ripe for "Scientific Socialism," ole George McGovern reports from Cuba that Raoul and the government he represents aren't that bad after all. Does it seem appropriate to embargo Rhodesian chrome and yet lift the Cuban embargo? Does it not seem incongruous that we wish to "curtail activities in South Africa" and yet not be at all upset over the sale of wheat, consumer goods, and computers to the U.S.S.R. [this last item, to be sold also to China, will assuredly be used for most angelical pursuits.]?

I do not mean to suggest that restraint of trade is necessarily the preferred response to violations or that the above-mentioned right-wing governments are not culpable, only that when a stance is taken in behalf of human rights that it be taken on behalf of the rights of all humans.

Among the topics to be presented are: creating the play community, facilitating participation, games design and selection, competition and cooperation, humanistic recreation, and community participation.

Summer Health Plan offered

University Health Services will again offer prepaid health services to students and their dependents who will be in the Amherst area during the summer. This includes students and their dependents from the Five College area.

The same comprehensive package of services will be offered as during the academic year. This includes unlimited physician and nurse practitioner consultation, as well as specialty consultation in the areas of pediatrics, general surgery, orthopedics, opthalmology, allergy, obstetrics and gynecology. Also included are complete laboratory, physical therapy, X-ray and EKG services, and allergy shots and immunizations (except cost of serum).

Most medications prescribed by plan physicians are available with a 50 cent co-payment. Inpatient care at the University Health Center is provided, as is 24-hour emergency coverage. Eye care examinations by an optometrist are available with a $10 co-payment.

Mental Health services include 24-hour crisis intervention, individual counselling and psychotherapy, couples, group and family counselling and inpatient psychiatric care at the University Health Center.

The prepaid package of services covers the period from May 24 through August 30. The enrollment deadline for coverage for the entire summer is June 15. The fee is $35 for students and an additional $35 for their dependents. Students who are enrolled in the summer session and pay a health fee as part of their service fees can pay an additional amount to obtain coverage for the entire summer period. Care will also be available on a fee-for-service basis.

Those enrolled in the Summer Health Plan will be issued an identification card that must be used for each visit to the Health Center. This identification will indicate the dates for which the student-dependent is eligible for prepaid services. Questions regarding the Summer Health Plan can be answered by the University Health Services business office, 549-2671, ext. 170.

Topics will include handling minor emergencies (stings, cuts, fainting, and so on) effectively, making sound judgments about when to call or visit a medical practitioner, and maintaining health by promoting preventive behaviors.

Wind Ensemble and choir performance

The UMass Wind Ensemble and Brass Choir, under the direction of Walter M. Chesnut, will combine talents for the first time in a diversified night of classical music tonight at 8:00 in the Concert Hall of the Fine Arts Center. The public is invited free of charge.

"Italian in Algiers" by G. Rossini, arranged for wind, will open up the evening's performance and will be followed by "Jupiter" from Gustav Holst's "The Planets", a popular piece among college students. The next composition, "Armenian Dance" by Alfred Reed, is a traditional folk and Dance song arranged for winds. Closing the first — "To Saint Cecilia" composed by Norman Dello Joio — a piece arranged for mixed voices and ten brass instruments. Conducted by Professor Abercrombie, this arrangement will use both the Brass Choir and the University Chorus.

The second half of the program will open with "Symphony for Brass and Percussion, opus 16" by Gunther Schuller who is Head of the New England Conservatory of Music. This challenging composition explores all brass sounds with muted and open tones.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Monday, April 25 — Born today, you are inclined to make too many unnecessary demands upon yourself in the interest of proving yourself. Generally speaking, you refuse to accept defeat -- which is not a bad thing when it encourages you to find alternatives and thus to inhibit setbacks. On the other hand, the refusal to accept defeat may see you wasting a tremendous amount of time, talent and energy on lost causes. You would do well to make a study of the situation when you get your first hint of approaching failure; when you cannot immediately bring a halt to circumstances creating the failure, you must make every effort to accept the fact, drop the project or endeavor and move on from there. Otherwise, only disappointment can result.

You get along well with people and should have little difficulty working in harness with any intent upon the same goals you are. What you cannot abide, however, is to be forced to cooperate with one whose interests and aims differ from yours, for you refuse to alter your position and, thus, your own aims. Ironically, you refuse just as intently to allow your co-worker to alter his own position and goals. The fairness of your character is realized through such frustration, of course -- but so is the stubbornness of your nature.

Yours promises to be a somewhat hazardous life. There will be both physical and mental obstacles for you to overcome if you are to gain the success your talents appear to promise.

Red Sox shutout Toronto

TORONTO [UPI] — Ferguson Jenkins fired a three-hitter while George Scott and Dwight Evans hit homers yesterday to lead the Boston Red Sox to a 9-0 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

The Red Sox scored the only runs Jenkins needed in the first inning when an error by Jays' catcher Alan Ashby allowed Rick Burleson to score and Denny Doyle also scored on a single by Carl Yastrzemski.

Jenkins and Toronto's Bill Singer then dueled through five scoreless innings until the Red Sox scored four runs in the seventh, the first on Scott's homer. Singer was replaced by Jerry Johnson after giving up three hits and allowing a double steal on a bad throw to first trying to catch Butch Hobson.

SEVEN THINGS NOT TO DO THIS SUMMER.

Summer can be fun if you know a few common things to avoid doing.

1. Do not swim at any beach where they have loudspeakers playing the soundtrack from "Jaws."
2. Do not, under any circumstances, try to pick up a cow.
3. Do not answer any want ad for a summer job that sounds too good to be true — unless you enjoy selling steak knives.
4. Do not tell your parents that, after graduation, you have decided on an exciting career in motel management.
5. Do not accept a date from anyone wearing a green leisure suit and roller skates.
6. Do not, under any circumstances, attempt to feed your pet gerbil a boa constrictor.
7. Do not forget the one word for beer. As your Dean of Beer, I can think of nothing more important for you to remember.

So have fun, have Schlitz, and I'll see you next fall.

THERE'S JUST ONE WORD FOR BEER. SCHLITZ AND YOU KNOW IT.

Shue squanders bundle protesting playoff contest

BOSTON [UPI] — Philadelphia coach Gene Shue apparently squandered $500 yesterday in protesting a referee's call that is clearly stated in the National Basketball Association rules.

Under NBA procedure, Shue registered a protest at the conclusion of the Boston Celtics' 124-119 victory over the Philadelphia 76ers that evened their Eastern Conference semifinal series at two games apiece.

Shue felt referees Joe Crawford and Richard Jackson mistakenly had allowed the Celtics a full 10 seconds to bring the ball over the half court line, when they were entitled to only three seconds.

The play went this way: Boston's Jo Jo White took an inbounds pass from John Havlicek with 16 seconds remaining in the game. White was hounded by the Philadelphia defense and was forced to throw the ball off the knees of 76er George McGinnis. Philadelphia's Lloyd Free recovered the ball, but stepped out of bounds in the Boston backcourt, an infraction which gave Boston possession of the ball.

At this point, the Celtics were awarded 10 seconds to bring the ball up court, but Shue felt Boston had used up seven seconds on the previous inbounds play.

"I thought they should only have three seconds to bring the ball up, and that's why I filed the protest. But I was told by some people afterwards that I'm wrong," said Shue.

"First of all I'm going to review the rules and then we have 48 hours to file a protest. Announcing the protest over the public address system means that the protest is official and that it cost us $500. It's up to us to make any further moves."

Rule 4 Section VI-B of the NBA rules, states:

"A team must bring the ball across the center line within 10 seconds. If, however, the defensive player causes the ball to go out of bounds in the back court, the offensive team will still be allowed 10 seconds to bring the ball across the center line."

Boston coach Tom Heinsohn agreed with the officials' call, but disagreed with virtually every other decision from the two Eastern League referees, who are filling in for striking NBA officials.

"They (officials) almost didn't want us to win the ball game," Heinsohn said. "It was the most ludicrous (officiating) in any situation. I've never seen any man as biased (as Jackson). We should have won by 30 points.

Celtics nip 76'ers to tie series, 2-2

BOSTON [UPI] — Dave Cowens scored a personal playoff career high of 37 points and the Boston Celtics endured a late Philadelphia flurry yesterday to grab a 124-119 victory that squared their NBA Eastern Conference semifinal series at 2-2.

Philadelphia coach Gene Shue protested the game at the conclusion of the contest, but said minutes later in the locker room that he would have to check a rule book before lodging the protest formally. He questioned whether the Celtics should have a full 10 seconds to bring the ball up court after a controversial out-of-bounds play with nine seconds remaining in the game.

The two clubs play again Wednesday night in Philadelphia.

Cowens, who got 21 rebounds, hit all 10 of his field goal attempts and scored 23 points in the first half, pulled the game out in the final minute after the 76ers had crept to within one point at 116-115 with two minutes to play.

Fred Saunders scored on a short hook shot with 1:33 to play, and Jo Jo White got a layup 15 seconds later to put Boston back ahead by five. But Lloyd Free, who got 10 of his 14 points in the final period, hit a long outside shot with 55 seconds to play to narrow the gap to 120-117.

On the next play, Cowens took a pass from White under the basket for an easy layup that seemed to seal the game with 40 seconds left. But Doug Collins, the 76ers' leading scorer with 36 points, hit a basket and Free apparently stole the ensuing inbounds pass and scored to bring the margin back to one point with nine seconds remaining.

However, referees Joe Crawford and Richard Jackson — two Eastern League officials working in place of striking NBA referees — disallowed the basket and gave the ball back to Boston.

Cowens was mauled by several Philadelphia players with three seconds remaining and hit both freethrows to provide the final points of the game.

Cowens, who took a two month vacation early in the season, propelled Boston to a 37-30 lead after one period by scoring 15 points. He added eight more points in the second period and finished the half with 13 rebounds — 12 off the defensive board.

George McGinnis, who finished with 27 points, and Collins, who netted 36, kept the 76ers in the game with 14 points apiece in the first half.

Boston, with Cowens cooling down and hitting only three of eight shots in the third period, maintained its 14 point edge to take a 94-80 lead into the final 12 minutes.

White added 24 points to the Celtics while Sidney Wicks added 18 points and Charlie Scott 14 points for Boston before both fouled out in the final quarter.

Julius Erving contributed 23 points.

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Both the UMass varsity and junior varsity crew teams placed second in their matches against UPenn and Syracuse, some of the toughest competition they will meet this season, in the best races they have rowed in their short history.

In both races held on Lake Onondoga in Syracuse, N.Y., UPenn placed first with UMass claiming a close second place and Syracuse last. The UMass crew was undoubtedly a surprise to UPenn and particularly to the Syracuse crew in a race where UMass had been billed "the underdogs".

In the varsity race, UMass with a 5:36.4 time came four and a half seconds behind a top-notch UPenn, which ran a 5:32 race and Syracuse with a 5:39 came in last two and a half seconds behind UMass.

In the junior varsity race, UPenn finished first with a 5:36.9 time; UMass ten seconds behind with a 5:49.2 time; and Syracuse in last with a 5:57.6 time.

UPenn moved to a lead shortly after an even start in the varsity meet which it held onto until the end of the 1500 race. The UPenn lead was too strong for UMass and Syracuse to knock, but not fast enough to be a 'runaway' for UPenn.

Syracuse moved ahead of UMass early in the race, but UMass gained on it at the 500 meter line and kept its edge in the race until the end finishing with Syracuse two and a half seconds behind. Toward the end, UMass made a move to catch up to the UPenn lead which resulted in a good finish for UMass, ending only four and a half seconds behind the well-reputed UPenn crew.

Doug Frost, coach of the UMass oarswomen, said yesterday that this was "by far the finest" his varsity boat has performed in this first season. The UMass crew was begun only last fall and is in its first season this spring. The Syracuse squad received varsity status at its school this year and the UPenn oarswomen have long been recognized as a varsity competitive sport by their athletic department.

In the junior varsity race, UPenn jumped the start with a strong sprint and kept a strong lead to the end. UMass and Syracuse held even until the 700 meter line where UMass, rowing smoother than Syracuse, pulled ahead, finishing 10 seconds behind UPenn and almost 10 seconds ahead of Syracuse.

Frost said again the UMass performance was excellent, the finest so far this season and said he "couldn't have asked for more from them at this time in the season."

In two weeks UMass will row in the Eastern Invitational meet at Worcester where it will again meet UPenn and some other top-notch competition.

"This will give us a second chance to beat UPenn and show everyone else what we have," said Faye Blumenthal, coxswain of the varsity boat.

There is a tentative race this Wednesday against Smith to be held on the Connecticut River.

Bullets brush off Rockets, 93-90

LANDOVER, Md. [UPI] — Young Mitch Kupchak sank two game deciding free throws with 18 seconds left to climax a 23-point performance yesterday and lift the Washington Bullets to a 93-90 NBA playoff win over the Houston Rockets.

The victory giving the Bullets a 2-1 edge in the best of seven series was nailed by Kupchak after being fouled by Moses Malone with Washington trailing 89-88. The North Carolina first year player promptly tossed in both foul shots.

Phil Chenier added a final pair of free throws when Houston's Mike Newlin was called for charging with 11 seconds remaining.

Chenier wound up with 19 points and Elvin Hayes with 14 for the Bullets while Malone and John Lucas were high for the Rockets with 18 each.

Kupchak starred even though he saw no action in the first quarter and played most of the final period with five fouls against him.

The Bullets trailed 74-71 going into the final period and the Rockets at one point led by five, but Washington pulled ahead on a pair of baskets by Kupchak. Then, with only a minute and a half left in the contest, Malone sank a pair of free throws and a slam dunk to send Houston in front again 90-89 with only a minute showing on the clock.

The Bullets broke in front at the outset, 11-4, with Kevin Grevey scoring their first seven points of the game. They pulled ahead 22-8 on an eight point spurt featuring two baskets each by Chenier and Tom Henderson.

the gap to eight (13-5). The Chief must have realized that at this rate, the Ephmen would tie the game up before the 11th quarter began, and so he took matters onto his own stick at 1:21 of the third stanza, and three minutes and 50 seconds later the score stood at 16-5.

This set off a seven-goal outburst by the Gorillas, carrying them into the early stages of the final period with a 15-goal bulge.

At this point, things seemed pretty hopeless for the home team, but one good look at the by now rain-soaked field hinted that a comeback wasn't hopeless — it was impossible.

Still, Williams fought back to respectabiliiy by beating the Gorilla bench for the last four goals of the game.

AS THE OLD SAYING GOES — Garber said he was impressed with the intensity with which his troops played — "I thought they'd be too casual with a team like Williams, but they weren't."...All three UMass goaltenders saw varying amounts of action during the contest...The Gorillas next game is April 29, against the 12th ranked Tarheels of North Carolina. Gametime at the field behind Goyden is 3:00 p.m. remaining two UMass doubles teams were forced to play third sets after losing in second set tie breakers.

With Barnhart serving fireballs and Heyl covering the net with meticulous precision, the third UMass duo won the first set convincingly, 6-1. The two Minutemen lost their momentum, and the second set, to Miller and Officer 6-7, 5-1 in the tie breaker.

Barnhart and Heyl then picked up where they left off in the first set, and won 6-2 in the third.

Moments after the Barnhart-Heyl win, Kalan and Staple lost the second doubles match to Somerville and Griffin in the last point of a third set tie breaker. The match ended with a blazing serve by Griffin which Staple could not return.

It was fitting that the match was decided on the last possible point. The match belonged to anyone up to the final point. Kalan and Staple won the first set 6-4, lost the second 6-7 (5-3 in tie breaker), and the third 6-7 (5-4 in the tie breaker).

Gazelles sweep twinbill

KINGSTON, R.I. — Just like the mailmen, neither heavy rains, nor strong winds nor chill of day will prevent the UMass women's lacrosse team from doing its job — and that is to become the number one women's team in New England.

On a day that was suited more for ducks and birds digging for worms, the UMass women's lacrosse team took another giant step to becoming one of the top teams in the area, when the Gazelles easily defeated URI 13-3, and Cortland St., 11-4, on Saturday afternoon, amid a constant drizzle and a bone-chilling wind on the URI campus.

By virtue of its double victory, coach Frank Garahan's Gazelles have now raised their season record to 4-0-1.

In their first contest of the day, the Gazelles trounced the URI Rams before their homefolks, 13-3, behind the usual strong offensive performances from Julie Hall and Evie Sneeden, who scored two goals apiece, and the impressive goaltending of Mary Murray.

"Just before we got down there in the morning," Hall said, "URI had beaten Cortland St. by one goal and they got kind of cocky when they played us, thinking that they could upset us too.

"However, because of the great teamwork we displayed in the first half, they never got close to us."

The Minutewomen build up a commanding 10-1 halftime lead against the befuddled Rams, as the Gazelles' fast-breaking offense proved to be a little to much for URI to handle.

"We anticipated that URI would give us a tough game," said Murray who made 11 saves in goal for the Minutewomen, "but we were really psyched for this game.

"Offensively we played with some great teamwork. We spread out our offense and opened up the middle for our goal scorers who did the job."

Judy Kennedy also played a big role in UMass' first-game victory as she won a lot of the draws, which set-off the Gazelles' fastbreak.

In the second game against Cortland St., UMass got off to a slow start, taking a 5-1 halftime lead. But Carrie Nickerson, who scored four unassisted goals and Hall, who scored two more, led the Minutewomen to a six-goal second half and an 11-4 victory.

Defense was the name of the game in the second contest for the Gazelles, and led by the strong defensive play of Grace Martinelli and Chris Basile, the Gazelles prevented Cortland from getting close to them on the scoreboard when the offense sputtered temporarily.

Batsmen rained out; playoff hopes dimmed

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

It was to have been a weekend for the UMass baseball team to attempt to restore some respect to an otherwise mediocre campaign. However, Mother Nature took matters into her own hands and delivered a barrage of raindrops on Earl Lorden field Saturday, to cancel the Minutemen's scheduled doubleheader with the Black Bears of Maine.

The washed out twinbill has been rescheduled for May 15, but the possible psychological stimulus that a pair of victories over the number two-ranked team in NE might have provided a team floundering at the mid-season point has been lost.

The Minutemen, currently 11-14, will try to recoup from their demoralizing 12-5 setback to the bats of Fairfield last Thursday, when they meet SMU at home on Wednesday. UMass is 2-1 against the Corsairs this season, having swept a doubleheader against them earlier this month to capture the host team's tournament.

Maine, 13-6, and ranked behind UConn as the top baseball team in NE circles, could have provided the stimulus for a Minuteman turnaround. UMass had lost two close games to the Black Bears down south and were looking forward to evening the season series.

"I'm a little disappointed," said coach Dick Bergquist," because our two top pitches, Reardon and Nigro, were going to pitch. Now I'll use them both for a few innings on Wednesday and come back with them against URI on Saturday."

The duo of Reardon and Nigro, who will have had a week's rest entering Wednesday's game, have been the pitching staff's two most consistent performers to this point. Nigro leads the staff with a 4-2 record and a respectable college ERA of 2.55. Reardon, although smarting with an 0-3 mark, has thrown well. The senior righthander has been the recipient of some shoddy support, having lost three one-run ballgames.

With 12 games remaining the Minutemen are faced with the prospect of needing a minor miracle to reach post-season play. The situation is one Bergquist is not happy about, but able to deal with.

"For us to make the playoffs we would have to win virtually every game on our schedule," said Bergquist. "We have nothing to lose and everything to gain. "We'd have to get some breaks along the way from other clubs to help us out. Anything can happen, but still it's pretty doubtful."

And so, on a rainy weekend in April, the Minutemen's fate has become clear. It is a fate that they alone cannot determine.

Netmen 'satisfied' with nail-biting win

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team missed brunch yesterday morning but didn't go hungry as the Minutemen satisfied their appetites with a 5-4 win over Boston College at the Hampshire College bubble.

The third doubles team of Jimmy Barnhart and Steve Heyl clinched the match for UMass with a 6-1, 5-7 (5-1 tie breaker), 6-2 win over the Eagles' Kevin Miller and John Officer in the last moments of the match. The win boosted UMass' record to 4-1.

The match, which was moved to Hampshire because of rain, seemed to be in UMass' pocket at the outset. The Minutemen took a quick 3-1 lead in singles but soon found themselves in a 3-3 deadlock. From there on in, it was fingernail biting time.

The Minutemen dominated the singles, winning four of the six matches. Ironically, the lone doubles victory by Barnhart and Heyl gave UMass the match.

Adam Rosen won the first singles match 6-1, 6-4 over BC's Kevin Nown, whose temper tantrums resembled Ille Nastase. Nown's vocabulary wasn't limited to only a few four letter words; his racquet-throwing ranked with the pros. At one point, he threw a ball at a spectator applauding Rosen.

Rosen, however, was not disturbed by Nown's vulgar antics, and went on to win easily.

BC's Rob Somerville handed Alan Green his first loss of the season, 7-6 (5-4 tie breaker), 6-2. Somerville, after squeezing past Green in the first set, dominated in the second, occasionally using a two-handed forehand to blast winners by Green.

Green had problems throughout the second singles match. He led in the tie breaker 4-1 only to lose the next four points for the first set.

"I didn't serve well," Green said. "My first serve was nowhere."

Barnaby Kalan, UMass' third singles player never lost control of his match with BC's Bill Damatz. Kalan won 6-3, 6-4.

Ricky Sharton, who found winning elusive early in the season, had little trouble in his 6-1, 6-3 win over BC's Paul Griffin in the fourth singles match.

Jimmy Barnhart lost to the Eagles' Miller in the fifth singles match, 6-2, 7-5. Barnhart's late surge couldn't stop Miller's steadiness and effective net game.

Alan Staple outlasted Officer, another foul mouthed Eagle, 6-4, 4-6, 6-3. Officer's verbal pleasantries livened up a slow match that consisted mostly of baseline rallies.

Despite the victory, Staple was not pleased with his performance. He said the back drop of the indoor courts impaired his vision.

"I couldn't see the ball when I came up to volley," Staple said. "I missed all these lunch meat vollies."

A 'lunch meat volley,' according to Rosen, is 'a volley your grandmother shouldn't miss."

In doubles, Rosen and Green quickly lost to Nown and Damatz, 6-4, 6-1. The BC duo was out for revenge after the two partners lost their singles matches. Rosen and Green looked unimpressive, and gave credibility to the theory that two good singles players don't necessarily make a good doubles team.

After Rosen and Green lost the first doubles match, the outlook for UMass was dismal. Although the Minutemen led 4-3, but the

Batwomen washed out; face undefeated Bears

By PAT McGRATH
Collegian Staff

The UMass softball team didn't have the opportunity to extend its current winning streak to eight games this weekend as its scheduled doubleheader against the University of Connecticut was washed out due to heavy rains. The Minutewomen hope to make up that game with a visit to the Storrs campus on Thursday.

Meanwhile, the softballers hope that the nasty weather gets better so they can travel to Bridgewater State for a game today at 3:00. Like the Minutewomen, the Bears are as yet undefeated, with their latest victory coming over the same Springfield team that UMass nipped last Thursday. Bridgewater won that game on a controversial play at the plate in the 8th inning, however, and the fact that the Bears have had an easier schedule than UMass puts things in the Minutewomen's favor.

Freshman Gail Carter will get the starting pitching assignment for UMass as she is coming off an impressive showing in the Springfield game. In that outing, Carter relieved starter Gail Matthews in the fifth inning and pitched two and two-thirds innings of hitless, shutout ball. Her ERA is currently 1.33, as she is tied with Sue Peters in that department. Carter has won two games without a loss, and will be seeking her third win.

The Minutewomen will employ the same starting lineup that they used against Springfield with Peters in left field and Oski in right. Peters is currently the team's leading batter with a .471 average. She is also tied with freshman Rhonda McManus in triples as both women have belted three triple-baggers. Pat Oski, who has come into her own in the past few ballgames, is second with a .455 batting average. She is followed by shortstop Sue DiRocco who sports a fine .400.

"McManus and Peters give us the real power that we need in the lineup," added Thompson.

A big factor in the Springfield game was the hitting of freshman Chris Verdini, the UMass third baseman. She collected two clutch singles which scored two UMass runs. Verdini's hits were her first two in four ballgames.

Thompson hopes to play all 15 members of her squad against the Bears if she gets the chance. She feels that the main strength of the team is its depth.

"I was very pleased with the way the kids came through in the clutch with their bats against Springfield," commented the UMass coach.

The UMass JV's will also travel to Bridgewater to play one of the toughest teams that they have had to face. They had a good game against Springfield despite losing 9-5. Five of the Chiefs runs were unearned as UMass committed four errors.

The JV bats finally started to come alive in that game, however, as they pounded out 10 hits. The main problem was that they also left nine runners on base, as they couldn't come up with key hits in clutch situations.

"I am going to work on the batting lineup," said JV coach Linda Wetherby. "Fran Cornacchioli had two triples and two singles in the Springfield game, and she looks to be our strongest hitter. She is also playing excellent defense at shortstop."

Donna Sasso, who sports a 0.53 ERA will be the starting pitcher for the JV's. If she has any trouble, either Karen O. Laughlin or Donna Woodcock will see some pitching action.

Gorillas surge, and then float to sixth in row

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Collegian Staff

It rained in Williamstown this past Saturday, so there was no game between the UMass and Williams College lacrosse teams — at least that's the way it seemed as Garber's Gorillas walked, and then swam all over the home team, 20-9.

UMass won the contest in the first quarter when it ran in five straight goals, was briefly interrupted by a lone Williams tally, then went for the jugular with a string of six more markers. At quarter's end the scoreboard road UMass 11 - Williams 2, and the only people left in the stands were the die-hards and the loonies.

"We started out pressing them as planned," said Head Gorilla Dick Garber. "It's a strategy we've used on Williams for the past two years, and it's been very successful."

Everybody got into the act in the 11-1 blitzkreig as seven different players found the net, none more than twice.

"We capitalized on their mistakes and got a lot of fastbreak goals," said Garbor

Another important factor in the first-quarter barrage was the incredible face-off work of Terry Keefe.

"After losing that first one (Williams scored 42 seconds into the game after taking the opening draw), I think Terry won about 95 per cent of his face-offs the rest of the way," noted the UMass coach.

Kevin Patterson and Toby Rice mended led the 20-goal Gorilla attack with five and three goals respectively, while Mickey Menna was satisfied with feeding his teammates. Menna collected eight assists on the afternoon.

"Toby's return gave me a strong third line and we were able to use three midfields in rotation to fuel the press," said Garber.

Patterson waited until the third quarter to go mildly berserk on the score sheet. The half had come to an end with Williams having closed

Trackmen second in BC relays

By MIKE BERGER

Second best can sometimes be described as a runnerup position for losers but over a three-day period, the UMass men's track team established itself at this stage of the season as the second-best track team in New England with a strong second place finish in the annual Boston College Relays.

With 32 teams competing, a dominating Northeastern squad won eight events for a total of 73 points to win the Relays, while UMass captured the second spot, beating out UConn with a 46 point total. Following UConn in third place were host BC, Springfield, Central Connecticut, Boston University and Rhode Island in that order.

"It was a tough three days especially with the contrasts of weather. Thursday and Friday were hot and humid for the six milers and decathlon men while Saturday was cool and rainy for the runners. But even so, all of our competitors were in contention in almost all the events and relays," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien.

O'Brien's track team won two events, placed second in three events, and captured four thirds and four fourths. Individually, the two-mile relay team and Kevin McCusker in the 3000 meter steeplechase won top honors. McCusker won the event in 9:03.2, and just missed qualifying for the IC4A Eastern championships.

Last week, over 2500 people watched the two mile relay units of Boston College and UMass go head to head in battle with BC just edging out the Minutemen at the finish line for first place.

This Saturday was the return of the same two units and this time, UMass came out the winner in the same type of exciting relay. The UMass personnel was different as freshman Bob Martin led off with Steve MacDougall, Jeff King, and co-captain Jim Hunt following in that order.

Martin (1:59) passed the baton to MacDougall who passed two other units in gaining second place. King then took the baton and sped his half mile leg (1:55) as he gave Hunt a four yard lead coming into the anchor leg.

In almost the same type of position as last week, Hunt went head to head with anchor Eagle runner Leo Vercollone. This time Hunt won as he withstood a valiant effort by Vercollone at the end. UMass' time was a 7:44.1 with BC two-tenths of a second behind at 7:44.3.

On Thursday and Friday, in what O'Brien termed as "grueling and subtropical", UMass six milers Rick Walls, Bobby Neil and Cliff Staples placed second, third, and fourth, with Walls running his second best time of the year with a 30:13 clocking. Neil was three seconds later and Staples not too far behind.

UMass sent four men in the decathlon and weren't disappointed as freshmen Bruce Parsons placed fourth overall with a total of 5891, establishing a UMass freshman record.

Parsons, who is UMass' best 120 high hurdler, competed in the 100 meter dash, long jump, shot put, high jump and the 440 on Thursday while he came back on Saturday to compete in the 120 high hurdles, discus, pole vault, javelin and the 1500 meter run on Friday.

Other UMass participants to finish in the top twelve of 24 competitors were Pete Janiak-seventh, Brady Mayer-11th, and Barry Hacket-12th. "The best aspect of this event for UMass is that Parsons, Hacket, and Janiak are freshmen and Mayer is a sophomore. This will be a very strong event for us in the future," said O'Brien.

Three-miler and sophomore Matt Wolff placed third in his best performance of the year. Wolff (14.2) was seven seconds behind second place Providence runner Ed Harnett (13:55) and 19 seconds behind All-American winner John Flora of NU, who was timed in 13:43.8.

Another group of freshmen, the sprinters, placed third in the 440 relay with a time of 43.5. Bill Conant, Mark Delaney, Mark Dale, and Jerry Herman, ran two tenths of a second behind winner B.C. but according to O'Brien ran their best performance of the year.

Other final finishes were Mark Healy-third and John Richards-fourth- 440 intermediate hurdles, the mile relay of Fran O'Keefe, Rich Thompson, Jeff King, and Jim Hunt placing second overall in the mile relay, and high jumper Bob Fitzgerald-placing second in the high jump. The distance medley of Chris Farmer-half mile, John Richards-440, Frank Carroll-three quarters mile and Mike Quinn placed fourth overall.

B's win in OT

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Rick Middleton scored at 2:57 of sudden death overtime last night to give the Boston Bruins a 4-3 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers and a 1-0 advantage in their Stanley Cup semifinal playoffs.

Middleton skated down the ice to the left of goalie Bernie Parent and fired a shot that Parent appeared to block with his skate. But as Parent fell to the ice, he knocked the puck into the net with his stick.

The Flyers sent the game into overtime on three goals in the third period with Bobby Clarke tying the score at 19:31 when he ended a scramble by sliding the puck past Boston goalie Gerry Cheevers who was leaning to the right.

It was Clarke's second goal of the period. His first came at 1:45 of the third period and Philadelphia's Bob Dailey made it 3-2 at 16:35.

National Black Organizers' Conference Orientation

by NUMMO NEWS SERVICE

Our orientation is based on a race and class analysis outlook. What do we mean by race and class analysis? It means we see that African people in the United States are oppressed in two forms of oppression at the same time.

We are oppressed & discriminated against because we are African (Black). This form of oppression all Africans face in the United States. This is racial oppression which many of us are familiar with. But also, the great majority, 90 per cent, of our people are of the working class. That is, they work for wages when they can find a job. In a capitalist society where the means of production are controlled by the capitalist class, oppression occurs in the form of class oppression. The capitalist class, in order to make profits, does not pay the working class its true amount of worth in wages equal to it's labor power. The capitalist class extracts super profits by underpaying the working class for it's labor time. The nature of the capitalist system is based on super profits.

While we don't have time to go into great detail in this conference, it is important for students to know the economic political relation Africans have had to the development and functioning of the monoply capitalist imperialist United States.

The selling of Africans in the slave trade and the free labor received from them, provided Europe, particularly England & America, with the necessary surplus capital that accelerated their economics to make a rapid transition from feudalism and slaveocracy to capitalist systems.

To understand the nature and general course revolution will take in this country, it is important for cadres to study the African slave trade (triangular), slavery and it's relationship to the world (western) market. It is also important to view history not from the eyes of Europeans, but rather from the viewpoint of oppressed people.

First and foremost, we must understand that America was a colony of Europe. Europe did not recognize the right of self determination of the native inhabitants of this continent. Their rights were seldom considered. Economic profit and expansion was the major motivating factor for colonizing America and the Carribean. So, the settlers were just that, colonial settlers. The prime motive of the settlers was to get rich from the land and as they became stronger in number they moved to expand further and further west.

To make this land profitable, slavery was established and was the center of trade and commerce for the 13 colonies. The so called American revolution was fought over greater control of the markets produced by the slave trade and slavery. It was a revolt of the colonial settler class; its bourgeoise, against the colonial mother country.

Was the American revolution progressive? No! To the Native American and the African it was non progressive for all the proported ideals were based on Caucasian males who owned property.

So it's important that we see the United States as a colonial settler state. Presently it has evolved into a multi-national monopoly capitalist imperialist state.

Due to our forms of oppression several developments have occurred. Because of climate, the south became the largest area for the concentration of slavery in this country.

Racism or social slavery was established to create a class system between white indentured servants and African slaves. It provided a basis for creating division between the indentured servants and the African slave. It gave the white indentured servant a "white skin privilege", a false class consciousness and also provided a rationale for the existence of an economy based on slavery.

As a result, over the past 400 years, African people have become a domestic colonized nation. For 350 years, we have had a common economic life basically underclass, that of a slave class or the most oppressed section of the working class. Even today half of our people are concentrated in the black belt south traditionally having a common relationship to the land and mode of production. While we speak the same language of the oppressor, we have a dialect that is African. We definitely have the ingredients of a cultural nation having a distinct and profound culture. And most important we have a continuous history of struggling for national liberation. Why am I laying all this out? Because we must have a historical materialistic understanding of the nature of our oppression. What do we mean by this? We mean we must understand the materialistic (basically economic, political and military) factors that lead to our oppression, the factors that kept us oppressed to fully understand how to struggle against the particular forms of oppression today and the correct path to take towards liberation.

Many who don't understand our history call us a national minority. It is more correct to view ourselves as an oppressed nationality or oppressed nation. Where is the common territory of our oppressed nation? The black belt area and surrounding areas of the deep south. Yet many will say that 50 per cent of our people are dispersed in urban centers in the north. It is true that during World War I and World War II masses of our people fled repression in the south and came north to look for jobs. As a result half of our people became an urban proletarial (black working class). But what is the status of our condition in the north? That of a colony or colonial subjects off our national territory. Again we are giving an overview in order to provide us with an outlook. You will have to research this further.

Are we the only oppressed nation in the colonial imperialist settler class state. No!

The native Americans and the Chicanos are also oppressed nations, while Asian-Americans, Arabs are national minorities and Puerto Ricans who stay here after the liberation of Puerto Rico will be a national minority.

What form and character will socialist revolution take in the United States?

If we understand that the Caucasian working class for the most part is a colonial settler proletariat we may be able to understand its political backwardness. The white proletariat settled here or immigrated here and received material benefits for supporting racism and imperialist expansion by the U.S. capitalist class. Receiving material benefits duller their working class consciousness giving them a false "white skin" bourgeoise class consciousness. We must understand the economic base to racism, then we can proceed to analyze our situation correctly. Though we do not have time now, we need to have lectures at a later date on the development of American capitalism-imperialism.

Revolution will proceed from the demands of the domestic oppressed nations demanding self-determination, reporations, the right to succession, political independence from the imperialist state.

It is the oppressed nations and national minorities which are the advanced class conscious section of the proletariat (working class). From the struggles of the oppressed nations and national minorities, sections of the white working class will be awakened and polarized. It will then be up to the white left to galvanize these sections and mobilize them to fight for the right of self-determination, political independence and socialism.

But as Malcolm said there can't be any worker's solidarity until there's first black unity. So today we are gathered here to deal with the question of how do we unite the black community and rebuild the movement. To do this, we must understand the masses are the makers of history. As organizers, we are servants of the people, working in the interests of the people.

Our objective should be to mobilize and organize the masses into a revolutionary mass movement. Cadres must be dedicated to our people's liberation and must be willing to sacrifice, personal rewards, prison if necessary, even life for the interests of the people. We must consider a future profession, secondary to to cause of liberation of our people. As we develop this commitment, we must realize that revolution is based on trial and error. Practice must be our highest level of judging one another; not what one says but what one does.

Revolution is a painful process. It means as we practice and work with the masses, we will grow in our thinking. Our thinking will change. Old romantic, bourgeoise ideas will be fought against and eventually eliminated from our consciousness. Our class outlook will change. This is the first thing students have to work on, changing their class outlook. The next thing is the idea of education. Most students think that all learning comes from books. We must learn the highest form of learning is actual practice, making theory a reality.

How do we make theory reality? First, we must mingle among the masses. What does this mean? Does this mean that we go to the people telling them what to do? No. The first thing cadres should do is an investigation of the people's living conditions. This means going into bars and pool rooms, eventually establishing contacts. Through those contacts gathering information. This is called "touching base". Then, cadres should scientifically analyze data they have gotten from different people of the community.

The cadre establishes a weekly system of evaluation this data utilizing the practice of criticism and self-criticism it will be able to guide itself correctly.

Malcolm said one of the first things we must do is to become politically educated. But what kind of political education do we need to organize the Black nation? We need an anti-capitalist, anti-racist, anti-imperialist education. The cadre must be trained in a historical analysis of our liberation struggle and the community which they intend to organize. This means cadres must be trained in the workings of the political system, who controls what, where and how.

In order for a Black organization to be effective, it must act as a rallying point for the Black community. It must give the average blood on the street the feeling of belonging. It must instill pride into our people. It must give them a knowledge of themselves and finally, it must not only inspire bloods to stand up and fight for liberation, but it must work on local day to day issues.

The cadre organization pulls together into one organization people who have struggled for welfare rights, unemployment compensation, better housing health care facilities, and low utility rates. Working with the people takes a higher level of discipline on the part of the cadre. . .

Alcohol, Tobacco and Pot

by Willie Wheeler
Nummo News Service

Marijuana has moved out of the inner cities and into the suburbs causing mass hysteria in the middle class community, it is the most widely used drug in this country today, pseudonyms (pot) (grass) (weed) (smoke). The reason there is panic in the middle class is because marijuana is a product of the present generation, the older generation specifically the generation which grew up in the thirties and forties has and tries to retain the values and attitudes they were taught by their parents. The present generation is doing its own thing, today teenagers are relaxed they are much more free to do what they want to do than their parents were allowed to do when they were growing up.

The middle class community is deciding on the issue of marijuana, they want to either decriminalize possession of marijuana (if the possession is less than an ounce) or criminalize possession of marijuana for now and all times to come. The state of California has decriminalized possession of marijuana and many states are following, on the books of many states marijuana is a misdemeanor a crime less serious than a felony.

Marijuana did not just fall out of the sky and decent upon the middle class to destroy their morality. NO it started with the peace movement and the civil rights movement in this country in the 1960's. People wanted to escape from the conditions of this country but they couldn't, there was no place to run to, so they had to deal with it, so what did they do?, they tried to put it out of their minds, this did not work, it only made the problem that more impending and urgent, but in that movement for tranquility and harmony with one conscious, developed reality: reality that there are some very basic contradictions in this society; in that we are not totally free to do what we please. Now that the middle class has realized this they are trying to change the laws so that they can be free to do what they please whenever and wherever they please.

There have been studies done on people to determine if marijuana is habit forming or if marijuana has any side effects, all the studies too date have proven that marijuana is less detrimental to the body than alcohol, and alcohol has picked up in this country. Children at the ages of 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 19½ are alcoholics. Alcohol is cheaper than marijuana and it is easier to obtain now that 18 yr. olds are permitted to purchase it. The 18 yr. olds are now buying alcohol for younger teenager so that the problem with alcohol is much more severe.

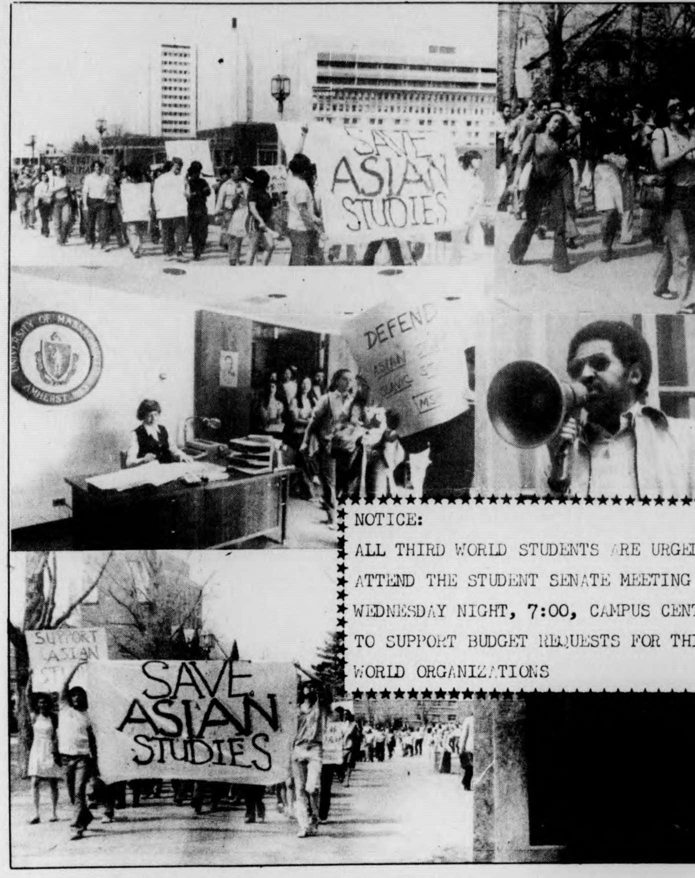
In the home teenagers see their parents drinking all the time and they leave alcohol around the home within the grasps of their children who do not realize that alcohol is dangerous to their system and could really harm them if they start indulging in what is a social custom in America. Despite all the media about the danger of catching cancer from smoking cigarettes, the sales of Phillip Morris Tobacco is steadily increasing year by year and despite all the television commercials about accidents by drunk drivers, the rate of homocide on the nations highways are rising year by year, even so the government has decreased the National Speed Limit to 55 miles per hour, but this is not enough to curtail traffic fatalities on the roadways.

Some people believe that it is fine to occasionally have a drink of tonic but people do not just have a sip of the vermouth, they drink until their lights go out and they reach a state of intoxication, now marijuana does not intoxicate it tranquilizes and it pacifies people so that they are at ease.

It's funny how people say how bad smoking cigarettes and drinking are a problem in the society but one tells the people who produce these things to stop because they are bad and are doing untold damage to the youth and adults of the society, so the conclusion is that no one really cares enough to put a stop to these things. Hollywood is making a mint on the drug films that they produce, films like the French Connection, Super Fly and French Connection II. The problem is that this society is a capitalist society, profit is the motivating drive in this country, people are not concerned with the improvement of the quality of human beings, NO everyone is caught up in materialism, keeping up with the Jones, but the people do not realize that you can never keep up with the technology in this country because things are constantly changing, so people will continue to buy, if people did not buy capitalism would crumble and eventually die.

No amount of rhetoric will blow away the problem of marijuana they must begin to take steps on their own, no one can any longer expect other people to solve their problem for them, they must organize themselves in Washington, D.C. and in their own communities where the power lies. If the legislators are not doing what you hire them to do you should get rid of them and put someone in office that will, or seek the position yourself because you know where the problem lies and will deal with them, because these problems are not going to go away, further the people who are profiting from the sale of these things are not going to give in to you just like that, they are committed to the sale of these things, it is their livelihood, their way of life, they will not say to you, yes, you're right. I was only thinking of myself, I'm sorry, will you forgive me please. NO they are going to fight with everything at their disposal and this is what you have to do, because these things will continue to kill and destroy lives as long as no one cares enough to fight for what is right.

The People United Will Never Be Defeated



NOTICE:
ALL THIRD WORLD STUDENTS ARE URGED TO ATTEND THE STUDENT SENATE MEETING ON WEDNESDAY NIGHT, 7:00, CAMPUS CENTER, TO SUPPORT BUDGET REQUESTS FOR THIRD WORLD ORGANIZATIONS

"People United, will never be defeated" was one of the chants heard at the rally to support Asian Studies on Wednesday. Members of the faculty, students from the Asian studies program, students from the Asian American student Association, and other concerned people rallied together in a show of unity and strength. As Bob Suzuki stated in his speech at the rally, "It's high time the Asians stood up and be counted on this campus." The significance of the rally was that people no matter what position they held at the campus, no matter if they were yellow, black, brown or white got together to fight for a common cause, to see the Asian Studies department not only stay as a viable program on this campus, but also to see the expansion of the program. There were a number of people who spoke to show their support: Bill Strickland from the Afro-Am dept., Bob Suzuki from the school of education, Lucien Miller from the Asian Studies dept.. John Yong from the Asian American student Association, representatives from MSP, representatives from the Asian Studies, students, and many others. The demonstration started at the Student Union and it continued to Whitmore where the demonstrators marched into the building itself chanting, "Dare to struggle, Dare to win", "They say cut back, we say fight back". Asians on the campus made a step forward because we are showing everyone that we are not passive and acquiescent, that we will fight for the equality that has been denied us for so many years. This is only the beginning.

The position of the Asian American student Association on the Asian Studies issue is that we agree with John Bracey's letter that racism should not play a part in anyone's criticism of Puryear's plan. Not only do we believe that the Asian Studies department should stay but also we advocate an expansion of the program to meet the needs of the Asian immigrant and Asian American students. We suggest the addition of one faculty position to teach Asian American history. The one presently given through the school of education is just not sufficient. We must have more. How would you like United States, European, or Afro-American history to have just one course available to cover in depth all that has happened? Neither can one Asian American course do justice to our 150 years of history in the United States. Surely, in the name of diversity, we, all students, would want a global view. We need the Eastern perspective, the perspective of half the world. To eliminate Asian Studies would be to deny the importance of half the world.

Melba Moore in Concert

By W.J. WHEELER

Melba is without a doubt one of the most talented performers in the industry. She captivates her audience with her tremendous range and showmanship. The Fine Arts Center will never be the same after those renditions performed by her at the F.A.C. last Fri. nite.

Melba has had an overnight success that had dissipated for some reason, but these ups and downs are common in her field, in an interview with her after the performance she calmly put it this way "everyone telling you how great you are, but a individual knows deep within themselves when they are doing a superb job, as for me I knew I had something going, all I needed was a break, I got my break in the off-broadway play pearly. I believe I always wanted to be a singer, my whole family is in the business, you see it was all around me, all I had to do was find out what I could do and perfect it, it was not easy, performers are in a competitive business, it is always a constant battle for the publics ear, this is what happens to performers like myself. you hit a very high peak and then things begin to slack off, but I don't let it bother me because I feel that I am constantly trying to improve those talents that I may or may not have."

Melba is planning for the arrival of her child, she is expecting the baby to arrive in the latter part of May, but she says that she has planned around her pregnancy and will be making dates in the very near future

Melba is a love goddess, she tryed to share that love with us at the F.A.C., and she was quite success, everyone was up on their feet when Melba hit Center Stage and again and again after she finished a tune., Melba loved the audience and the audience loved her, and I think I can speak for everyone, I hope she will come back real soon.

Free Frank Dotten

Since the days of slavery, Black men have been framed, imprisoned and often executed after being charged with rape of white women. Throughout the South, Blackmen were sometimes murdered for supposedly looking at a white woman. Today the rape frame-up charge is used against Third World men as a continuing process of oppression of our communities.

"My Name is Frank Dotton. I live in Jamaica, Queens. In 1974, I was busy doing odd jobs as a handyman."

"On May 13, 1974, after painting and repairing my wife's car, I decided to get some gas. My woman was in her ninth month of pregnancy and she could go into labor at any time. While on Jamaica line, two plain-clothes detectives in an unmarked car pulled our car over. They said the car I was driving resembled the description given to them by a complainant and that I should go to the precinct so that they could ask me some questions.

While at the police station, I was questioned and viewed by at least seven different women, given two summons and photographed. I was threatened by Detective Barlollotte.

He said that he would get me one way or the other. The car was impounded and I was set free. "On Friday, May 17, 1974 four days after they had first stopped me, they came back this time to arrest me. I was charged with rape, robbery, sodomy and kidnapping. The kidnapping charge was dropped before I even went to court. The robbery trial was dismissed for lack of evidence. Justice Agresta was biased and prejudiced from the beginning.

Assistant D.A. Michael Swead insisted on convicting Frank Dotton to further his political career. The constitution guarantees a person trial by jury of his peers. Frank Dotton was tried by an all white middle age jury and not by people from his community.

The alleged victim was not sure about anything from the beginning. She changed her story two or three times from the Grand Jury to the conclusion of the trial. The police claimed the car that Frank was driving was used in the crime. No evidence was found in that vehicle. The police searched the house where Frank Dotton lived with wife and family. This is the same house where the woman claimed the incident occurred. However, there were no fingerprints, weapon, hair, clothes or anything else to substantiate the rape story.

Four witnesses testified and established where Frank Dotton was at the time and date of the alleged incident. Apparently, their testimony was disregarded by the all-white jury. Even with the lack of evidence and his witnesses testimony, he was tried and convicted to be imprisoned for a period of seven to twenty-one years.

Frank Dotton, like other Black and Third World men, are fighting for freedom and to prove his innocence. This could have happened to anyone in our community. It is all of our responsibility to unify and help to free Frank Dotton, because in doing so we will prevent the same injustice from happening to any one of us. For immeciate action: 1) write the Governor demanding new trial or a full pardon for Frank Dotton 2) send contributions to Frank Dotton Defense Committee, P.O. Box 32244, Jamaica, New York 11431.

Political Aspects of Building A Mass Movement

by Joseph Waller, Chairman of the African People's Socialist Party (For presentation at the April 15-17, 1977 Black Organizers Conference at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst)

In dealing with this discussion, "Political Aspects of Building a Mass Movement," it may be useful, for purposes of the discussion, to begin with a working definition of a mass movement.

It seems to me that a mass movement is one that responds to the deep-seated, self-recognized needs and aspirations of the masses of our people, and which consequently, has the participation of a decisive sector of the African population.

A mass movement should be distinguished from a Party-type formation or organization which may be doing mass work. For while a Party-type formation or organization, if it is principled, and true to its ideology and line, will always project a clear class position and project its ultimate aims in all its work, a mass movement will not necessarily consciously project its ultimate aims.

None of this is to say that a mass movement will not have a class character. Nothing could be further from the truth. All political and social formations in this real world will have and project a class character. But the difference is that a mass movement will not necessarily consciously do so. This is one of the factors which may distinguish a mass movement from a Party-type formation or organization, and as definitions do not only tell what a thing is, but what it is not as well, we must say that a mass movement is not a Party-type formation or organization.

Any discussion of the Political Aspects of Building a Mass Movement must continue to make the important distinction between Mass movements and Party-type formations. A lack of clarity on this question can seriously affect our political development and lead to unnecessary setbacks and political errors.

For example, I recently held a discussion with a comrade brother who is a member of a political party that is presently committed to politics of "non-confrontation." This political posture advocates no obvious leadership of the struggles of Black people around self-realized needs, and no obvious defense of the people against attacks by the U.S. North American colonialist state.

According to the comrade I talked to, this posture was born out of concern that we do not become victimized by the mistakes the Black Liberation Movement made around the period of 1967, when certain overt and sometimes ultra-leftists postures and utterances made it easier for the U.S. government to arrest and kill our advanced fighters and smash various of our militant organizations.

It is correct that our comrade should be concerned that we do not make the same mistakes we made in the last period, but his error, and in my opinion, the error of his party, is in confusing the last period with the present period, and mass movements with Party-type formations doing mass work.

During the last period, which was marked by mass upheavals of the people, we were witnessing mass movements of the people; movements which were generally spontaneous and without the benefit of a Black political party shaped by tested advanced fighters, rooted in the masses, whose political ideology, style of work, and expertise could provide direction and leadership.

During this period, however, serious advanced fighters are struggling throughout the U.S. to build political parties capable of providing long-term theoretical and practical leadership for our struggle against U.S. imperialism.

This, then, is a major and fundamental difference in mass movements and party-type formations we ought to be constantly and consciously aware of:

A genuine Party-type formation will always be guided by long-term strategic interests, and all its tactical work will be guided by strategic interests. On the other hand, mass movements are characterized by short-term or tactical interests and are often sponstaneous occurrences. Mass movements such as the Civil Rights Movement and the Black Power Movement, are often victimized by a tendency to raise tactical objectives to the level of strategic objectives, thereby often becoming slaves to the urgency of the moment, which can, among other things, lead to ultra-leftist and adventurist acts.

Clearly then, during this period of intensive party building, our comrade brother, and his party are incorrect in assuming the impossibility of confronting our imperialist enemy in the day-to-day defense and struggles of our people as necessary tactics for realizing the strategic objectives of our struggle for political independence, and self-determination through self-liberation.

Not only is this an objective right-opportunist posture — a posture and tendency characterized by avoiding immediate struggle in the ostensible interest of long-range goals; a posture which objectively unites us with rightest politics in that it denies the value and necessity of struggle — it is also incorrect as a tactic for party building. For genuine liberation, or revolutionary, or vanguard parties, must be built in the heat of struggle. They must be formed, tested and steeled in actual combat with our class enemy and national oppressor — combat which is determined by our actual capabilities, concrete time and place, and our tactical and strategical objectives.

An attempt to build a party otherwise — in the sterility of classroom situations, or the false security of closet politics — not only dooms our efforts to the mere creation of cults and sects, but also provides us with politically fragile formations which must necessarily fold and disintegrate from its first serious contest with our class enemy and national oppressor.

Now that we have made a distinction between mass movements generally, and party-type formations doing mass work, it may serve us to distinguish working with spontaneous mass movements (which means they are mass movments which do not project or are not born of an attempt to realize long-term or strategic aims) from working with mass movements which project and which are born out of an attempt to realize strategic aims.

(So this statement does not appear contradictory I would like to make this point: for advanced fighters, socialist-revolutionaries, African Internationalists, etc., all mass movements are tactical vehicles, tied to long-range strategic aims beyond the objectives of a mass movement. Therefore when we talk about the spontaneous or tactical, or short-term character of "some" mass movements, we are speaking of their character as opposed to, or in comparison with, the character of other mass movements.)

Mass movements may be distinguished, one from the other, by the fact that some mass movements may project strategical objectives unto themselves; that is to say, objective which are realizable within the limited context and capabilities of mass movements, while others, which we define as spontaneous or short-term, may not do so, and may project only immediate objectives which are directed at the symptoms of deep social maladies.)

As an example, we may imagine the potential for a mass movement developing around the integration of schools. Such a movement may be honest in its intent. It would be born out of the frustrations of our people in acquiring a decent education and in response to the slavish philosophy of Integrationism which presently dominates our community.

Such a movement would approach the question of education superficially and based on a perceptual observation, one which shows the inadequacy of "Black" education as opposed to "white" education. Such a movement would not understand the relationship of the post World War II expanded productive capacity of U.S. industry and the subsequent demand for new workers, and how this new demand gave an extraordinary impetus to the demand for "integration" as the best method for preparing Black workers for entry into the labor market. Such a movement would not understand that education in any society serves the dual purpose of providing the minimum necessary information and training prerequisite for efficient production, and as the ideological underpinning required by a society.

Ignorance concerning the aims and purposes of education would obscure the self-defeating character of a mass movement promoting "integration" and would leave the movement struggling against the symptoms of colonial education: the high expulsion and suspension rates for African students; the humiliating treatment afforded to African students by North American professors; and the inferior education African students receive from schools which are located in our communities.

This kind of mass movement will be obviously guided by spontaneity, having no meaningful, or realistic strategic aims, and forever being victimized and run in circles by tactical moves of colonial administrators who are committed to maintaining the colonial relationship which exists between our people and the U.S. North American state.

To do work in such a mass movement, as we necessarily must, would require a different tactical approach than working in a mass movement with projected strategic aims. To do work in such a movement would require that we unite with the movement in its aspirations to upgrade the education of African people, while at the same time, using massive propaganda, educate the people to the correct nature of the contradiction, and criticize the present incorrect course of the mass movement. From this vantage point, while still showing unity with the movement we would raise slogans, and project aims which capture the true contradictions, thereby, pushing the struggle forward.

When I say we must unite with the aspirations of such a mass movement, I mean exactly that. We cannot use the tactic of standing on the wayside and yelling from afar. We should be the most trusted fighters within the mass movement. The masses must understand our fidelity to our people and our cause, and this can only be understood if we are side-by-side, with the people, in the thick of any deeply-felt struggle being waged.

Principled unity with the movement would also generally require that our efforts be directed at winning the people rather than smashing the movement, since struggle, even spontaneous struggle, heightens the fighting capacity of the people. The great problem is not so much the spontaneity of the masses, but rather it is one to be determined by our ability to give leadership to the people should spontaneous mass struggle develop.

However, the type of mass movement we want to talk about is not a spontaneous mass movement. The type of mass movement we are concerned with at this time is a mass movement which does project long-term, strategic aims, one which is not built from spontaneous mass activity, but which has its genesis in ideological presuppositions and political predeterminations.

The fact that we are concerned with "building" a mass movement is an indication of "intent." "Building" a mass movement, as opposed to simply working with a mass movement, is an indication of purpose, and to the extent that such an attempt to build a mass movement is wedded to long-term, strategic aims, has its basis in ideological clarity designed to realize political objectives, and is guided by our advanced fighters, the movement will not be characterized by spontaneity and will be capable of advancing our general struggle for political independence through self-liberation.

Any mass movement that we are building should have its basis in our attempt to realize our tactical and strategical objectives for liberation. In the last analysis it will be our attempts to realize these objectives which will determine the political aspects of building a mass movement.

Our tactical and strategical objectives for liberation will help us to determine which forces contribute naturally, through their own self-motion, to the realization of political independence. They will help us to determine which forces, although incorrect in their direction, are not hostile toward or antagonistically contradictory to our ultimate aims and which may therefore be worked with. They will also help us to identify those forces which are hostile, and which consciously serve the forces of imperialism and African colonization. In other words, in our efforts to build mass movements we must be guided by tactical and strategical objectives for liberation if we are to separate what is historically necessary from that which is historically "guessesary."

My point here is simply this: At the moment we have determined our tactical and strategical objectives for liberation, we have completed our most serious task for determining the political aspects of all our work, including building a mass movement.

Therefore I would like to discuss briefly and generally what these tactical and strategical objectives for liberation should include, as they relate to building a mass movement.

Our first and most important objective should be to win Black people to the position of political independence. If the masses of Black people are not won over to the position of independence, there will be no independence for Black people. It is as simple and clear as that.

If we can agree that the masses of our people must be won to the position of independence as a prerequisite for liberation, we can already see that we automatically begin to give political definition to our work of building a mass movement. It is obviously, in our best interests to identify those forces within the dispersed African colony which are most sympathetic to the Independence movement, and after so identifying them, we must win them, or a sizeable sector of them, over to the idea of building a mass movement which meets our common strategical objective of winning our people to the position of independence.

When we talk here of the need to win our people to the position of independence it must not be assumed that the people are anti-independence or hostile to the notion of independence. Nothing could be further from the truth! Our problem here is that the independence movement has done too little in the area of systematizing and spreading a philosophy of independence which would give us the kind of philosophical influence with our people that is presently wielded by the anti-independence philosophy of "Integrationism." And even in those areas where we do put forward some philosophical clarity we have too often failed, or have been unwilling to provide consistent practical leadership for the day-to-day struggles of our people which would give real meaning to the value of our philosophy in the real world.

Therefore, it seems clear to me that when we talk about realizing the strategic objective of winning our people to the position of independence we should be prepared to do so, through massive propaganda and agitational work, while in the heat of mass-felt and identified struggle.

When we talk about building a mass movement, then, we are talking about doing so with the predetermined idea of realizing the strategic objective of winning our people to the position of independence, while giving concrete and philosophical leadership to the self-felt and identified struggles of the people.

And as we are discussing a mass movement which must be built, and as the organized pro-independence forces are so few, we are also talking about uniting with the greatest possible sector of the pro-independence movement for the purpose of building a mass movement designed to promote the common strategic objective of political independence through self-liberation.

To the degree that our work is tied to realizing our tactical and strategical objectives for liberation we are putting our politics in command and reducing the ability of personalities to play the determining role. We don't walk out of meetings because our feelings are hurt, for that would be rank subjectivity; we don't attack and shoot up fraternal organizations because of FBI-led maneuvers, for that would be eliminating our objectively, scientifically-defined comrades. Our actions would be necessarily determined by a minimum of principle, for our main, primary, and most fundamental political objective now is to serve the people through realizing to the best of our ability, the tactical and strategical objectives for liberation.

A second and related strategic objective for winning liberation is to establish the leadership of the pro-Independence movement. In building our mass movement, then, we see that it must be designed to clearly demonstrate the leadership of our movement. We are helped further in determining the political aspects of building our movement by taking upon ourselves the responsibility of realizing this strategic objective.

Again we see the objective of uniting the pro-Independence forces as a political necessity, and we have articulated the basis for minimum unity. Because this need to unite is recognized as a strategic objective, when we are about the business of building our mass movement, we are automatically armed with the political patience to continue struggling for principled unity with even the most backward forces within the pro-Independence movement. ("Backward forces" here are not the same as reactionary, comprador, traitor, forces, which might also call for independence, but which by virtue of their slavish relationship to imperialism, would sink the people deeper into colonial bondage.)

A mass movement, then, may be built through a coalition or united front effort of the leading pro-Independence forces, organized around general principles of minimum unity, with their basis in an attempt to realize a common strategic objective of establishing the leadership of our general Independence movement.

A tactic for realizing the strategical objective of establishing the leadership of the Independence movement may also be the creation of a national Black Independence party.

This can mean several things depending on time and place, and the political conditions for and aspirations held by a particular political formation which will have to make the determination of what building a national Black Independence party means.

I say this can mean several things because it can be interpreted to mean that we need a mass or popular political party which only has independence on its agenda. On the other hand, a political formation which feels it has overcome the amateurishness, lack of political clarity, and is sufficiently rooted among the masses, with a cadre of advanced fighters, may conclude that it is a vanguard national Independence party, already existing, and may therefore see the creation of a national Independence party as building a mass movement to realize political independence.

Such an advanced political formation would see political independence as a necessary tactic for realizing socialism, and, depending on its world view, achieving a united, socialist Africa, necessary in the long run for independence to be meaningful to our efforts to provide the material basis for qualitatively changing the conditions of our life.

Then there will be some who will interpret the need to build a National Black Independence Party as meaning that all the present political formations which now call ourselves parties, are indeed too primitive to deserve the label, and that we are therefore, talking about finding the formula for bringing the most progressive pro-Independence formations together to struggle over the questions necessary to find unity in order to establish ourselves as one party.

For the purpose of this discussion on the political aspects of building a mass movement, it is not overly important at this juncture whether we see ourselves as "the" party or whether we see the need to set up a process to build "the" party. The main thing here is that we understand the need for giving concrete, day-to-day leadership to the struggles of our people and see the potential for using a National Black Independence party for the vehicle.

However, if we are to continue talking about establishing the leadership of the independence movement as a strategic objective to guide our work in building a mass movement, we must clearly be prepared to take the offensive on mass issues. Therefore, for it to be viable, and a mass movement in fact, it cannot simply be a movement of the "already-faithful-few." To guarantee that it is not, we must be prepared to assume the people's offensive on mass issues.

In the past this has been a grave error of the general Independence movement. We have held our store-front rituals, dressed in our fashionable daishikis, practiced our most elaborate hand shakes, but failed to take the offensive on the most pressing problems confronting our people. Then we have been disappointed, disgusted, and amazed when our people followed the Integrationists or did not easily identify with our philosophical pronouncements.

On the other hand, when we have attempted to provide practical leadership we have often begun our work from the level of our own ideological development, based on our own organizational conclusions which do not necessarily correspond with the under-developed worldview held by the masses of our people. Consequently, rather than providing leadership for the people, we separate ourselves from the people

Clearly this is not assuming the offensive. It is ultra-leftist postering and objectively speaking it is detrimental to our struggle and serves the forces of imperialism and continued African oppression.

Our politics is meaningless if it is not tied to a process to better the material life of our people, and what I am simply saying is that the process does not begin after liberation. It must begin now if there is to be liberation. The people will not follow us simply because, like Ford, we have a better idea.

Amilcar Cabral was correct when he said: "Always bear in mind that the people are not fighting for ideas, for the things in anyone's head. They are fighting to win material benefits, to live better and in peace, to see their lives go forward, to guarantee the future for their children..."

This should tell us, then, that there must be unity of theory and practice, and that the mass movement we are talking about building must be tied to the material needs and struggles of our people in this world. Our theory should be capable of leading the day-to-day struggles, of being tested in the real world. If we are incapable of truly serving the people; if our theory prohibits, through its inadequacies, giving practical leadership, assuming the offensive around the life and death questions, then we are undeserving of the people's confidence, and the people will not follow us, and there will be no real independence within our lifetime.

Taking the offensive on mass issues cannot be done in a one-sided way if we are serious about establishing the leadership of the Independence movement as a strategic objective to guide our work in building a mass movement. When we talk about establishing the leadership of the independence movement we must be talking about our leadership as opposed to all other leadership.

Therefore we must be capable of, and prepared to, wage continuous ideological struggle while taking the offensive on mass issues. This ideological struggle should presently identify as main targets the following forces in order of importance:

1. Our primary target for ideological struggle is the U.S. North American ruling class. As this is the enemy most responsible for the barbaric treatment for our people, and upon whose system colonialism depends, we must, without letup, strike our main ideological blows here. Our ideological struggle against this main enemy should be anti-imperialist, and anti-colonialist, as imperialism and its colonial tactic are responsible for our condition in life;

2. The second, related, most-important target for ideological struggle should be directed against the Black, primitive petty-bourgeoise collaborators. These collaborators represent colonialism's first line of defense within the dispersed U.S. North American colony. Although the primitive petty bourgeoise-collaborators often give lip service to improving the lives of our people, their solutions are always those which would strengthen the present system, and guarantee our continued servitude. If we are to establish the leadership of the Independence movement we must necessarily expose the bankruptcy of primitive petty-bourgeoise collaboration.

3. The third target for ideological struggle is the Ideological Imperialists. These are the U.S. North Americans who call themselves socialists and communists, but who deny the right of African people to be led by our own advanced fighters, by liquidating the nationalist character of our movement; obscuring the colonial contradiction; raising the secondary contradiction between African people and our relation to production to a primary contradiction, and seizing hegemony of our movement.

While imperialism has clearly been the biggest danger to our people, in the most recent period the Ideological Imperialists have represented the greatest danger to our movement, and have smashed several Black militant organizations who incorrectly saw them as class allies.

Our ideological struggle against the Ideological Imperialists must be waged constantly, consciously, and conscientiously. While struggling to overcome the primitive petty bourgeoise collaborators within our communities, we must erect an ideological barrier at the borders of our community which will make it impossible for the Ideological Imperialists to penetrate.

The ideological struggled waged against the Ideological Imperialists must be characterized by its Revolutionary Nationalist content. It must sharply and unceasingly put forward the ideological basis for our Revolutionary Nationalist politics. It must do this scientifically and principledly.

We must not have a mechanical approach to waging ideological struggle against these three main targets while struggling to establish the leadership of the Independence movement as a strategical objective while building a mass movement. I am not suggesting that when we struggle against one of these forces we [illegible] our ideological combat to one aspect, then change when we combat another.

All our ideological struggle during the present period, which is characterized by the relative weakness of the Independence movement, should contain each of the three elements I have mentioned. However, the determination of which of these forces at a particular time would demand the sharpest struggle would also determine the emphasis to be put on a particular element of our ideological struggle.

Another strategical objective for winning independence which should guide our work is to win support for the Independence position within current U.S. borders.

Because we have been bogged down in primitive "race" politics as opposed to nationalist politics, some of us will reject the idea of winning support for the Independence position within current U.S. borders. Some will see winning support as meaning the same as winning "acceptance," which is the slavish philosophy put forth by the Integrationists.

However, I assure you there is a distinctive difference. To win acceptance correctly implies capitulation, non-struggle, and national self-debasement. But winning support means political persuasion, ideological struggle, and principled political relations which respond to a convergence of interests, and a commitment to socialist and international morality.

Struggling to win support for the Independence position, as a strategical objective for independence through self-liberation, will help to sharpen our ideological development, smash the narrowness of our worldview, and demand continuity in our principles of unity.

The main targets for this effort to win support for the Independence position should be the general anti-imperialist forces within current U.S. borders, other oppressed, subject, and colonialized nationalities, and progressive U.S. North Americans.

I cannot overstate the importance of this as a strategical objective, for I believe that in the absence of such a clearly-defined objective to guide our work, and because of the generally sloppy theoretical work of our movement which marked the recent past, we made many errors which could have been avoided.

We cannot control the U.S. North American "left" movement, and, therefore, we cannot assume responsibility for its errors, but we can and must control our movement, and we must understand that its errors are our own.

I would like to share an example of what I believe to be an error generally promoted by the petty-bourgeoise-dominated U.S. North American left, and often parroted by our movement, in the absence of having as a stated strategical objective the goal of winning support for the Independence position within current U.S. borders. It is in the first place a theoretical error which leads to incorrect practice.

WORKSHOP DISCUSSION on the aspects of building a Mass Movement for Liberation.

This error consists of the premise that our is a struggle against "Racism" and imperialism.

Immediately it is sometimes difficult to see this error since we have for such a long time, under the philosophical dominance of the primitive-petty bourgeoise, been fighting against "racism."

But since we have advanced, and become materialists, we understand the primacy of matter over mind, and we should be able to understand that "racism," the attitude, or ideas, that the North American people have in their heads about African people cannot possibly be a principal contradiction. Moreover, we should understand that the only reason the ideas and attitudes that we identify as "racism" have any significance at all is because of the relationship African people have to the U.S. North American state. This relationship is characterized by the absence of political power over, and self-determination for, our own lives and existence, such power and determination being in the hands of a foreign and alien state power.

In the real world this is called colonialism. It results in real human suffering for the colonial subject, and because it is the basis for the social, political, and economic development of the colonizing nation, it results in arguments, ideas and theories, which explain its (the colonizing nation) relationship to the rest of the world in a distorted and fanciful nature, designed to justify the relative position of the colonizer to the colonized in the real world.

Generally speaking, the attitudes and ideas held by U.S. North Americans relative to African people could not be otherwise, given our colonial condition stemming from our relationship with the North American people. How else can we explain the attitudes held by the intellectual giant Frederick Engels concerning the Irish people colonized by England where Engel's family owned textile factories.

In his book, The Condition of The Working-Class In England, published in 1845, Engels stated of the Irish:

"With the Irish, feeling and passion predominate; reason must bow before them. Their sensuous, excitable nature prevents reflection and quiet, persevering activity from reaching development — such a nation is utterly unfit for manufacture as now conducted."

Such an unscientific statement from a man who made such gigantic contributions to the development of materialism is almost unbelievable. In one single statement he has reduced the ability of an entire people to the condition of their "feelings" and "passions," separating the "feelings" and "passions" of a people from the material conditions of their lives, and turning everything upside down by making their material being dependent upon their "passions" and "feelings" rather than the other way around.

My point here is that the attitudes and ideas held by the U.S. North American people, although constantly influenced by governmental policy and manipulated by ruling class opinion makers, have their basis in the historically evolved need of a society to explain its evolvement on stolen land based on slave labor.

The premise that ours is a struggle against "racism" and imperialism is incorrect. Ours is a struggle against imperialism which employs colonialism as its form of oppressive exploitation. We can struggle against imperialism by struggling against colonialism which is a real condition in the real world. It has contradictions which often surface and which can be exploited politically.

On the other hand when we struggle against "racism" we are struggling against ideas which are in the heads of the vast majority of European people. There is no identifiable source of political power to overcome, and the enemy must necessarily be viewed as a politically homogenous and monolithich group of people who are racially identifiable and who have no political differences we can exploit and who, because they are identified racially, represent a permanent condition which can never be overcome short of their extermination.

This is not to say that the anti-African ideas in the heads of North Americans can not harm us. But the ways in which they harm us are such that they serve to maintain our colonial relationship with the U.S. North American state. Therefore, it ought to be clear that what we generally refer to as "racism" is simply individual North Americans carrying out the U.S. policy of colonialism.

There are many U.S. North Americans who are justly concerned about the terrible, anti-human ideas in the heads of their North American brothers and sisters. These ideas have been responsible for the most barbaric acts against peoples of other nationalities ever to be recorded in human history. For North American socialists there is the question of socialist morality and a humane post capitalist culture for North American people. They are therefore justified when they say they must struggle against the racism in their society as a priority.

However, when our movement assumes responsibility for North American morality we are dragged into error after error. I am belaboring this point because I think it is fundamental to pushing our movement forward, as there is much confusion within our ranks on the question of the political reality presented to us by the existence and presence of white people and the relationship of our struggle to their existence and presence.

Let us briefly go back to the question of a mass struggle around education, as an example. We have already established that the Independence movement, because it represents our advanced forces, would struggle differently than those who only see the surface or symptoms of the problem. No doubt the Independence movement would correctly raise the slogan of

Free Lorraine Alexander

LORRAINE ALEXANDER was kidnapped off the streets on January 23, 1976 in Columbus, Ohio, along with her three comrade brothers — Eric "Stitch" Davis, Elisha "Wolf" Abrams and Jihad Dawud Abdul al Amin (David Bryant) — all of which were given semi-life sentences for alledged bank robbery.

After the unsuccessful attempt by Columbus, Ohio S.W.A.T. teams and local police to murder the sister on the street, the attempt to murder her continued when she was subjected to legal lynch proceedings in a kourt of law, where she put before an all but one white jury, denied legal counsel at key points in her trial, found guilty and railroaded off to 23 years in prison.

Sister Lorraine is a revolutionary sister who worked in the Rochester community on a grass roots level organizing black people, youth in particular, around our common problems and striving to raise the level of consciousness of our folk. She was an active member of the Rochester Federation of Youth in 1975. It was because of her relentless efforts in fighting against political, economic and social repression that she was persecuted in the unjust manner that she was. The various extreme attempts to have the sister removed from the midst of the people are clearly indicative of this, despite the fact that she has no criminal record and three children all under eleven years of age.

She is now coming back on appeal. Only through the unified efforts of the people in supporting her will she have any chance of being free. The fight to free Lorraine is the fight to free all political prisoners!! Solo Concerts

Marion Brown and Amina Myers

SAXOPHONE COMPOSER Marion Brown, captured at a solo performance in ENVIRON, A NYC LOFT, December 31, 1976

SOLO CONCERT:
The Music of Marion Brown

Featuring Marion Brown-Solo Saxophone

And Amina Myers — Solo Piano

Friday & Saturday, April 29 & 30

At the Hampshire College Red Barn.

Both nites: 8:30 p.m.
Contributions: $3.00

All Donations go to the Musicians

Since his first concert performance in the Pioneer Valley back in November of 1972, saxophonist-composer Marion Brown has performed here in the Valley at least once each year. Each year, Marion returns to the Valley with a new sound, a new group or performing format, and new compositions to delight and challenge Valley listeners' ears, so that no matter how familiar Brown's music might be, it is never predictable — Marion Brown and his music are always on the move, and always growing. This coming Friday and Saturday nights, at the Hampshire College Red Barn, Valley listeners will have a chance to check out the newest sounds and developments in Marion Brown's music, when Marion performs a program of solo saxophone pieces, and then presents pianist Amina Myers, who will perform solo interpretations of piano music he has recently composed. Both performances will begin at 8:30 p.m. and a contribution of $3.00 is asked. All donations will go to the musicians.

Marion Brown should need little introduction. By now, most people are aware of Marion's associations with some of the masters of contemporary Black Classical Music: master musicians like John Coltrane, Archie Shepp, Pharoah Sanders, Stanley Cowell, Rashied Ali and Sun Ra, all of whom Brown either recorded or performed with in New York City in the mid-1960s.

Since his departure from New York in 1968, Marion has lived, studied and toured throughout Europe, has taught at several New England colleges and has earned his Master's Degree in Ethnomusicology. Brown's music reflects this experience and study: he employs sounds, patterns and techniques from all styles and eras of Afro-American music, and frequently utilizes elements from African, Eastern and Caribbean musics. For the past eight months, Marion has been working hard to develop his solo saxophone concept and repertoire. His solo program will blend the historical — Ellington compositions, for example — with original Brown compositions, both familiar and totally new. Marion has just recently returned from an eight-week tour of Europe, so he should be in fine shape to deliver a stunning performance. If you've never heard Marion Brown "live", make sure you check him out this time around. New York Times critic Robert Palmer has commented, "In person, Brown plays solos that are thoughtfully organized and reveal a stunningly rich saxophone sound, which has not been captured adequately on records."

Although Amina Myers may not be a familiar name to Valley listeners, this is due to the ignorance of the music business and print media, and has no reflection on Amina's artistic talent, experience and commitment. Ms. Myers' music has strong, firm roots in the music of the Church, and she has toured the United States and Europe extensively with legendary figures like Dexter Gordon, Gene Ammons and Sonny Stitt. She is a Chicago native, and is a member of Chicago's Association for the Advancement of Creative Music (A.A.C.M.). In recent years, she has recorded with Kalaparusha Maurice McIntyre, and has worked in New York with contemporary giants like Muhal Richard Abrams, Hamiet Bluiett and the ensemble AIR. Amina will be performing solo piano interpretations of a series of piano compositions written last year by Marion Brown as part of a project funded by the National Endowment for the Arts. Brown's compositions were all inspired by the prose poetry of Harlem Renaissance writer Jean Toomer, who was, like Marion, a transplanted Georgian. Ms. Myers' playing, which fuses the rumbling roll of the sanctified blues to the spacey, airy lyricism of contemporary expressions, evokes the sights, sounds, smells, landscapes, characters and stories of the South, which have made both Mr. Toomer's and Mr. Brown's art so poignant.

It's not often that listeners can get such a complete picture of what a musician is about as they'll be able to get next weekend, when they have a chance to taste both the solo saxophone and the composed piano music of Marion Brown. Don't pass up this rare opportunity; Support Live Music at the Hampshire College Red Barn this weekend, April 29-30, at 8:30 p.m.

THE BLOOD AND THE SEED

By AGOSTINHO NETO

We
    from boundless Africa
And above the treachery of "crocodiles"
Span the majestic and invincible forests across the flow of life
Anxious, seething, abundant our rivers' roar
Through the harmonius sounds of muted drums
Through the eyes of youth in multitudes
Multitudes of arms, of pain, of hope

From boundless Africa
    beneath the claw
Bleeding from grief and hope, from sorrow and strength
Bleeding on this earth torn by hoes
Bleeding with the sweat of forced labor in the cotton fields
Bleeding hunger, ignorance, despair, death
From the wounds on the black back of the child of the mother of honesty

The blood and the seed

From boundless Africa
Black
And bright like mornings of friendship
Desirous and strong like the pace of freedom

Our cries
Are drums hearlding desire
In the harmonius voices of nations
Our cries are humns of love from the heart
Flourishing on the earth like sun-lit seeds
Cries Africa
Cries of mornings that our seas cough up bodies
Chained by
The blood and the seed

    -Behold our hands
Open to friendship with the world
United in certainty
For the future of man
For right for friendship for Peace

From our toes grow roses
Perfumed with the perserverance of the river Zaire
And with the grandeur of the trees of Maiombe
In our souls
The way of friendship through Africa
Through the world
In our eyes the blood of life
Turned towards hands beckoning love throughout the world
Hands of the future-inspiring faith in the vitality
Of Africa-human land of Africa
From boundless Africa
Germinating under the sun of hope
Creating bonds of brotherhood in freedom from want
From anticipation for peace
The blood and the seed

For the future behold our eyes
For Peace hear out our voices
For peace here are our hands from Africa united in love

Agostinho Neto is the President of Angola and is the first Secretary of the MPLA. He was born in Angola about sixty KM. He went to Portugal to study medicine immediately upon arrival he started fighting racism in the distatorial regime. He was promptly put in jail by Pide the Secret Police, these were the roots of his earliest poetry.

The reason why it is imporant to understand the Neto writings is because the Western Press is a concerted effort to discredit the infant peoples Republic of Angola and its leaders.

They are trying to portray his government as not representing the people and that he is out for himself. But by reading his poems one can tell that his poems represent the highest asperations of his people.

The poems are selections from his book "Sagrada Esperanca" which means Sacred Hopes.

GOODBYE TO THE HOUR OF LEAVING

By AGOSTINHO NETO

My mother
(all the black mothers whose sons have left)
You had taught me to yearn
As you yearned in the difficult hours

Yet life
Killed in me that soul-sprung hope
I no longer hope
I am he from whom hope comes

I, my mother, am the hope
We are
Your sons
On our way for the faith that feeds the life

Today
We are the naked children of the sanzalas
The boys without training that play ball with knotted rags
In the mid-day sand
We are the same
Contracted to waste our lives in the coffee-fields
The ignorant black folks
Who must respect the white man
And dread the rich
We are your sons
Of the black bairros
Yonder where electric lights have not reached
Where the downtrodden fall
Abandoned to the rhythm of the dance of death
Your sons
With hunger
With thirst
With shame to call you Mother
With fear of crossing the street
With fear of men Ourselves

Tomorrow
We will intone hymns of liberty
When we commemorate the day
Abolishing this slavery

We are going in search of light
Your sons Mother
(all the black mothers
whose sons have left)
They are going in search of life

Protest level funding... ...and Senate funding

Rallies planned for campus today

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

A rally designed to educate faculty, staff, students, administration and the state legislature about the debilitating effects Dukakis' proposed "level funding" will have on the quality of education at UMass is scheduled today in front of the Student Union building at noon.

The Budget Cuts Task Force, the rally's sponsor, met yesterday with rally speakers to clarify specific speech topics and designate the speaker's order.

"The rally is not really a protest. We are protesting "level funding" but it is more of a thing for people to get educated, not only people on this campus but the legislature," Jim Gagne, Student Government Association director of communications, said.

The legislature is scheduled to vote on "level funding" May 4, but because of schedule problems the vote may not come until summer. Dukakis' "level funding" allocates $68.1 million to UMass, a budget which does not take inflation or other increased costs into account. The proposal could result in drastic cutbacks in departments, student services and personnel.

Speeches, to be limited to five minutes, are to cover how "level funding" affects the department or organization the speaker is representing. In addition, ways to unite to fight cutbacks will be presented.

Problems surfacing at today's meeting included the fact that Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) has taken no stand on students unionizing, according to Bruce Laurie, the speaker representing MSP today.

Sam Bowles, an economics professor, was added to the list of speakers. In what Bowles called a "political decision" it was decided he was to give a broader analysis of public higher education in a capitalist system, tying in "level funding" and Provost Paul Puryear's five-year plan as examples.

Miguel Rivera, a member of Ahora, an organization encompassing Spanish-speaking students on campus, was asked to come to the meeting to discuss the possibility of him speaking; however, he declined.

After the rally, workshops on a variety of topics relating to issues raised at the rally will take place in the Campus Center. A leaflet, describing the various workshops, their places and times will be available at the rally.

The order for speakers will be: Sherry Flashman, representing the Graduate Student Employes Union; Pinky Batiste and-or Jon Hite, Student Government Association co-Presidents; Samuel Bowles, from the economics department; John Bracey representing the Afro-American studies department; Susan Birmingham, representing the Student Organizing Project; Lazlo Tikos, representing the Department of Slavic Studies; Richard Minear, from Asian Studies Program, a representative from the American Federation of State and County and Municipal Employes; Bruce Laurie, from the MSP; Student Senator Paul Cronin; and Bill Lazarus, from the Budget Cuts Task Force.

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

While student and professional groups finalized plans for today's rally against budget cuts last night, the leader of a Latin-American group announced a "counter rally" protesting "hypocrisy" in the Student Government Association (SGA) funding practices.

Miguel Rivera, representative of Ahora, said in an interview last night that he was shocked that the SGA opposed "level-funding", yet at the same time chopped his group's budget for fiscal 1978.

"While we too oppose "level funding" and will protest against it tomorrow, we will also take an adversary role in the rally with people we have differences with. The same people rallying against state budget cuts are also the same people cutting our budget in the senate. It's a phony game," Rivera said.

Rivera also contended some of the same SGA members battling "level-funding" had strong ties to the Democratic party and the UMass administration, making their efforts "useless". "How can they work for both group's interests?" Rivera asked.

SGA Co-president Pinky Batiste said last night her "biggest fear" was that people would forget the original purpose of the rally after hearing Rivera's charges. She stressed the importance of public education on level funding and said today's rally would proceed as scheduled.

Under Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' "level-funding" proposal for fiscal 1978, UMass would receive the same amount of money as last year, $68.1 million.

Under the proposed SGA budget for fiscal 1978, Ahora, the "united voice of the UMass Spanish speaking community", faces an 85 per cent cut, from $8,601 to $2,068.

SGA leaders argued the $6,533 decrease does not amount to as large a chunk as it appears because of the creation of a "cultural honorariam fund."

The fund would act as a pool for some monies previously given to the individual RSO groups, they said. Funds for groups wishing to host cultural programs would still be available to all groups, but they would receive the money on an-event-by-event basis, rather than in a lump sum.

"I believe the senate is sincere in trying to give each group a workable budget within the financial constants that the senate is facing. The cultural honorarium is a good way to see all RSO groups on campus have the opportunity to present valuable cultural events for the entire community," said former SGA Co-president Paul M. Cronin, last night.

Seabrook to be hit by wave of protesters

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

This Saturday afternoon, April 30, after the waters of the Atlantic have receded with the tide, another tide will flow onto the construction site of the Seabrook nuclear power plant in New Hampshire to begin the "largest civil disobedience action against nuclear power plants in the U.S."

This tide of people plan to occupy the site to protest the nuke, facing possible arrest. Last August, 179 occupiers were arrested and charged with "criminal trespassing." Those that plan to "go limp" and be dragged from the site may face charges of resisting arrest. Many will carry makeshift gas masks of cloth and charcoal in case of tear gas.

Despite these dangers, people from all over the east coast are going to Seabrook. Although no one knows for sure, the strong grassroots effort in New England, has led one anti-nuke organizer to estimate the number of occupiers to be "at least 2000."

The Five-College area, fearful of its own proposed nuke in Montague, has an extensive grassroots system in the form of the Alternative Energy Caolitions (AEC) in Northampton and Greenfield.

Many of the occupiers will be from Western Massachusetts, and many of these will be UMass students.

According to Frances H. Crowe, one of four trainers in the non-violent workshops required of all occupiers, more than 400 people have attended the six workshops on the UMass campus. She said approximately 70 people came to the sessions in the Campus Center on the last two Sundays.

Crowe, 57, also serves as the Western Mass. representative of the American Friends Service Committee. She has been involved with non-violent protesting since "they dropped the bomb on Japan." She was arrested at the 1972 anti-war demonstration at Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee, where police dragged demontors away. She will occupy Seabrook Saturday. She is "more afraid of the poison ivy" than of the police or National Guard. She believes that "if the people have anything to say in this country, it (Seabrook nuke) won't be built."

Although many share her conviction, few share Crowe's experience in civil disobedience. UMass sophomore Mary L. Wells, 19, plans to occupy and go limp if arrested. "I'm a little scared. If a lot of people go limp the police may pick out the smallest to make it easier on themselves. If they do I'll be one of the first." She has never been arrested, but says "I'm prepared."

As preparation, she attended one of the non-violent training sessions in the Campus Center, where she participated in the role playing. People with green trash bags on representing the National Guard played at "arresting" the "occupiers." Role playing is cited by all as important.

New Hampshire state police and National Guard have also had non-violent training in preparation for the occupation, so there is not much fear among local occupiers of an outbreak of violence.

UMass freshman Thomas P. McGuigan, 19, who works as a speaker with the Hampshire County AEC, said "We have no gripes with the police or National Guard. Our gripes are with the nuke builders."

Each occupier belongs to an "affinity group" of 10 to 15 who will stick together throughout the occupation. Each group has a "spoke" person, whose job is to meet with other spokes for quick decisions. In addition each group has a media person to answer questions and a medic with a first aid kit.

Lynn E. Hoffnagle, 20, is an exchange student from Portland, Oregon, and she too plans on being arrested. "I feel I'm going to have enough support from my affinity group so I have no fears whatsoever," she said.

UMass junior Sharon Tracy stressed the fact that the occupation is without leaders. If a spoke gets arrested there is an alternative spoke to take their place. The members of the affinity groups know each other's strengths and weaknesses. They are confident but anxious.

Tom McGuigan pointed out that there is "no way to tell what's going to happen." The role playing sessions attempt to deal with most situations that could arise. During his training, which lasted seven hours, he played the role of a state policeman. He will not occupy, however, because each group needs two people on the outside in case of an emergency. "Our people will always have support," he said." He believes the occupation is going to "open up a lot of people's eyes."

According to McGuigan the occupiers will approach the site from four different directions. Each of these four groups has been assigned a camp area in a privately owned campground.

McGuigan describes the plans, which are remarkably detailed, "Everybody will occupy at the same time. Occupation will be in the afternoon at low tide so people can tramp across the marshes with their banners."

Nobody knows how long the occupation will last if there are no arrests, or if the arrests are selective. McGuigan said, "Most of the people in my group are willing to stay until Monday or Tuesday."

Sharon Tracy is going up Wednesday or Thursday and returning Monday. She is a member of the "Core Support," which remains outside the site to coordinate food, moving cars and cleaning up the campgrounds. "People should not go to Seabrook unless they want to occupy," she said. "There will be no room for sightseers."

Non-violent trainer Frances Crowe said she will conduct a final session Wednesday from 1 – 6 p.m. in room 917 Campus Center for "people who are thinking about occupying."

Selectmen hear petitions

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

Debate surrounding the proposed Northwest Road continued last night as the Amherst Board of Selectmen held a discussion on the Northwest Road committee report.

The selectmen continued the process of hearing from petitioners who have articles on the town meeting warrant.

The report of the committee, to be presented at the upcoming town meeting, contains five recommendations to alleviate traffic problems on North Pleasant St.

Nancy B. Eddy expressed "grave reservations" at Recommendation One of the report, saying the proposed road was "too southerly" and would cut the University land off very soon.

Recommendation One is a plan for a road to be built from Commonwealth Ave. to Rte. 116 in the area of the Physical Plant.

The other two main recommendations of the committee are Recommendation Two, which would extend Commonwealth Ave. to North Village and Recommendation Three, which would also extend Commonwealth Ave., but would connect this extension with North Pleasant St. The connecting road would run through the former Taylor farm which was bought by the University as part of the now-defunct Northwest Bypass plan which the Amherst Town Meeting rejected last fall.

The report also contains minority reports from town committee members UMass Prof. Richard H. Minear and Patricia McLaughlin.

Minear's report opposes Recommendation Three, mainly the connector road through the Taylor farm, for safety reasons. Minear last night reiterated his view that the connector would be hazardous to children of the Marks Meadow School.

Gerald Grady, UMass community relations coordinator, maintains that the connector will actually decrease traffic in the area.

McLaughlin's report opposes any construction except improvements to North Pleasant St. on the basis that University and town growth has "leveled off."

Disagreement arose over the installment of traffic lights along the extensions and connectors, as Selectmen Chairperson Diana H. Romer questioned the committee's ability to install traffic lights without state approval.

Grady said there were eight state requirements, any one of which had to be met, in order for the state to approve the installation of automated traffic lights. Minear said the construction would come "no where near" fulfilling any of the requirements, but Grady said "activated" or "push-button" lights could be installed at town expense with "no problem."

In other action, the South African Support Committee withdrew their request to meet with the selectmen regarding a petition they have been circulating recently, due to lack of preparedness.

The petition requested the town to investigate any investments and trust funds it may have with corporations doing business in South Africa and that the town divest itself of these trust funds and where possible, stop doing business with the companies.

Hiring policy discussed

Affirmative action guidelines were the sole topic for discussion at the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) meeting held last night.

The GSS ad-hoc committee on affirmative action presented two separate documents to be considered by the GSS. The two drafts of guidelines underwent fire by GSS senators in an attempt to merge the ideas presented in each into one single document to be used by the senate in determining future affirmative action policy.

The final document created by the senate debate will not tolerate "discrimination in any form on the basis of race, sex, affectual preference, age, marital status, handicap, or ancestory."

With the written document that the senate gives final approval, the GSS plans to apply the principles sent down to all phases of senate activity.

The hope of the senate is that such a document would encourage the participation of women and minority graduate students in the graduate senate.

The two separate drafts recommend the formation of a standing advisory committee to be established within the GSS to gather information and report to the senate concerning affirmative action policy problems or to advise other standing committees within the senate concerning affirmative action.

There was discussion concerning the role of statistics concerning the guidelines.

Senator George Sommers who worked on one draft of the document, said that the GSS needs statistics to watch trends towards the attainment of the affirmative action guideline goals, but that the statistics should not become the goals themselves.

Sally Majewski, who worked on the other draft said, "People on the outside should be able to look in and see what the senate is working for. That is what the affirmative action guidelines will do."

Majewski pointed out that no decision should be made without the full consent of the senate.

New officers preside over Central Area

By MARY BETH ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Last night's Central Area Government meeting was presided over by the '77-'78 officers. The new officers were elected last Thursday by popular vote in the Central area.

Mark Zinan was elected president. Richard Fryer is the new vice president, and Gary Anderson will be assuming the job of treasurer.

Two spokespeople from the Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa made a brief presentation about their organization and requested $50 to advertise a South Africa workshop. The motion for the money passed unanimously.

A report was made concerning the May Day concert to be held May 1 on the area between Orchard Hill and Central, which is being sponsored jointly by the two areas. The concert's $3,000 budget was accounted for by Gary Shuster, a concert organizer.

Zinan suggested that Central officers take a $5 cut in pay. The president currently receives $25 a week, and the other two offers $20 each. After discussion, Zinan withdrew the motion. It was decided that each officer should set up two hours a week as formal office hours.

It was agreed upon that there would be no smoking during Central area government meetings.

Gorman resident arrested in Hills

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

Patrick E. Horne, a 20-year-old UMass student who lives at 117 Gorman Dormitory, was arrested on the morning of April 23, for breaking and entering into Hills House, malicious injury to state property, and being a disorderly person.

Chief Robert Joyce of the UMass Department of Public Safety reports that Horne had entered Hills House via a window and broke into some vending machines. An officer arriving at the scene witnessed Horne running from the building and chased him until he was apprehended at Theta Chi.

John M. Adams, 54, of 31 Holyoke St., Northampton, was arrested at Machmer Hall on April 22 on a warrant issued for him from Hampshire District Court. The warrant contained three counts of assault and battery and contributing to the delinquency of a minor by obtaining alcoholic beverages for the minor.

Assault & Battery

The Department of Public Safety reports that a male UMass student was the victim of an assault and battery on the southeast side of Emerson Dormitory on April 23 around midnight. The student suffered an abrasion of the right cheek bone. The Department has a description of the assailant and the incident is still being investigated.

.There was a report of a medical emergency at Webster dormitory around midnight on April 22. The Department reports that an officer found out that there had been an altercation between students on the sixth floor and that one student had been injured in the fight. The student complained of severe back pains and was brought to the infirmary. The Department is waiting to set up an appointment with the injured student to ascertain complaints.

Paula F. Williams, 21, of 323 Revere St., Winthrop, was arrested on University Drive on the morning of April 24, for driving under the influence of alcohol. She was subsequently arraigned in Hampshire District Court, according to the Department.

On April 22 around midnight, a fire broke out in 301 Hamlin and caused over $1,000 damage. There were no injuries. The Amherst Fire Department responded to the fire which was caused by a candle catching fire to a fishnet.

Equipment Stolen

Two rock bands may not be in a hurry to return to UMass after having their equipment stolen last week. On April 22, the band "Ready Teddy" had 6 microphones stolen from the Blue Wall. The microphones were valued at $450. On the afternoon of April 24, a variable volume pedal belonging to the band "Zonkaraz" valued at $60 was stolen out of the Hatch.

A couch valued at $75 was stolen from the third floor of Herter Hall between April 15-18.

Chief Robert Joyce emphasized the need to report crimes as soon as possible. "Whenever you wait a couple of days the chances of recovery are slim. We're interested in recovering stolen property and prosecuting individuals committing the crimes but this can't be done unless you report a loss as soon as possible."

Two ten-speed bikes and an office calculator valued at $548 were stolen from room 6 of Munson Hall between April 20 and 21.

A green Fuji road racer bike was stolen from the basement of Baker Dormitory between 1 and 3 p.m. on April 21. The racer was valued at $225.

A Massachusetts license plate was stolen from a motor vehicle parked in Lot 21 between April 1 and 9.

There was an attempted theft and vandalism on a motor vehicle parked in Lot 22 on April 22. The Department reports that the ignition had been jimmied and the car couldn't be driven. Damage is estimated at $150.

A casette tape player valued at $125 was stolen from a car parked in the infirmary parking lot on April 22. The Department reports that entry was gained by forcing open a vent window.

Bike Stolen

A ten-speed bicycle was stolen from outside Thatcher dormitory on April 23. The bike chain had been cut. The bike was estimated at $125.

On April 21 around 6-8 p.m., there was a breaking and entering and larceny at Apartment D-29 in North Village. A stereo valued at $108 was stolen. The Department reports that entry was gained by forcing upon a rear bedroom window.

Escapee: 'Not guilty'

An escapee from the Billerica House of Corrections pleaded not guilty yesterday to charges that he stole money from the residents of UMass fraternity Phi Mu Delta.

Dana W. Hapgood was captured Sunday night in the fraternity house by members and held for town police. He was charged with breaking and entering in the nighttime and larceny of more than $100. Bail was set at $500 in Northampton District Court, with a hearing scheduled for May 3.

Hapgood, who escaped from the prison April 12 was serving three one-year concurrent sentences for possession of a dangerous weapon, possession of ammunition and possession of stolen property. He was to be released in October.

Hapgood allegedly walked away from a low-security dormitory area of the prison.

Workers tied to job site

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

Physical Plant employes have been ordered not to leave their work areas during both of their daily 15 minute rest periods and their union has taken issue with the administration's right to call this action.

A notice dated April 19 and signed by Physical Plant Director George A. Norton, states that all Physical Plant employes must take their rest periods "at the location where work is being performed." In the past, many employes have taken their rest periods in the various snack bars on campus.

Location, as defined by the notice, is the building in which, or on which the employe is performing his-her work.

For outside work, the location is considered to be the nearest adjacent "protected area."

Physical Plant employees affected by the action are janitors, maintenance, grounds personnel.

The union which represents the approximately 800 Physical Plant employes is local 1776 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes (AFSCME), AFL-CIO.

Union President Carol A. Drew, in a Collegian interview, claimed that the administration was violating the AFSCME contract with the University, (which went into effect April 4, 1977) by taking the action that they did.

"I know it's a violation," Drew said, " ... they are not abiding by the contract."

The union has filed three grievances with the administration, concerning the rest-break situation. Right now, the grievances are in the second stage, where an intermediate supervisor will hear the complaint and attempt to resolve it. Drew says that if necessary they will take the grievance to the fourth and final step of arbitration.

Article 7, section 4 of the contract states that "Rest periods of a maximum of fifteen (15) minutes shall be given to employes in each one-half tour of duty (half shift).

Though it states specifically in the contract (Article 7, Section 3) that the one-half hour meal break "shall be eaten at the work site," there is no mention of where rest periods are to be taken.

Drew argued that Norton, acting for the administration, did not have the right to "tamper" with the contract in which he played no part in negotiating.

She said that the contract was not intended to tell employes where they could go on their breaks, and that the action "came as a complete surprise."

"It says nothing in the contract about rest-breaks being taken on the job site," Drew said. "The letter and intent of the contract have been violated."

UMass Director of Personnel and Financial Services, John L. DeNyse said that the idea behind keeping people at their work sites is to "increase productivity," by keeping employes "where they might be needed."

Employes are paid for their lunch and rest periods.

DeNyse responded to Drew's charge that the contract was being violated by saying "that's a matter of opinion."

Norton said last Friday that the rule on break sites was not completely unbendable.

"We are trying to make it as fair as we can and still abide by the contract," Norton said.

It will be up to the immediate supervisory or foreman in a specific situation, Norton said, to determine what situations employes will be able to leave their work sites and go into snack bars if they choose.

"Every situation will be different," Norton said. But for the most part, employes will not be allowed to go into snack bars, Norton said.

For employes who work outside, they will have to go to the nearest adjacent shelter area, so unless they are working right outside of a snack bar, they will not be allowed to go in. "You put a man out in the field," Drew said, " ... he should be able to get a drink." As for people assigned to work indoors, such as janitors, Norton said that exceptions could be made for them leaving the building.

When asked by the Collegian for examples of specific cases where people would be allowed to leave the building, Norton said, "There are very few cases where they could."

SWA candidates sued

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Five candidates in last Thursday's Southwest Assembly Area Government elections are being sued by two Southwest residents in the student judiciary, for alleged criminal misuse of campaign funds.

Defendants in the suit will be Diane Fessenden, Bruce Berkowitz, Bonnie Ward, Greg Manyard, and Joanie Mersky. Four of the five defendants were elected as officers wtth only Mersky losing to Linda Venute for the post of Communications Coordinator.

The alleged violation of the newly written Southwest Election Regulations was brought to the attention of Student Attorney General Paul Yanowitch by Ed Bachelder and Peter Clinch of the 8th floor Washington.

According to Yanowitch the defendants are specifically charged with using public funds (i.e. campaign funds) for public advertisements in violation of rule 19 of the Southwest Election Regulations which reads, "No campaign funds shall be expended except for items directly relating to the campaign."

Bachelder and Clinch said the candidates violated this rule when they printed the phrase "For Southwest T-shirts call Jeff 546-5068" on the bottom of table tent card advertisements which were distributed in Hampden Snack Bar and in the Southwest Dining Commons.

"To me this was a blatant violation of the campaign regulations," said Bachelder yesterday.

Bachelder and Clinch's names will not appear on the suit since criminal cases such as this are called the Student Government Association versus the defendants, said Yanowitch. Also, he said, the candidates may be charged with additional violations in connection with the table tent campaign advertisements.

The defendants say they were totally unaware of the illegality of the table tents until Thursday night.

"We did this totally unintentionally," said Southwest Assembly President-elect Diane Fessenden, "We put our campaign together long before the rules came out."

She said about 400 of the cards were printed and that only about 100 of those were actually handed out. Some were placed in Hampden Snack Bar at 2:30 p.m. on the day of the election and more were handed out at dinner. She said they were removed and destroyed as soon as the candidates were informed of their possible illegality.

"They were out less than six hours," Fessenden said.

Defendants Bonnie Ward and Joanie Mersky also told the Collegian last night they were unaware of the possible illegality of the cards.

Adversary role keys Globe reporters

By KEVIN J. CLAFFEY
Collegian Staff

Effective journalists thrive on adversary relationships with the politicians they write about. An antagonistic, irreverent attitude is a trademark of many reporters who achieve such a respected position within their trade.

Curtis Wilkie, the national political reporter for the Boston Globe maintains such a relationship with Pres. Jimmy Carter by his own repeated admission. Wilkie, who spoke at UMass yesterday with Martin Nolan, the Globe's Washington bureau chief and Jack Driscoll, the assistant executive editor of the Globe, frequently took pot shots at Carter, but professed a solid, professional respect for the President.

When asked if he slept better now that Carter was in office Wilkie said, "I sleep better when I'm living in sin, actually." He later conceded that Carter was a fascinating guy... in fact, he's the smartest guy I've ever covered." Wilkie admitted he liked Carter more than he disliked him, when pressed for a definitive answer.

A Mississippi native who has covered two presidential campaigns, Wilkie used his wise-guy wit to first perk up the audience of about 100, then make his point:

"Carter is bull-headed and sometimes uncompromising. He won't be budged except where he wants to be. He has a lot more credibility than the 535 blowhards on Capitol Hill."

Wilkie, by his own admission, is uncomfortable with the new role as the Globe's White House correspondent. "I hate covering the White House. I'm anxious to go back to Boston and cover some real stories about some real people... like a good trial."

Driscoll, a weathered craftsman who has relinquished his byline for a more forceful, behind-the-scenes post as assistant executive editor, recently spent two weeks in Phoenix working on the 23-part Arizona Connection series. The articles, which dealt with corruption in Arizona government was a combined effort of more than 250 reporters who were continuing the work of Phoenix reporter Don Bolles, who was murdered while investigating those allegations.

"The ultimate infringement on the First Amendment is killing a reporter. We were saying, 'You can't do that and get away with it'. It was also a show of strength and Arizona was ripe for that kind of investigation."

Driscoll, along with Globe editor Thomas Winship, directs the actions of the Spotlight team which deals in lengthy investigative work.

Nolan, an opinionated, scholarly man, is a contrast to Wilkie and Wilkie's methods. He uses his sharp wit and George McGovern resemblance to command attention and present his insights about the mood of Washington.

"Carter is an intelligent man and an honest man, which is something we haven't had for years. I don't think we'll have any scandals during this administration... it's just not the type!"

The most scathing indictment of the newly proposed Carter energy policy was delivered by Nolan when he said: "He had to rely on the tattered credibility of the CIA for the energy study. It strikes me as very strange."

Nolan, Wilkie, and Driscoll all grudgingly showed some admiration for Carter throughout the talk. But Wilkie emerged as both the most vocal critic, probably to protect his adversary relationship and paradoxically also the most ardent supporter, due to an honest self-evaluation.

PIRG bill dies

The proposed legislation to end the Public Interest Research Group MassPIRG funding through state school's tuition bills died in the Joint Committee on Education yesterday.

Karen Meenan, director of the Amherst chapter of PIRG, said yesterday that the committee has decided to draft a letter to the state colleges trustees asking them to change the funding mechanisms at their schools to the negative checkoff now used by UMass. Up to now, the state colleges required students not wishing to support PIRG to pay the two dollar contribution first, and then file a disclaimer at a campus office for a refund.

Representatives Andrew H. Card Jr., R-Holbrook, and Andrew S. Natsios, R-Holliston, both first term members of the House last December filed legislation which would have disallowed lobbyist groups, like PIRG from receiving financial support on state college tuition bills.

Supreme Court affirms student newspaper rights

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court yesterday rejected a claim by a homosexual organization that a student newspaper at Mississippi State University was constitutionally required to print its advertisement for gay counseling services.

The justices, in a brief order without comment, let stand a 3-1 decision by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans holding that the student editor had a constitutional right to reject the ad, especially since sodomy is illegal in the state.

The Mississippi Gay Alliance and its president, Anne Debary, offered a paid ad for publication in "The Reflector's in August, 1973. Editor Bill Gaudelock refused to print either the ad or a subsequent nonpaid notice.

The alliance and Debary sued Goudelock, the newspaper's faculty adviser and university officials. They claimed the newspaper was state-supported and refusal to publish the ad was an infringement by the state of 1st Amendment free speech rights.

In rejecting the contention, the lower court noted that the newspaper is financially supported by student activities fees and that Goudelock was selected editor by the students, not the university.

The university exercises no control over the newspaper, the court said, and therefore there was no state involvement in the decision not to publish the advertisement.

In addition, the Supreme Court has ruled there is no constitutional requirement that an editor publish whatever is offered, either in advertisements or in editorials.

Law group advocates reform in penal system practices

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Prisoners should receive wages and other employment benefits, pay the state for room and board and pay taxes like everyone else, according to an American Bar Association study made public yesterday.

The study, conducted over 2½ years, also recommended abolishing the parole system and creating an independent releasing agency to determine the length of individual sentences. It said "severe restrictions" should be placed on experimental programs involving use of drugs or behavior modification techniques on inmates.

Prisoners should be allowed to exercise many civil and political rights now denied to them, it said. Generally, they should have the same rights as free citizens, "except where restrictions are necessary to insure orderly confinement or to protect the rights and safety of the prison community," it concluded.

The 600-page draft report was prepared by the ABA's Criminal Justice Section Joint Committee on the Legal Status of Prisoners and will be submitted in August, 1978, to the annual meeting of the lawyer group's House of Delegates.

"A prisoner's lack of financial resources has an unhealthy effect on his chances for success upon release," a summary of the report said, favoring constructive work for inmates whenever necessary.

They should be given the "opportunity to build a financial base for release as well as to gain skills necessary for existence in the free world," it said.

The Case of the Vanishing Tickets

By NAISMITH DARLINGEER

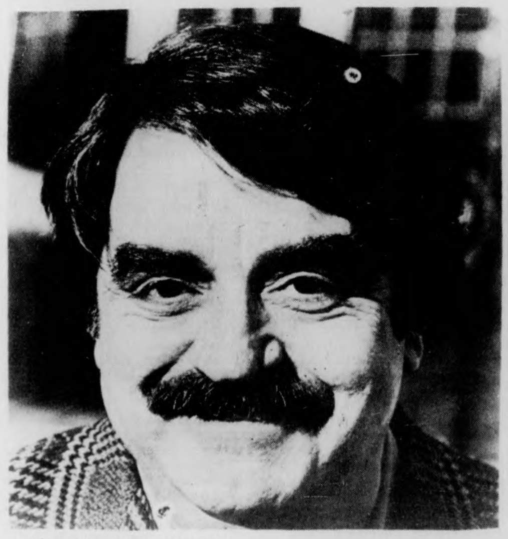
The seats are selling fast for "Sherlock Holmes" the Victorian melodrama by William Gillette which will be performed once and one time only at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at the University on Thursday night, April 28.

The plot is a classic thriller adapted from two Holmes' short stories, "A Scandal in Bohemia" and "The Final Problem" by the creator of Sherlock Holmes, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

From Baker Street to the Stepney Gas Chamber, from the lair of the evil genius, Professor Moriarty to Dr. Watson's Kensington consulting room, the scene is familiar Holmes territory; London drawing rooms and velvet fog that blanketed the city during the 1890's.

John Michlaski as the great sleuth and Kurt Kasznar as his arch enemy Moriarty are directed by Tony Tanner in this completely new and redesigned production which was originally staged by the Royal Shakespeare Company in London, 1973 and later moved to Broadway.

Don't "purloin"! The stage has been redesigned for this special performance decreasing the number of seats that can be sold. Thus this "case of identity" has set a limit to the number of tickets for $5, 4, and 3 at the Fine Arts box office from 9 to 4 Monday through Thursday. For more information call 545-2511.



Kurt Kasznar, who will star as Professor Moriarty, in "Sherlock Holmes", Thursday night at the Fine Arts Center.

Welfare reform stalled; Moynihan blasts HEW

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The administration's welfare reform plan, scheduled for unveiling May 1, has been shunted aside until fall, an angry Sen. Daniel Moynihan, D-N.Y., revealed yesterday.

Moynihan, an expert on the subject and author of the Democratic party platform welfare plank, said presidential adviser Stuart Eizenstat told him the legislation will be sent to Congress in the fall, and by the first of May, the Health, Education and Welfare Department will issue a statement of principles instead of complete legislative proposals.

"This is HEW at it again," Moynihan said. "They produce wonderful books on how you can not do it." He said a person "with a first-rate mind and three months experience could draft legislation in a morning."

Moynihan said the statement of principles is already embodied in the party's platform adopted at the national convention last summer.

Senate majority leader Robert Byrd said Saturday that action on welfare will be delayed until next year because of the urgency of President Carter's energy package.

Byrd told Moynihan on the Senate floor Monday that welfare reform is a top priority of the leadership and "it is conceivable that the Senate could begin action on the bill by January."

Moynihan said welfare reform was a "fundamental pledge of the President and our party" and that Carter made a commitment during the campaign "that the cost of welfare will be taken out of the budget of cities."

"But I don't want to lose out because we have a new and glamorous crisis. This is just as demanding an issue as energy and has been damanding much longer," he said.

State to sue Chicopee over 766

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (UPI) — Massachusetts Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti filed suit Monday against Chicopee officials charging them with failure to implement the state's special education laws.

In the suit filed in Hampden Superior Court, Bellotti charged the Chicopee School Board with failure to provide funding for Chapter 766, the special education statute.

He also charged the panel with failure to conduct core evaluations on Chicopee students and with failure to conduct meetings on the special education program in compliance with the state Open Meeting law.

Power plants may switch to coal

BOSTON (AP) — Owners of power plants in six communities in Massachusetts and Connecticut were told by federal authorities Monday that they may be forced to convert to burning coal.

Some utility executives complained that such conversions would be too expensive, and New England Electric Co. said it would go to federal court later this week to try to block the proposed order.

Bottle bill dies; flip tops to go

BOSTON (UPI) — The bottle bill died in the Massachusetts Senate yesterday but the Dukakis administration officials said they would consider filing another version of the same bill depending, in part, on the outcome of two special Senate elections.

In what was little more than a few crumbs thrown to environmentalists who had fought for the bill, the Senate gave initial approval on a 19-14 roll call to a measure banning cans with throwaway fliptop openers. The bill would take effect in June 1978.

Carter-Hussein talks begin

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter warned that "it would be a mistake to be too optimistic" about Middle East peace prospects as he greeted King Hussein of Jordan at a White House welcoming ceremony yesterday.

"If we fail this year, it is going to be very difficult to marshal an effort next year," Carter told Hussein at the start of their first session in the Oval Office.

Hussein, the third Middle East leader to come here, said Jordan is ready "to play its full part in the quest for a just and lasting settlement."

Death row author gets life

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — "Death Row Author" Edgar H. Smith Jr., 43, was sentenced to life in prison Monday for the kidnaping and attempted murder of a seamstress.

As Superior Court Judge Gilbert Harelson pronounced sentence, Smith argued for a new trial or for examination at a state hospital to determine whether he is a mentally disordered sex offender.

Attny. Gen. seeks new FBI rules

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Attorney General Griffin Bell rejected FBI pleas Monday that he halt prosecution of an agent charged with making illegal investigations but proposed to set up "fail-proof" guidelines for the future.

Carter convinces majority

NEW YORK (AP) — In two television appearances last week, President Carter convinced 54 per cent of the public that there really was an energy crisis, according to a Gallup poll in the current issue of Newsweek Magazine.

Metric switch for highways slated: 1982

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Federal Highway Administration said Monday it will propose a $100 million program to convert the nation's road signs to metric by 1982, with new speed limit signs to be in place by September of next year.

There would be no provision for simultaneous English and metric listings, a spokesman said, because "it's our feeling it's better to go cold turkey on it and get the public to adjust quickly."

There would, however, be an intensive government education program prior to the first change.

The Sept. 30, 1978, date, in addition to being the deadline for changing the miles-per-hour signs, would be the date by which vertical clearance signs for overpasses would have to be in metric.

The next change would be warning and regulatory signs, the type which suggest speed on curves and so on. They would be switched by Sept. 30, 1980.

The Ultimate schism

Just as they did last year, Ultimate Frisbee players from as far away as Michigan will converge on Amherst this Friday to vie for the right to be called champion. This year, however, there is an extra incentive for the teams participating.

The winning team will not only be able to call itself the champion of the Eastern half of the country, but will also receive an all-expenses paid trip to Pasadena, California in August. There, they will meet the Western Champion in the Rose Bowl during the World Frisbee Championships (August 24-29) to decide the national championship.

While UMass, Amherst College and Hampshire College will be hosting the Eastern Championships, only Amherst and Hampshire played well enough this semester to gain entry to "the games". And to use the term "the games" for this championship is at once, both appropriate to describe the expected caliber of play and indicative of the continued development of the game of Ultimate Frisbee.

While last year's championship here was described by the International Frisbee Association's Director Dan "the Stork" Roddick as the manifestation of Ultimate's developing schizoid nature, this year's championship will be the manifestation of an increasingly competitive sport. Except for a few isolated pockets of resistance (such as the UMass Frisbee Club) the game has become decidedly competitive in nature, rather than just fun.

Daryl Elliott is the UMass Frisbee Club IFA liaison and budget coordinator and a co-instructor, with Dan Habeeb, of the Physical Education Department's Frisbee course. He has said, concerning the possible limitation of the UMass inter-collegiate Ultimate Frisbee team in order to improve the quality of play, "An argument against limiting the team might be that, while Frisbee at UMass has been an alternative sport played in an alternative manner, if we limit the team, it will only be an alternative sport."

Last year the UMass team was invited to the championship because the host teams were guaranteed entry. At that time the club voted to limit the UMass team that would play in the opening game to a certain number of people that had attended almost all of the UMass games during the semester. The limiting was done solely on the basis of attendance and only for UMass' first game in the tournament. It was a grueling decision then, and now, as the team again thinks about limiting, it will be no less grueling.

There are good reasons for limiting the team. The quality of play would increase and show twofold benefits. Increased quality would give opposing teams a more competitive game and also make it more fun for our veteran players who enjoy a good game and become frustrated by playing with rookies just learning the game. It also would alleviate the problem of having twice as many people show up for home games as show up for away games which prevents everyone from getting enough playing time during home games.

However, while preliminary club voting returns show those people who have played Ultimate to be very much in favor of limiting the team, it is not an easy decision for each of them to make. Even though there have been intramural teams set up all over campus, including a women's team, to guarantee every player adequate playing time, most Frisbee players tend to be wary of any type of exclusion because it seems contrary to the cooperative nature of the sport as established in its early stages.

The UMass players also take pride in the fact that the decision is such a hard one for them to make because it points us out as being less restrictive than other teams which have a captain or coach limit a team unilaterally. Also, unlike other teams, UMass Frisbee players do not believe the two notions of being an alternative sport that is fun to play and being a quality team that will give its opposition good competition to be mutually exclusive.

While other teams have resolved their schisms by becoming more like traditional sports in their style of play and supportive of the quality play argument, UMass is attempting to incorporate both fun and quality into its future.

Regardless of their competitive nature, many of the teams that will be playing in the Championship remain enjoyable to play Frisbee with.

Hampshire, Amherst, UConn and either Brown or Brandeis will represent New England. Princeton, Glassboro, Rutgers West, Columbia and Webb will represent the New York City-New Jersey area.

Penn State, the pre-tourney favorite, Cornell, Bucknell and Rennselear Polytechnic Institute will represent Pennsylvania and up-state New York. And Kalamazoo, Michigan State and an undetermined team will represent that area of the midwest.

Despite any internal doubts and schizoid rifts, the players that will begin their games on the UMass Intramural Fields Friday afternoon will be doing some phenomenal things with flying discs and it will be a great weekend for Frisbee throughout the Amherst area.

Support the level funding rally

Numerous words have been written and spoken about level funding and the effects it will have on UMass if it is passed. Now it's time to do something about it.

If the state legislature should pass Governor Dukakis' proposed budget, it could spell the beginning of the end of quality higher education in Massachusetts. The kinds of drastic program cuts that characterize Provost Puryear's much-criticized report are what we can expect to suffer if level funding becomes a reality.

Now we must ask how students can mobilize to combat the proposed budget. A good start would be attending today's level funding rally at noon in front of the Student Union. A healthy show of numbers today will make it clear to the powers that be that students are not prepared to be passive recipients of their plan for the university's future. The rally will also serve to open up discussion of what other actions can be taken.

Students should not make the mistake of assuming that they'll be graduating before things get really tough. Dukakis' level funding budget is for fiscal year 1978 — and that isn't very far off. To meet these budget demands will require making major cuts far in advance of Puryear's "five-year" outlook. Students in Asian Studies should wonder if their department will be in existence by the time they graduate. Students in the School of Business should wonder if SBA will still be accredited when they are ready to leave.

The rally today will hopefully mark the meeting and cooperation of various groups that have a definite stake in the UMass budget — students, faculty, and staff. A large and diverse group of individuals and organizations have expressed their support of the rally. Without a unified effort the university will once again find itself divided into factions, all scrapping amongst themselves for a bigger piece of the much-diminished pie.

The battle against level funding will obviously have to be carried on at a number of levels — in the legislature, in the households of state taxpayers, on campus and with administrators. But the backbone of student power is student participation. Without your strong support the battle is a futile one.

What to do about budget cuts

To the Editor:

UMass' moment of truth is upon us. The Legislature has scheduled final consideration of the UMass budget for May 4. They will then determine whether we will get the University's 76.4 million dollar budget or Dukakis' suggested 68.1 million dollar level-funding. This decision will affect us all: students, faculty, administration and staff.

We have already felt the effects of past budget cuts! A 15 per cent staff vacancy rate has led to an increased workload for staff and decreased services for students. The Nursing Program, the School of Business Administration, Health Sciences and School of Hotel and Restaurant Management are unable to accept new majors. The offices of the Registrar and Financial Aid are understaffed and forced to close on Wednesdays.

Our future based on the Dukakis budget is grim. Think of the Puryear Report. Other possible cuts include: the layoff of between 500-600 staff and faculty, the elimination of special programs such as the Residential Colleges, the Honors Program, CCEBS, Global Survival and Rhetoric and cutbacks in many academic departments.

This university is being annihilated! It is time for all of us who are concerned about UMass to put aside our differences and join together against the budget cuts!

WE CAN attend the Rally against budget cuts Tuesday, April 26, in front of the S.U.B.

WE CAN write or phone our state legislators and have our friends and family do the same.

WE CAN attend the meeting of Students United for Public Education, Thursday, April 28, at 7:30 in the Campus Center to learn more.

WE CAN STOP BUDGET CUTS!

Slavic department's offerings

To the Editor:

The Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures informs the students of this University that for the nth time in a row the Course Description Guide "forgot" to publish the information of the Department's courses, dutifully hand carried and delivered on time to the Academic Affairs Committee (Office of the Provost) under the editorship of Jack Leader.

At a time when student enrollments play such an important role in the allocation of resources — and at a time when the Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures is under tremendous pressures to increase enrollments, we consider this "forgetfulness" — repeated from year to year — an act coming close to sabotage. We register our strongest protest against this kind of discriminatory treatment, and will see to it that the people responsible for this action be called to responsibility.

In the meantime we would like to inform the student body that the Department is offering courses in Russian, Polish and Czech languages, a variety of courses in Russian literature, both in translation and in the original, and courses pertaining to the Slavic and East European Area studies program. A detailed description of these courses will be published in the Collegian.

Fight Apartheid racism: On May Day in Boston

To the Editor:

The apartheid system of South Africa is a system of race separation where Black people are deprived of all rights in their own country. Today in South Africa, millions of Africans — young and old, men and women — have been uprooted from their lands and herded into camps called Bantustans. Based on apartheid, Africans are forced to work in factories, farms, and mines to create huge profits for white-owned corporations.

U.S. owned corporations like G.M., Ford, Chrysler, General Electric, Goodyear, Union Carbide, Mobil, Exxon and First National Bank of Boston, to name a few of the more than 300 doing 'business as usual' in South Africa, make billions of dollars from the forced labor of the people in Southern Africa, and they want to keep it that way. These are the same corporations and banks that perpetuate racism and rip off students and workers here at home. This hated system of apartheid is being challenged all over Southern Africa and throughout the world. The people are struggling for freedom and self-determination. Just as students here at UMass are fighting against the University of Massachusetts $548,000 worth of investments in South Africa through their holdings in 16 U.S. corporations based in that country.

May 1 — MAY DAY — is a day when working people and progressive people around the world come together to demonstrate solidarity in their struggle for freedom and liberation. This year, on April 30, the Saturday before May Day, we will strike a blow against apartheid in Africa, which will also be a blow against the racist mobilization taking place in Boston. The same bosses who profit from apartheid in the diamond mines of South Africa also profit from racism and the exploitation of students, working and poor people here.

When we face unemployment, inflation, budget cuts, university cutbacks in Third World study programs, and a declining standard of living, banks find it more profitable to invest in racist South Africa than in our deteriorating cities, universities, and local communities. First National Bank of Boston, for example, lent $30 million through its South African subsidiary alone to develop the South African economy, while forcing cutbacks in schools, hospitals and other community services.

On April 30, there will be a massive demonstration to demand [1] Jobs at Home, Not Wars Abroad, [2] U.S. out of Africa, and [3] Victory to the Liberation Forces. The demonstration will begin at 12 noon and will assemble on the Boston Commons [Across from the State House] for initial activities. We will then March to a Rally to take place at the Arlington Street Church [Corner Arlington & Boylston] at 2 p.m. For people who want to attend from the Northampton - Amherst - Greenfield area, we are forming a contingent and a car caravan to leave the area at approximately 8 a.m. Saturday morning. If people want more information, need rides or can provide rides, please call 584-3862 and ask for Billie. It is important that the Western Massachusetts area make as large a showing as is possible. This demonstration March and Rally has been endorsed by the Univ. of Mass Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa as well as other area groups. Down with Racism from Boston to South Africa.

Of hickory and Justice White

There is a specie of child that has never been spanked. Raised by so-called progressive parents he has never known the horror of contemplating mother's shattered antique vase, the baseball you had fired at brother now lying placidly midst the ruin. He hadn't caught it, but you will. He has never sat petrified in his bedroom waiting for father to come home. He has never heard the front door open, creaking like death, and then the muted conversation in the front hall. He has never screamed to the heavens as father's hairbrush crashed down on quivering buttocks.

Although I was never partial to spanking as a child, I didn't turn into the twisted, drooling cretin that progressive child experts predicted I would become. Follow the logical consequences technique advised Dr. Loren Gray. If a child plays up and refuses to go to bed don't give him a good cuff on the ear, instead, let him stay up. The next morning wake him up at the usual time and, presumably, the exhausted brat will see the error of his ways. Of course, after a month of this indulgence, the kid is hooked on Tom Snyder and becomes really screwed up.

It is obvious that Justice Byron White was such an unfortunate child. For it was he that wrote the dissenting opinion last Tuesday on spanking in school. The court ruled that the constitutional prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment did not extend to teachers spanking children. Justice Lewis Powell offered the majority view, "This judgement must be viewed in the light of the disciplinary problems commonplace in the schools." Bully for him! But what of Justice White?

He thought kids were getting a bum deal, and by way of some bizarre pattern of reasoning, concluded that "If it is impermissable to cut off someone's ear for the commission of murder, it must be unconstitutional to cut off a child's ear for being late to class." Later on in his dissent he equated spanking to the use of thumb screws and the garotte (a real show-stopper, incidentally, which slowly strangles the criminal, or in this case, child).

Taking Justice White's gift of analogy a step further, one wonders what would hapen to the miscreant who not only was late to class, but missed it altogether. He is the class cutter who would just as soon shoot craps or bet on the color of Sally's underclothing as attend lecture. Would he be put in stocks or boiled? Would he be flogged or have flaming bamboo slivers shoved under his nails? There is no limit to the human mind's capacity for thinking up vile and gruesome tortures. At least there's no limit to my capacity for thinking up some painful gems, but some other time.

For now, let us confine ourselves to spanking. Returning to the class cutter, we assume him caught. If we adhere to the logical consequences technique endorsed by Dr. Gray and adopted by his protege Justice White, the following should occur. The principal would show our good-for-nothing friend pictures of the bowery, Skid Row, and UMass at Boston. Seeing these the youth would supposedly return to the straight and narrow. More likely he would foresee any of these places as his eventual destination and enjoy himself while there's still time. "Six of the best" however would do the job. Fearing further encounters with the hickory stick he would go to every class. Remember Justice White, by burning the buttocks, we fan the flames of knowledge.

In praise of Diana Ramos

To the Editor:

In a student body as diverse as the one here at UMass, the need for programs to enhance cultural consciousness is as essential to education as academia. In this light, it has been brought to our attention that the professional capabilities of Diana Ramos, an instructor in Afro-American dance, have been questioned.

Diana has only been here for four years but it did not take long for her reputation as a creative, black dance artist to spread throughout the Valley. Currently her classes are crowded with students of varied background, eager to explore the dimensions of Afro-American dance.

The following letter is a student's response to the unique exposure she has received in Diana's class.

I began studying dance with Diana Ramos after hearing so much about her exceptional classes. In a two hour period, Diana Ramos manages to divide the class time among dance technique, personal development [physical and intellectual] and the history of black culture.

The technique training is hard and vigorous. As a serious student of dance, I feel I have finished this semester's classes with Miss Ramos with more confidence and applicable dance knowledge ...

In the five college area, Diana Ramos is the only faculty person offering a third world dance theatre course. Being a non-third world person, this is the only opportunity I have had to study Black dance.

I am counting on continuing my dance experience with Diana Ramos throughout my education here at UMass.

In an area which encourages a progressive atmosphere and learning experience, Diana Ramos offers an alternative, essential learning experience here at the University.

Students who have been in contact with the unique dynamics of Diana Ramos' class are demonstrating their appreciation to her by circulating a petition in her behalf.

Copies of it will be on hand at today's rally. Included in the petition will be more specific information on Ms. Ramos' position here.

Diana Ramos will be reading a personal statement in her own behalf tonight at 9 p.m. on WMUA. Members of her classes will be speaking with her as well.

Art, dance and culture develop our humanity. Students are in need!

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, April 26 — Born today, you are an alert, independent and extremely original individual who may have more than a little trouble fitting in with the "average" person. You do not enjoy being part of the multitude trudging along a well-worn pathway to certain success of medium degree. You would far prefer to go after success in your own time and manner, even if this means that the success you gain is less than it might be otherwise. For you, there is a vast difference between quality and quantity; to gain any goal and have it measurable only on the latter standard is for you extremely disappointing. On the other hand, you can be made ecstatic over some attainment that is small according to the measure for quantity but of considerably greater size when measured against a standard of quality.

Your independence of spirit is your constant contribution to any group gathering. While others wait to be told what to do, you wait to be asked -- and should the request for leadership not come quickly enough to suit you, you will, in all probability, volunteer to guide others in the best direction in terms of ultimate material profit and spiritual satisfaction. You do not consider yourself a success on the grounds of material gain alone; you need to feel that both you and those in your charge have achieved some level of personal satisfaction through a job well done before you are willing to rest contented.

You have a very strong built-in moral sense. You do not confuse that, however, with your sense of what is socially acceptable and what is not. You realize that what will do in society may not do at all in the annals of your human conscience.

Wednesday, April 27

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Your present way of doing things may not be conducive to the kind of gain you've been hoping for. Tighten up your schedule.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Your notions of humanitarianism may be quite out of line with your actions. Try to bring together what you believe and what you do.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Take care that you are not unwittingly laying a trap for another. If you want to criticize, do so openly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A recent setback, though it must be taken seriously, need not keep you from enjoying further fruits of your efforts. Socialize in the evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — A number of minor goals may be achieved today. Don't insist upon moving directly toward another phase of your work; take the long way around.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Self-expression may help you to a more peaceful frame of mind. It may also, however, bring surprising setbacks to another.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Discriminate among your friends today to discover which of them best suits your needs at this time. Be tactful verbalizing your choice.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Bring your psychic abilities into play today if you hope to get the jump on the competition.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your affiliations with others, regardless of the strength or type, must be looked upon with suspicion early in the day. All's well at evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Keep attuned to forces outside yourself. Otherwise, you may find that you have missed out on an opportunity for gain.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Determine the type of success you are after -- and then go after it. This is an excellent day for gaining important support.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Clarify your position to others before you begin to make demands upon them. Authority rests upon permission to be authoritarian.

NBA refs return to work

NEWYORK [UPI] — The National Basketball Association's striking referees reached agreement on a new contract with the league yesterday and will return to work for tonight's playoffs.

The referees had stopped work on the final day of the regular season two weeks ago in a dispute over their association's status as a union. They also wanted to negotiate a contract that would include this year's playoffs along with next year's regular season.

During the two-week strike, the NBA hired officials from the Eastern League, college and amateur ranks to work with two non-striking NBA referees, Earl Strom and Richie Powers. The interim refs, however, were criticized greatly by the NBA players and coaches.

"We are pleased the strike is over," said Simon P. Gourdine, deputy commissioner of the NBA and labor negotiator for the league. "The referees have agreed to return to work without a contract. Next year's contract will be negotiated during the off-season.

"While the referees have finally agreed with our long-standing position that we should not negotiate under pressure of the playoffs, we do not view this as a victory for the NBA alone. We consider it a victory for everyone concerned — the league, players, referees and fans."

Gourdine said he had instructed all regular referees to return to work tonight. He said he would contact all of the substitute referees to personally thank them for helping out under trying circumstances.

"These referees did an outstanding job in a high-pressure situation," said Gourdine. "We appreciate their efforts and their high degree of capability which was so evident. Their applications to become regular NBA officials will receive the most careful consideration prior to the beginning of next season."

Bosox win nightcap; split with Toronto

TORONTO [UPI] — Dwight Evans scored the winning run on Rick Burleson's sacrifice fly with the bases loaded in the eighth inning yesterday to give the Boston Red Sox a 6-5 victory in the nightcap over Toronto after Otto Velez' two homers gave the Blue Jays a 4-3 triumph.

Boston's Carlton Fisk was thrown out at the plate attempting to score on a single by Butch Hobson to start the eighth, but the Rex Sox loaded the bases and Burleson delivered the tie-breaking run with his sacrifice fly.

Rick Miller drove home Evans in the fourth for Boston's first run, but it was a four-run seventh that enabled the Red Sox to tie the game at 5-5. Evans led off with a double and scored on a single by Miller. Burleson then singled, sending Miller to third and Denny Doyle delivered a run-scoring double. Jim Rice then brought in Burleson and Doyle with a two-run double.

Bob Bailor scored twice for Toronto in the second game.

In the first game, Velez hit his second homer of the game, a two-run shot, in the eighth inning to give the Toronto Blue Jays a 4-3 victory over the Red Sox in the first game.

Velez, who homered in the fifth inning, connected off reliever Bill Campbell in the eighth after a run-scoring single by Al Woods. The homer was his fifth of the season and helped reliever Pete Vuckovich pick up the triumph.

The Red Sox took a 1-0 in the fifth inning when Butch Hobson singled, stole second and scored on a two-out single by Rick Burleson, but Velez knotted the score in the fifth.

George Scott put Boston ahead 2-1 in the sixth with a solo homer.

Pazik fractures legs in head-on collision

MINNEAPOLIS [UPI] — Big southpaw pitcher Mike Pazik of the Minnesota Twins yesterday suffered fractures of both legs and reliever Don Carrithers received fractures of the wrist and knee in a head-on traffic collision.

The Twins said Pazik, 27, who has a 1-0 record this year, was in "good post-surgical condition" but will be out the rest of the season. Carrithers, 27, with a wrist fracture in his right pitching arm, will be out "at least two to three months."

The accident occurred about four hours after the pitchers returned home with the Twins following Sunday's 12-6 victory over the Texas Rangers at Arlington, Tex. Police said Carrithers' van collided with a car traveling the wrong way on a freeway exit ramp.

Dr. Harvey O'Phelan, operating surgeon at Fairview Southdale Hospital, said Pazik was in the passenger seat without the protection of a seatbelt. He said Pazik, 6-3 and 186 pounds, was jammed under the dashboard and broke both bones in both legs between the knee and ankle.

He suffered a compound fracture of the left leg and both legs were put in long casts. He had no head injury except for a bruise on the forehead.

Randle faces trial

ORLANDO, Fla. [UPI] — Suspended Texas Rangers' infielder Len Randle was named yesterday in a warrant charging him with aggravated battery, a felony, for allegedly beating Rangers' manager Frank Lucchesi on March 28, authorities said.

A spokesman for the Orange County Sheriff's department said Randle was being sought out-of-state, in either Arlington, Tex., or Arizona, where the ballplayer has a home. The charge carries a bond of $2,500.

Lucchesi suffered a fractured cheekbone when Randle allegedly hit him at Tinker Field, shortly before the Rangers were to play the Minnesota Twins in a spring training game.

Randle, apparently disgruntled about losing his second baseman's job to rookie Bump Wills, was suspended for 30 days after the incident.

Lucchesi said in a hospital interview after the incident that it was "a sneak attack — worse than Pearl Harbor."

Randle's suspension is up tomorrow, but Rangers' officials have said he'll never play for the team again. They have been trying to trade or sell him, but apparently without much success.

The sheriff's spokesman said the charge, a second degree felony, carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison or a $10,000 fine, or both.

Spring football

Gridders preparing for new season

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

UMass football coach Dick MacPherson yesterday sat in the inner confines of his replica-filled office and reflected upon his teams performance in spring football practice to date.

The Minutemen, who have been practicing for the past two weeks, have three out of their 15 NCAA allotted practice sessions remaining. The team, which had yesterday off, will resume drills today before holding its customary player selected draft for the annual spring football game tomorrow and resuming practice on Thursday. Saturday the squad will close camp with the popular spring intrasquad game.

"We've had the best weather since I've been here," MacPherson said, "the fields are in great shape and we got that rainy day on Saturday to give us a chance to slop around in the mud."

Along with the weather, MacPherson has also been pleased with the over-all performance of his players. The purpose for the spring session is to give the coaches a chance to assess their teams strength at each position. The over-all outlook is positive, although depth could once again become a problem if the team runs into health problems.

The Minutemen, who finished with a .500 record last fall, have 24 lettermen returning to a team which may be facing one of their toughest schedules ever. However, just 10 of those returning were starters in the season finale last season.

"We know just about where we're at by this point," said MacPherson. "I've been especially pleased with the performance of our offensive line and defensive secondary. Not only do we have quality but real depth in both of those areas.

"I've also been happy with the work of both the defensive line and our linebackers. However, I think we might lack the necessary depth that we need from those positions."

The offense, which staggered at times last season, will be under the direction of a new quarterback. Brian McNally has been lost to graduation and at this point it appears Mike Fallon, who saw limited action last fall, has the inside track on the glamorous position.

"Mike's had an exceptional spring for us," praised MacPherson, "and our other boy (Mike McEvilly whose playing varsity baseball) isn't with us."

The other two positions in the offensive backfield are a pleasing thought to the head coach, who is entering his seventh year at UMass.

"We've got to be happy knowing we've got (John) Romboli, (Dennis) Dent, and (Billy) Coleman returning for another season," said MacPherson. "And 'Hank the Tank' Sareault looks like a true varsity ballplayer after spending two season's with the JV's." We haven't seen anything real consistent out of the halfback spot, (which will be missing the presence of Rick Jessamy, last season's second leading rusher) though."

A main concern for MacPherson will be the receiving corps, which lacked the necessary speed to present a threat to any defensive secondaries last season. Tight end, Kevin Cummings was the team's most prolific threat before receiving a knee injury during the Rutger's contest last fall. Cumming's has not taken part in any contact drills this spring, but he has been working himself back into playing condition.

The negative aspect of the spring drills is, of course, the injury report, an aspect of the game that MacPherson believes his team must stay away from.

"We lost offensive tackle, Ross Schubarth with a broken hand on the sixteenth and defensive tackle John Willis broke his hand during an intramural basketball game," informed MacPherson. And Steve Telander, who was injured last season didn't dress."

"This had been a great camp over-all, though," said the smiling coach. "It's really helped the attitude of this football team."

Netmen face Chiefs today; as NE championships near

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis coach Bill Brown is going to have a tough time concentrating on today's match at Springfield College. The New England Championships at Amherst College start Friday and although UMass has to contend with Springfield and SUNY Albany before then, Brown can't keep his thoughts from wandering to the gala event at Amherst.

"It's great exposure," Brown said. "There will be something like 60 schools at the New England's."

Brown seemed enchanted with the impressive competition at the New Englands as well as his team's chance to match its talent with the best.

"The tops have to be Harvard, Yale and Dartmouth," he said. "But after them, who knows?"

Brown has secret desires to break up the Ivy League's monopoly in New England tennis. Such hopes, however, may be futile. The Ivy schools have dominated New England tennis for years. In addition to a prestegious name, an Ivy League school has a generous tennis budget to lure recruits. To no one's surprise, UMass does not.

"We can't forget about the Springfield match, though," Brown reminded himself.

The Minutemen should have little trouble with Springfield today. Only a minor mishap, like the end of the world, could deter UMass from victory.

The Minutemen are still flying high from their 5-4 win over Boston College on Sunday. The Chiefs will need a supreme effort, and perhaps a natural disaster, to bring UMass down to earth.

"You have the best team we've played all year," BC coach Mike McDonell told Brown after the match. BC was 13-1 going into Sunday's match.

With the exception of some sloppy doubles play in their loss to Tufts, the Minutemen have played superbly all season. Erratic doubles play could trouble UMass in the New England's, but it is not likely to be a factor today. The UMass record is 4-1.

Springfield's record is 3-4, including a 9-0 loss to BC. Despite the unimpressive record, Brown refuses to take Springfield lightly. Last year, UMass' 5-4 win over the Chiefs came in the last match of the day.

Brown said he was pleased that Ricky Sharton and Barnaby Kalan were "breaking out" of their early season slumps. Sharton and Kalan lost their first two singles matches, but are well on the recovery road. Sharton is now 2-3 on the season. Kalan is 3-2.

"We've been playing like a team lately," Brown said. "When someone like Alan (Green) loses, Barnaby and Ricky come through."

Softballers lose in 10th; suffer season's first loss

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

BRIDGEWATER — Unfortunately, all good things in life and sports have to come to an end sooner or later. That's just the way the ball bounces, there is nothing you can do about it.

For the UMass softball team, the ball bounced the wrong way, as the Minutewomen had their seven-game winning streak snapped yesterday afternoon when Bridgewater St. handed them a heartbreaking 4-3, 10-inning defeat.

Bridgewater managed to push across the winning run in the bottom of the 10th inning thanks to a leadoff walk and three singles. Mind you, the winning hit was nothing to write home about, just a bloop single that fell between UMass shortstop Sue DiRocco and left fielder Sue Peters.

Nevertheless, a hit is a hit and that bloop single did the Minutewomen in.

"Sure we are disappointed that we lost a game that we could have won," said Coach Diane Thompson, "but we have nobody to blame but ourselves.

"We got 10 hits in the game, so we were able to get the people on base. However, our big problem in the game was getting the clutch hits when the runners were in scoring position. We left 11 people on base and that really hurt us."

UMass jumped out to a quick, 1-0 lead in the first inning when Gail Carter knocked in a run on a base hit. Carol Bruce led the game off by reaching on an error and advanced to second on a single by DiRocco.

After Rhonda McManus walked to load the bases, Carter banged a single to center scoring Bruce.

Carter, who was UMass' starting pitcher, managed to keep the Bears off of the scoreboard, as they failed to mount any kind of offensive attack against her.

The Minutewomen increased their slim lead to 2-0 in the top of the seventh inning. DiRocco led the inning off with the second of her two hits on the day and advanced to second on Peters' first hit in the game.

Then Carter reached base when a Bridgewater fielder misplayed her grounder, which also allowed DiRocco to score from third.

But then all of a sudden in the bottom half of the inning, the roof fell in for UMass. In its last chance up, Bridgewater scored two runs on a single, triple and an error, enabling the Bears to tie the game, 2-2 and forcing it into extra innings.

"We were so close to winning the game," Thompson said. "Just when it appeared that we had the game, they come up in their last at-bat and tie the game up. It was really frustrating."

The Minutewomen broke the tie in the top of the ninth when Peters singled, stole second and eventually scored on a passed ball.

However, not to be outdone, Bridgewater came right back in the bottom of the ninth to tie the game once again behind three singles.

That set the stage for the following inning when the Bears won the game in dramatic fashion.

Even though Thompson is disappointed that her team's undefeated skein is now snapped, the first-year coach does foresee a silver lining from the day's happenings.

"Today's loss took a lot of pressure off of us," she said. "No longer do we have to worry about keeping our undefeated steak alive. Now we can just concentrate on playing good, sound softball."

Thompson said that the Minutewomen appeared to have been tight in the game's early going, as the winning streak may have been on the back of some of the player's minds.

In all, UMass scored three runs on 10 hits, while committing four errors, while Bridgewater scored four runs on 11 hits and committed three errors.

The Bears also left a lot of runners stranded, 12 in all, however when the hits were needed they got them.

UMass is now 7-1 on the season and the Minutewomen return to action on Wednesday afternoon when they travel to Storrs to play UConn in a make-up game.

Linksters jinxed; wrong card is culprit

By BOB HASKELL
Collegian Staff

The weather was lousy, the greens were terrible, and Lady Luck took the day off, as the UMass golf team watched two days of stellar golf get washed down the drain in yesterday's final round of the Salem State Invitational golf tournament.

The culprit was a seemingly innocent slip of the pen. Freshman Mark Powers, one of the Minutemen's finest performers of late, inadvertently scrawled a four where a five should have been on his scorecard, causing his scores to be disqualified.

The Minutemen had just put on a display of steady golf in edging Providence, 627-628, when the axe struck. Since it was Powers' impressive play that had helped put the team in that top position, UMass coach Fan Gaudette could not criticize the promising youngster too harshly.

"Mark is young and eager, and he's just gotta learn to check his card more closely," said a disappointed Gaudette after the match, "It was one of those things. Mark kept the scorecard for his group, and he got the total right, it was just that one hole he got wrong."

Unfortunately, that is all it takes.

The two day tournament was held under horrendous weather conditions, as the Essex County Country Club in Manchester, Mass., a good, testing course under ideal conditions, became a chamber of horrors for the golfers who had to wade through the carnage in search of a tiny white ball.

The weather was so bad on Sunday that the round was shortened to nine holes. The final 27 holes were played yesterday, although the weather did not improve by much. After the first 18-hole scores were finally in, Southeastern Massachusetts University was in the lead with a 318 total, followed closely by Central Connecticut with 319. UMass had 321.

"The course was terrible on Sunday," said Gaudette. "There was no way you could putt with any accuracy. A score of six or seven over par for nine holes was a good score. SMU was ahead, and their score was only two strokes short of a team average of 80."

The final round yesterday featured vastly improved scoring, especially where the Minutemen were concerned. Bob Sanderson led the attack with a solid 75, and was followed by a barrage of 77's by Jim McDermott, Flint Lincoln, and Powers. Their impressive 306 total was enough to overtake the leaders, but fate had other ideas.

Despite the sobering effect of disqualification, the quality of golf produced by the UMass squad is a good omen for better days to come. Gaudette isn't about to brood over this one for very long.

"Yeah, sure it's a tough way to lose," he said, "but I'm not bitter. The officials were right, Powers broke a rule and had to be disqualified. But our golf this weekend was positive. The guys know they can beat those teams now. We could win most tournaments with a 306."

The golfers' next obstacle to overcome before the crucial New England-NCAA qualifying tourney will be the Mass. State Tournament this coming Thursday at Stowe, Mass. Don't be surprised if the UMass team takes a little extra time totalling their scores from now on.

How Garber builds a winner

When one looks at the entire spectrum of UMass sports, without a doubt the two most successful, in terms of national competition, are the women's gymnastics team and the men's lacrosse team.

The gymwomen have finished among the top ten in the country for several years, and this season were number four in the nation. Five years ago, the gymwomen were the top team in the entire United States.

Garber's Gorillas, meanwhile, made the NCAA playoffs for the first time ever in 1976, and ended up as the sixth-best team in the country. This season, although facing their toughest schedule in history, the Gorillas are ninth-ranked, and may get another NCAA invite.

Of these two sports, only women's gymnastics is afforded the luxury of athletic scholarships. The men's lacrosse team, on the other hand, is not given any such compensation from the athletic department.

So the question naturally arises: How does coach Dick Garber end up with some of the best lacrosse players in the nation?

"We start on the premise that there must be people here who want to play lacrosse," Garber said. "We used to look for athletes who were proficient in other sports, and urged them to come on out and play lacrosse in the spring."

Garber managed to latch onto several outstanding lacrosse players this way, including current UMass coaches Bill Maxwell and Russ Kidd, who was formerly JV lacrosse coach.

"That system worked reasonably well," Garber added.

But in 1966, Garber was to give a speech which was to change the shape of UMass lacrosse irrevocably.

Garber spoke to a gathering in Long Island about his philosophy of athletics, which is that "athletics exist for the people who go to school." After the talk, a man named Pete Kuchinski approached Garber and said that he admired his values, and would encourage his athletes to attend UMass.

Kuchinski, a coach at Mineola, LI, encouraged several of his players, including all-America Tom Malone, to look into UMass' program, and many of the athletes came here. Thus was born 'the Long Island Connection.'

Another factor adding to the wealth of Long Island lacrosse talent to eventually find its way to UMass was one of Garber's former players, Mike Candell. Now a coach at Nassau County Community College, Candell has steered several of his players UMass' way. Some of the former NCCC stars now playing for Garber's Gorillas include Mickey Menna, Wayne Ament, and Randy Krutzler.

If Garber had his way, athletic scholarships would be totally abandoned. He is an admitted "idealist" regarding them.

However, this season Garber finds himself playing schools which do recruit heavily, among them Cornell, Brown, Dartmouth, Harvard, Hofstra, North Carolina, and Syracuse.

"Instead of sending form letters and brochures to all the high schools I hear from, I suggest to the coaches that they tell their athletes to write a letter to me, and then I will get back to them," Garber said of his own recruiting methods.

He remarked that many high school coaches wonder why Garber doesn't attend more of their games, but said that the only schoolboy game he attends are championship games, and then "only to see the games."

The coach added that many of his former players do unofficial recruiting for him, adding to the cycle of Long Island players coming to UMass.

"The things which bring a player to UMass are the good reputation of the school and team. We stress that the team has been successful, it's fun to play and we're dedicated to being good," Garber said.

"For many years, we had the highest graduation rate and team cum average of any sport on campus," Garber continued. "Those are things we're really proud of."

And that is something that more teams on campus should strive for. Perhaps athletes who are not given scholarships appreciate the little they do get, and play the sport for the love of it, rather than anything else. Meanwhile, they take advantage of the scholastic offerings of the school.

"I know I've 'lost' some athletes to other schools because of their scholarship programs," Garber said. "But I also know that i've gained some, too. Once I asked a player why he came to UMass instead of one of the many schools that recruited him.

" 'Coach,' he told me, 'you're the only one who didn't hassle me about my hair.' "

Also seeks Wood resignation

CAS asks Puryear to quit

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

The faculties of the College of Arts and Sciences last night voted to ask for the resignation of Vice-Chancellor and Provost Paul L. Puryear in a three and one half hour meeting attended by 350 faculty.

The meeting was held in Hasbrouck.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who attended the meeting along with Puryear and UMass President Robert C. Wood, termed the atmosphere of the meeting "frivolous" and said he had the fullest confidence in Puryear as an administrator.

On March 24 the provost released what he called a "preliminary" five year plan designed to reallocate faculty from what he judged to be departments of low student demand to areas which currently have enrollment pressures. The College of Arts and Sciences, whose faculty numbers 630 members, would lose 44 teaching positions, according to the provost's projections. Two of the 25 departments in the college, Asian Studies and Slavic Languages, were to be phased out by fiscal year 1982.

The vote is not binding, since the group is not a recognized campus governance body.

The vote followed an emotional three hour debate among the faculty, which ended with 224 votes cast to "express no confidence in the provost as chief academic officer, and request that he be removed from that office forthwith". Seventy faculty voted against it.

The faculty voted down the inclusion of Bromery in a similar motion because of the "tenor" of the way he deals with faculty.

Puryear had no comment on the action.

The Arts and Sciences faculty also approved a motion demanding the five-year plan conform with "established governance procedures" in personnel decisions and academic planning. The faculty charged they had not been given adequate participation in the formulation of the document, being used to make tenure decisions this year.

Following the no confidence vote for the provost, the faculty overwhelmingly dealt Wood parallel treatment with a 267-19 vote asking for his resignation.

Wood, who left prior to the vote, said in a telephone interview later the "feelings of the faculty are clearly understandable.

"I believe the sentiment is being misdirected toward Whitmore, the president's office and the trustees," he said. "I would hope the faculty would now consider the substance of the tentative plan and not its author."

Political Science Prof. David A. Booth defended the motions for proper governance procedures and disapproval of the provost, originally grouped as a three-part motion.

"With some hesitation and reluctance, but with the greatest conviction, I find myself here tonight," Booth said.

He charged the provost's plan is an "overt violation" of faculty

Latin Americans condemn SGA

By ANN TRENEMAN
and JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

While 600 UMass students and labor representatives rallied for unity against proposed budget cuts yesterday, members of a Latin-American group blasted the Student Government Association (SGA) for slashing their budget.

"You can't be against level funding and at the same time cut budgets yourself. The Senate meeting will not end tomorrow night if we do not get our budget," said Miguel Rivera, representing the Spanish-speaking umbrella group, Ahora.

Rivera also joined other speakers in denouncing Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' "level funding" proposal as disastrous for public higher education.

Twenty minutes into the rally Rivera was asked to "speak in the spirit of unity" after he and 32 other Latin students staged a "counter protest" on the library steps.

Speeches by other speakers focused on the implications of level funding and the provost's five-year plan. Strong calls for unity among all factions of the University resurfaced in all speeches.

William Lazarus, representing the Budget Cuts Task Force, called for students, faculty, and staff to form a network in order to "be there and say something."

"Who represents us in the state legislature? Bob Wood? Would you buy a used car from Bob Wood?" screamed Lazarus. "Every year we lose a little bit more. Today, all of a sudden, it's here."

Dukakis' level funding proposal allocates $68.1 million for UMass in fiscal year (FY) 1978, a figure which doesn't take inflation and other increased costs into account. The legislature is scheduled to vote on level funding May 4th, but due to a delayed schedule the vote will probably wait until summer.

Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) representative Bruce Laurie stressed the need for united action against the state and UMass administration.

"We can only lobby among ourselves, not with the administration. Lots of these people are in the same beds; they share the same interests. No one can tell us what our interests are," he said.

Lazslo Tikos, from the Slavic Languages Dept., and Richard Minear representing the Asian Studies program leveled their barbs against Provost Paul L. Puryear's plan. The five-year plan would eliminate both departments.

Minear countered charges that Asian Studies should be eliminated because they are not needed in the job market.

"Half the world's population lives in Asia. If we had a better background there, the three major wars we've fought in Asia might have had radically different outcomes," he said.

John Bracey, of the Afro-American Studies department was equally angered.

"We cannot allow racism to divide us; unite and save the University. That is what our goal is," Bracey said.

Following Bracey's brief speech, several students of Diana Ramos, a black dance professor recently denied tenure, blasted the UMass administration for their refusal to "hear the needs of the Third World people on campus."

"They're telling us we have no right to be taught about people of other cultures," said Kathe Sandler, a UMass student.

Sam Bowles, an Economics professor, surveyed the economic trends behind budget cuts. Citing the capitalist's system's emphasis on marketable skills instead of education he urged people to "know who our enemies are and who are friends are.

"An invisible hand turns into the invisible finger and we get screwed," Bowles said.

Pinky Batiste, co-president of the SGA, Sherry Flashman, representing the Graduate Students Employes Union (GSEU), Paul M. Cronin, student senator, and Susan Birmingham of the Student Organizing Project (SOP), delivered similar criticisms and proposals during the two hour rally.

'It's not gonna work'

One of the 17,506 UMass undergraduates paused in front of the Student Union building's round steps yesterday and spit. "Oh yeah," he said, nodding toward the woman speaker at the rally. "It's a real nice idea. Sure. Nice unity. 'Cept it's not gonna f ----ing work. No way." He picked up his booksack and started away towards the library. "People in Boston aren't going to listen to this shit. Now, If I had some of the guns I had in the Navy ... "

"Naw, I ain't expecting any trouble from this group here. looks pretty quiet. It's just me and the chief here today, that's all. No problem." The UMass Department of Public Safety office plugged his walkie-talkie earphone in and folded his arms.

Miguel Rivera's voice croaked out of the tall black speakers, ringing the podium. "Hey, you f----ers aren't fooling anybody with those vans. We know you got some cops in them. You hear me? I know you got f----ing cops in those vans. You hear me? You hear me? You .... "

A little after 12 p.m. yesterday Gov. Michael S. Dukakis bid goodbye to members of the freshly christened "Share-A-Cab" service at Logan Airport, and amid a flurry of handshakes, hurried off to a George's Island Press conference with Jacques Cousteau.

An English professor leaned back in her desk chair. "What rally?", she giggled.

Student Government Association (SGA) co-President Jon Hite walked around the corner from the rally and sat down on top of a bicycle rack to sip his coffee. "I like Miguel (Rivera). I sat down and talked with him last night. He's just a little misguided. I'm afraid he just doesn't understand the dynamics of Massachusetts State Government ... "

"Yes, we received two or three invitations to the rally today but Senator Olver had to decline them all ... Why? Well, there was a roll call in the Senate today ...

A man in a fraternity cap and grey sweatshirt broke stride for a moment while he was passing the rally and turned to his girlfriend. "Geez ... these radicals. Don't they ever go to class? he asked. His girlfriend giggled.

Rep. James Collins bubbled. "Good expression. Good expression. I had to be in Boston today to support reorganization in public higher education. A rally on campus serves as an effective political action. The trick now is to transmit all this into individual action directed toward the legislature. There's got to be a budget where the University will survive ... "

SWA goes ahead with MS donation

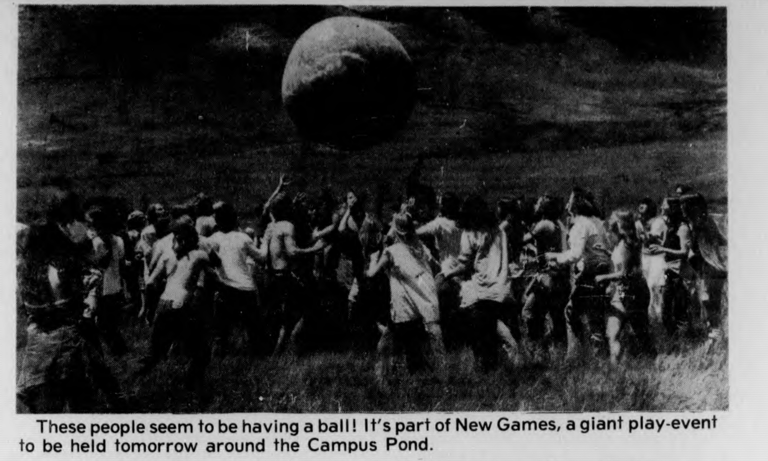
By LARRY COHEN
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Assembly (SWA) voted last night to donate $300 to Multiple Sclerosis in the name of Joe Abel and Gail Syphers, a dance team SWA had agreed to sponsor in the Multiple Sclerosis Dance-a-thon.

SWA passed a motion on March 29 to support the pair in the Dance-a-thon held the weekend of April 1, but an injunction was filed against the allocation on the grounds that it was unconstitutional. After an out-of-court settlement, the motion was rescinded. SWA was allowed to re-allocate the money with the conditions that the pledge not go toward a possible prize to Abel and Syphers, and the Student Senate Finance Committee be notified 10 days in advance.

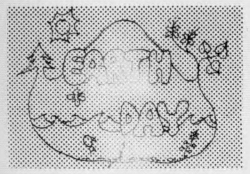
Also last night, President Chris Durkin told the assembly the Southwest Executive Committee elections have been challenged. A suit was filed with the Student Judiciary by two Southwest residents, Edward Bechelder and Peter J. Clinch, on the grounds that a private advertisement which appeared on a campaign placecard was illegal.

"We'll let the Judiciary handle it before we take any action," Durkin told the assembly. A hearing is scheduled for next Monday night.



These people seem to be having a ball! It's part of New Games, a giant play-event to be held tomorrow around the Campus Pond.

Environmental issues focus of Earth Day



Today marks the seventh annual Earth Day celebration sponsored by the Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) designed "to make people more aware of the environmental issues which are becoming more critical with each passing year," said Carol L. Entin, president of CEQ.

Earth Day began at the University when "environment was a growing fad but as the years progress the student's involvement and interest has slackened," she said.

Entin said "the coalition would like more people to become aware of such contemporary problems as the energy crisis, nuclear and solar energy, recycling, pesticides and oil spills." These topics are only a few of the displays to be shown.

The event will begin at 10 a.m. in the front of the library with various demonstrations as well as blue grass and folk music playing throughout the day.

Also, films will be shown including "The Gifts" and "Cry of the Marsh", beginning at 10 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom (SUB).

Representatives from Mass PIRG, Alternative Energy Coalition (AEC), New England Coalition Against Nuclear Power (NECNP), Quabbin Reservoir, the National Audubon Society, Arcadia, and Laughing Brook Sanctuary, will give live animal demonstrations.

There will also be puppet shows, frisbee lessons, canoeing and kayaking in addition to a plant exchange booth.

The Child Care Center will hold a raffle between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. Contra Dancing to the music of Sheehans Reel will be held at 3 p.m. At 3:45 p.m. the Morris Dance troupe will perform.

Earth Day is open to all interested parties and is free although any donations would be most gladly accepted. A rain date has been set for April 28.

'Change in focus' focus of speaker

Changing emphasis from the educator to the public in public health education, said Prof. Dorothy Nyswander, is the most significant development in that field to date.

Nyswander, a professor in the School of Health Education, University of California at Berkeley, spoke last night as a guest of the Division of Public Health Distinguished Visitors Program, in the Campus Center.

"Public Health educators must present a diversity of approaches to a diversity of needs."

Nyswander presented an overview of the health education profession, from its roots in the early part of the century to the present, from the perspective of her personal growth in the field.

"We must be sensitive to the people being taught, the people in whom change is desired."

Nyswander has been an outstanding member of the public health profession for several decades, both nationally and internationally. In addition to her work in such varied regions as India, Pakistan, Geneva, and South America, as well as the United States, she is credited with founding the graduate program in Public Health at Berkeley.

Discussing some problems in the profession, Nyswander addressed herself to the concern, both in and out of the field, that, by becoming a "change agent" in the lives of people, health educators are in danger of manipulating those they are re-educating, effectively depriving them of freedom of personal choice. In her experience, she said, "In an open and honest situation there is no fraud and there is no danger."

She considers "the obtaining of participation on varied operational levels" to be the "number one priority."

Nyswander discussed the development of the small group as "the most potent method of change."

"Training for compliance," she continued, "does not bring results."

She sees the pervading philosophy of public health education as "that of a helping relationship.

"There are no boundaries to the fields we can go into. We have skills, and we care about people," she said.

Emily Dickinson house may be changing hands

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

Emily Dickinson's house may soon be run by a trust if $1 million is pledged for its support by October.

If that amount can be raised to establish a tax-exempt foundation, Amherst College, which currently owns the Amherst poet's home, will give the homestead and property to the proposed Emily Dickinson Homestead Trust.

Attorney Winthrop S. Dakin, chairperson of a committee set up to establish the trust, said yesterday the million dollar endowment will hopefully be raised through 10 pledges of $100,000 each. The pledges are payable between December and July in two tax years, he said.

Dakin said the money would be invested and the subsequent income would be used to run the house. He said he didn't know if admission would be charged in the future.

The house on Main Street, which Amherst College bought 12 years ago, according to Dakin, as an "act of conscience" because the college was afraid it might fall into the hands of people who would not preserve it as "an historical and cultural monument."

But the college is not receiving enough donations to cover the cost of running the house, and is having second thoughts about using "educational" funds for cultural use.

Most recently, it has housed an Amherst College professor and his family who have taken care of the house and property, and have opened it for tours a few hours every Tuesday afternoon.

However, the family is leaving and the college has not been able to find any other professor to live in the house and take care of it.

This, in combination with the college's conviction that the home should be maintained by a public group and not an educational institution, has led to efforts to raise money for a trust.

Dakin said the establishment of the trust might lead to the house being kept open 20-30 hours per week.

If the money is not pledged, then the college trustees, who recently voted to turn the property over to the trust, will reconsider the trust idea and perhaps come up with another solution. One possibility is the sale of the house to private owners.

The house, built in 1813, was the birthplace of Dickinson and her home for more than 40 years. Edward Dickinson, her father, was treasurer of Amherst College from 1835 to 1873. Her brother Austin held the same post from 1873 to 1895.

Lovell Dyett turns on TV eye

By RON ARENA

Lovell Dyett, producer and anchorperson on WNAC-TV's Black News, last night stressed the need for black programming, saying it is "important for black people and white people to know what black people are thinking, feeling, and doing."

Dyett, addressing an audience of 50 people at a Distinguished Vistors Program presentation in Campus Center room 162, spoke on the role of the TV medium and the effect it can have on our society.

Dyett, who also hosts "The Lovell Dyett Show" on WBZ-radio, writes a monthly column for The Boston Globe, and serves on Carter's consultation committee to evaluate the President's performance in areas of black concern, appeared to enjoy a comfortable rapport with his audience in the two hour program.

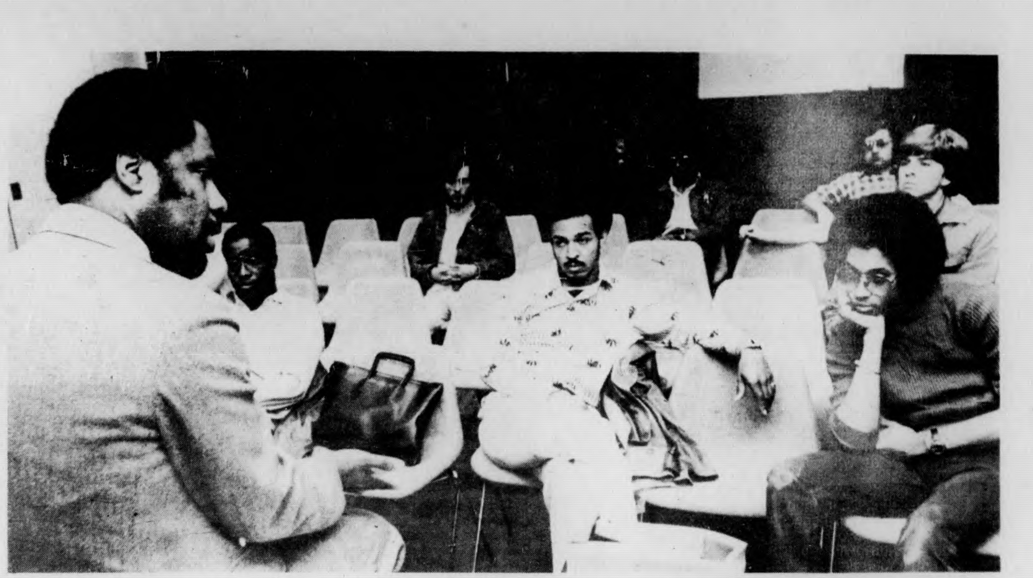
"The good God has given me exposure in many aspects of life," he said. "I feel it is my role to share these experiences with others like you. I'm not saying that everything I say is right, but that everything I say happened to me.

The former Howard College vice-president explained how his Black News show, a half-hour weekly on Sunday evenings focusing on, as its name suggest, black news, helps overcome problems of racism.

"My definition of racism is simply the assumptions that black people — their actions and their customs — are inferior because of their blackness," he said. "Whether this is done innately or consciously, it is these institutional, individual and collective attitudes that reflect what I call racism."

Dyett said Black News offers information in a format which "grants greater access" on stories involving blacks in a "context which will have impact on black people."

He used President Carter's energy policy as an example.



"Nobody told us the impact his policy had on black people," Dyett said. "Nobody saw it. With our show, it is my responsibility to discover the impact of Carter's policy on black people.

'Black News' takes into account that blacks and whites listen," Dyett stressed. "It is important for people to understand this news in the purest black context possible. That's the best opportunity for you to understand me in the purest context.

"This format doesn't argue for separatism," Dyett continued. A reporter who works for 'Black News' reports on the mainstream news also. All reporters work on both — it's an integrated system.

"I don't want to be a separatist. I wanted to be accepted as a black man — as an equal. Integration is a coming together of equals on an even level."

Dyett explained the role of the media as two-fold to inform and to entertain.

Lovell Dyett did both.

On the informative side he discussed the strengths an weaknesses of the television medium, before addressing broader subjects in a question-answer session.

Dyett said the TV medium, as a source of entertainment, does "a fairly decent job", while as an information medium, it lacks depth.

"TV is an advertising medium. You can write that down, leave, and have heard all that you need to hear on the matter. People want to be entertained, so do we give the people what they want or what we feel they need to have? It's a strange dilemma, almost like a chicken and an egg. We call it the 'paralysis of analysis'; it's been analyzed to death."

He said the media has "done a poor job telling about race and racial attitudes, racial discrimination, racial prejudice, and racial bigotry. The media has only dealt with it on a sensational basis."

'Kanevil' ready for daring ride

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

"If you're going to tempt fate, you might as well go all the way," said self-proclaimed daredevil "Weevil Kanevil" yesterday.

"Kanevil" a UMass art major who tolerates his legal name of Michael Law, was out by the campus pond yesterday under foreboding skies construcing a 12 foot ramps that will serve to propel him on a bicycle across the pond today at 12:30 p.m.

Kanevil will attempt to gain sufficient momentum to safely clear the 40 or more feet of the pond by travelling down the makeshift ramp designed to hurl him more than eight feet into the air.

"This was going to start out as a short ramp about four feet tall, but I've decided to build it higher to make it more exciting," Kanevil said. His bicycle has been altered to run "like it was stuck in 10th gear" and he feels 40 mph is "the minimum speed needed to seriously make it across."

Kanevil's stunt is part of the 'Festival of the Absurd' sponsored by Design Areas of Art. The festivities promise a variety of unusual events ranging from an all-day glass blowing demonstration in front of Munson Hall Annex to a parade heralded by three gross balloons.

A 'Mostly White' party will be held at 12:01 p.m. in the plaza directly behind the Art department offices. Participants are advised to 'bring your own everything' and attend in white costume. Despite plethora of happenings scheduled for today, the highlight will undoubtedly be the death-defying leap over the campus pond.

Steel supports obtained from the defunct stage set of "The Mother of Us All" will be positioned on either bank opposite the library. A small ramp will be built on the library bank, while a longer ramp constructed from wooden planks and boards will be housed across the pond. Due to conditions under which Kanevil 'borrowed' the planks, no nails will be used to secure the planks to their wooden frame.

"If a very strong wind comes up while I'm heading for the ramp and blows off some of the planks," mused Kanevil, "it's going to be very dangerous."

Although a previous jump resulted in a hospital stay of more than three months, Kanevil has no qualms about today's 'mad flight into the absurd.'

"This is the first time I've ever done anything this big but I'm going to do it because it's also the first time I've ever been able to get this much material for free."

Kanevil, who hates the famous stunster Evil Knievel because he wears a helmut, will take no safety precautions. "There might be a problem with the large logs at the bottom of the pond if I miss," he said.

Kanevil will be garbed in his 'Boll Weevil' costume, which consists of "pants with a lot of zippers", a flight jacket, and a gas mask.

Kanevil plans to "take the first leap across the pond" in deference to Fletcher Brock, another UMass art major, who also "says he's going to do it," Kanevil said. "We plan to have a duel with swords to determine who will go first."

CC debt bill future in doubt

By SAMUEL P. HASSAN
Collegian Staff

A bill which would substantially reduce the $79 annual Campus Center Student Fee by having the state pay $17 million of the $22 million Campus Center (CC) Debt Service, has failed to win endorsement of the Legislature's Joint Committee on Education, according to the bill's sponsor, Representative James G. Collins, D-Amherst.

In a 5-4 vote Monday, the committee declined a motion to endorse the bill, (H.B. 5154) and send it to the Ways and Means Committee for funding. A second motion recommending the bill "ought not to pass," was approved by a 6-3 vote, casting doubt on the bill's future in the current legislative session.

Collins said yesterday, "I'm going to continue fighting for the bill. We are currently analyzing the possibility of asking the committee for a reconsideration."

Collins said he will, "pursue it on the floor of the House," if committee reconsideration does not take place.

"I think that it (floor action) will at least educate my collegues as to the nature of the bill," he said.

In attempting to win a favorable report from the Education Committee, Collins sponsored three amendments to his bill which, in its original form, would have called for full assumption of the CC Debt Service by the state.

The first amendment reduces state funding from the full $22 million to $17 million, or 77 per cent of the debt.

Two procedural amendments would limit the UMass Building Authority's ability to initiate construction, and have the Building Authority assume the difference in any state re-financing of the bonds.

According to Kenneth H. Dean, an administrator with the vice-chancellor's office on special assignment in the CC, May 1 will mark the completion of the first full year of permanent financing of the $22 million CC Debt Service.

Dean said the annual payment for the next 34 years will be $1,920,000, totaling $67.2 million in payments by the year 2012.

Since opening in 1970, the CC Complex was covered by a temporary financing plan that only paid interest on the debt, according to Dean.

A four person delegation from UMass presented testimony to the Education Committee on February 28, citing inequity in state funding for campus center complexes at other state colleges and universities in Massachusetts.

Supporters of Collins' bill have continually cited UMass as the only state college or university that does not have a state owned or state financed campus center.

UMass Dean of Students William F. Field said yesterday that while he was, "not surprised," by the unfavorable committee ruling on the bill, "I don't see this as the end."

Field said he would not be opposed to a mailing by the CC Board of Governors (BOG) to inform students on the issue.

"I think we've presented some formidable testimony, the evidence is there, now we need a campaign with students going to their representatives," Field said.

Chairperson of the Campus Center BOG Janet A. St. Laurent said yesterday she will submit a motion at the BOG meeting Thursday to initiate a brochure explaining the CC Debt and Collins' bill.

SWA goes ahead with MS donation

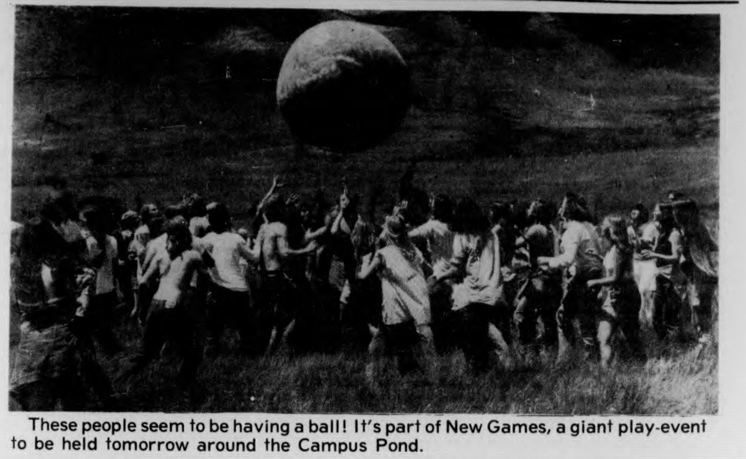
The Southwest Assembly (SWA) voted last night to donate $300 to Multiple Sclerosis in the name of Joe Abel and Gail Syphers, a dance team SWA had agreed to sponsor in the Multiple Sclerosis Dance-a-thon.

SWA passed a motion on March 29 to support the pair in the Dance-a-thon held the weekend of April 1, but an injunction was filed against the allocation on the grounds that it was unconstitutional. After an out-of-court settlement, the motion was rescinded. SWA was allowed to re-allocate the money with the conditions that the pledge not go toward a possible prize to Abel and Syphers, and the Student Senate Finance Committee be notified 10 days in advance.

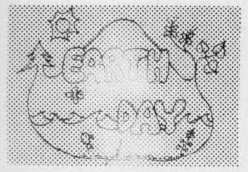
Also last night, President Chris Durkin told the assembly the Southwest Executive Committee elections have been challenged. A suit was filed with the Student Judiciary by two Southwest residents, Edward Bechelder and Peter J. Clinch, on the grounds that a private advertisement which appeared on a campaign placecard was illegal.

"We'll let the Judiciary handle it before we take any action," Durkin told the assembly. A hearing is scheduled for next Monday night.



These people seem to be having a ball! It's part of New Games, a giant play-event to be held tomorrow around the Campus Pond.

Environmental issues focus of Earth Day



Today marks the seventh annual Earth Day celebration sponsored by the Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) designed "to make people more aware of the environmental issues which are becoming more critical with each passing year," said Carol L. Entin, president of CEQ.

Earth Day began at the University when "environment was a growing fad but as the years progress the student's involvement and interest has slackened," she said.

Entin said "the coalition would like more people to become aware of such contemporary problems as the energy crisis, nuclear and solar energy, recycling, pesticides and oil spills." These topics are only a few of the displays to be shown.

The event will begin at 10 a.m. in the front of the library with various demonstrations as well as blue grass and folk music playing throughout the day.

Also, films will be shown including "The Gifts" and "Cry of the Marsh", beginning at 10 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom (SUB).

Representatives from Mass PIRG, Alternative Energy Coalition (AEC), New England Coalition Against Nuclear Power (NECNP), Quabbin Reservoir, the National Audubon Society, Arcadia, and Laughing Brook Sanctuary, will give live animal demonstrations.

There will also be puppet shows, frisbee lessons, canoeing and kayaking in addition to a plant exchange booth.

The Child Care Center will hold a raffle between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. Contra Dancing to the music of Sheehans Reel will be held at 3 p.m. At 3:45 p.m. the Morris Dance troupe will perform.

Earth Day is open to all interested parties and is free although any donations would be most gladly accepted. A rain date has been set for April 28.

Changing emphasis from the educator to the public in public health education, said Prof. Dorothy Nyswander, is the most significant development in that field to date.

Nyswander, a professor in the School of Health Education, University of California at Berkeley, spoke last night as a guest of the Division of Public Health Distinguished Visitors Program, in the Campus Center.

"Public Health educators must present a diversity of approaches to a diversity of needs."

Nyswander presented an overview of the health education profession, from its roots in the early part of the century to the present, from the perspective of her personal growth in the field.

"We must be sensitive to the people being taught, the people in whom change is desired."

Nyswander has been an outstanding member of the public health profession for several decades, both nationally and internationally. In addition to her work in such varied regions as India, Pakistan, Geneva, and South America, as well as the United States, she is credited with founding the graduate program in Public Health at Berkeley.

Discussing some problems in the profession, Nyswander addressed herself to the concern, both in and out of the field, that, by becoming a "change agent" in the lives of people, health educators are in danger of manipulating those they are re-educating, effectively depriving them of freedom of personal choice. In her experience, she said, "In an open and honest situation there is no fraud and there is no danger."

She considers "the obtaining of participation on varied operational levels" to be the "number one priority."

Nyswander discussed the development of the small group as "the most potent method of change."

"Training for compliance," she continued, "does not bring results."

She sees the pervading philosophy of public health education as "that of a helping relationship.

"There are no boundaries to the fields we can go into. We have skills, and we care about people," she said.

Rally cuts budget cuts

ISSUES WERE HEARD AND POINTS WERE MADE at the level funding rally yesterday, where 600 students and faculty members gathered to protest proposed budget cuts. Student leaders spoke, including SGA Co-President Pinky Batiste (below right), along with professors such as Lazslo Tikos, head of the Slavic Languages Department (bottom). Free stationary and postage were handed out for letters to State Congressmen, and petitions were passed around calling for the removal of the level funding program.

State college presidents rap level funding

BOSTON [AP] — State college presidents protested emphatically Tuesday that Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' budget recommendations would be disastrous for public higher education.

One after another complained at a hearing of the House Ways and Means Committee that adoption of the budget would force curtailment of essential programs and would penalize students.

There is approximately a 10 per cent difference, $5 million, in what the governor proposed and the $58.7 million the colleges say they need to stay even.

Paul Parks, secretary of educational affairs, attempted to defend the administration against the protests of subordinates and committee members.

It was a replay of earlier hearings on appropriations for the state universities and for the Department of Education. Agency heads openly campaigned for more money, with a substantial degree of success anticipated.

Parks conceded that the governor's budget would have led to cuts but said it was all that could be recommended, given existing financial limitations.

"I cannot spend more than I have," Parks said.

Dukakis boosted his original $4.1 billion request by $47 million to cover 65 per cent of the cost of this year's pay raises, carried over into fiscal year 1978. It still leaves agencies with less money than they want.

"We bit the bullet," Parks said to angry committee members who complained that the governor's policy would put the burden on legislators to raise appropriations or endorse reductions.

Edward M. Penson, president of Salem State College, said it seemed cruel on the administration's part to call the recommendation "level funding."

Worcester State President Joseph J. Orze spoke of what he said was the impossibility of providing additional services with the proposed allotment. He noted there are new facilities being opened and new athletic fields.

Vincent J. Mara, president of Fitchburg State, said eight programs and 47 jobs would be lost. He said he was seeking to augment his seven member campus police force with four new officers "because of the location" of the school.

senate by-laws and trustee documents.

The provost's plan is in violation of a state law which grants University trustees complete authority to oversee academic affairs. He further noted the various Faculty Senate and trustee documents which were devised in "good faith" by the faculty members, administration and trustees,"assures interdependence of various groups" for academic decisions.

Booth said these documents "require the president to assure all appropriate components of the University can make recommendations" before the planning stages.

"The destiny of this University does not lie in the hands of any one person," said Booth, "Certainly no one has more respect for the Chancellor than I, and I have been a long time friend of Robert Wood, but I genuinely believe the administration is not worthy of this University.

"Dr. Puryear has not been responsive to governance as we know it on this campus," concluded Booth.

Bromery advised the faculty to carefully consider their motion.

Recalling the numerous incidents of unrest, sit-ins and protests of the sixties, he said he has encountered during his eight years at UMass, Bromery said the University and College of Arts and Sciences have maintained their integrity throughout these disruptions.

"Even if I believe what you have said about the provost, which I don't," said Bromery, "no one person can take this institution down."

He said UMass cannot continue as a first rate viable institution without long-range planning.

Bromery noted when a decision to formulate a long-range plan was reached and it became clear some faculty positions would have to be eliminated, "nobody in the Faculty Senate Rules Committee wanted to hold the smoking gun."

Bromery said the plan, which has been examined by deans and department heads, "is going to be modified."

He said a committee of six senior, tenured faculty has been formed for consultation about tenure decisions currently being processed which will be effected by the plan.

"If you're going to vote no confidence for the provost," said Bromery, "you'll have to include me."

Bromery's request for an amendment which would add his name to the motion against Puryear was later defeated.

Michael D. Ford, an assistant professor in political science, said the provost's proposals about tenure actions were no different than those last year, yet there was no cry for his resignation then.

"I think you've been screwed," Ford told Puryear, "certainly by the president, if not by the faculty."

Wood also defended Puryear at the meeting saying "I know of no man in a more difficult position."

In his disapproval of the no confidence motion, Wood told the faculty the University should "get on with the job of producing something rational and not be driven by budgets anymore." He said that outside forces apparently referring to the governor's appointment to the Board of Trustees, mis-directing the University in the past few years.

"The University is under a siege," said Wood.

After the meeting, Afro-American Studies chairperson John H. Bracey expressed dissatisfaction about the motion against Puryear.

"If you want a definition of racism," said Bracey, "it's what took place in there tonight."

Political Science Prof. Jerome B. King questioned the confidence of the students at UMass, since it usually is their last choice.

Students do not quite realize they can get a good education here, he said, and the faculty should follow established governance procedures to help bolster student confidence.

All stressed the need for "immediate action."

SGA Communications Director James Gagne said 350 letters urging state legislature to oppose level funding, were written at the rally. This brings the total to around 2500, he said.

Rivera, during his 10-minute talk also claimed certain members of the SGA were also "sharing the big seats" in the state Democratic party.

"Look at past SGA presidents. They are in Boston, New York, Chicago. They belong to the Democratic party. The Democratic party has many wings, left and right, but they all belong to the same bird shitting on us," Rivera said.

SGA co-president Jon Hite in an interview later disagreed with Rivera's charges.

"Rivera, though he didn't mention names, is attacking me and Paul Cronin. It upsets me to think that Ahora feels there is a grand conspiracy against them. I have pushed for a higher Ahora budget all along," Hite said.

Secretaries

Campus secretaries and clerical staff plan to celebrate National Secretary's Day from noon to 1 p.m. today on the Student Union side of the campus pond.

Women from offices across campus will bring bag lunches with them and listen to speeches by their peers, emphasizing the national and local importance of their positions.

The theme of the presentation is "Raises, not Roses."

In case of rain the group is planning to move into a room on the lower level of the Campus Center.

Aside from speeches there will be songs and poetry readings, said Joan Stoia, one of the organizers. She said today's event is sponsored by "The 12 to one Group," secretaries and clerical staff who meet regularly on Wednesdays from noon to 1 p.m.

Grad employees

Graduate student employes are planning to picket in front of Whitmore Administration Building tomorrow "to dramatize the effect of proposed cuts in teaching assistant positions for next year," according to Sherry Flashman, chairperson of the Graduate Student Employes Union (GSEU).

The "informational picket", which is scheduled to begin at 11:30 a.m. and last two hours, is also a response to the campus administration's lack of recognition of the group and increased workloads for teaching assistants, Flashman said yesterday.

The picket is designed to inform students and faculty about graduate employes' problems and their impact on "quality education" at the University, she said.

The union is planning to meet Friday at noon to continue discussion on organizing strategies.

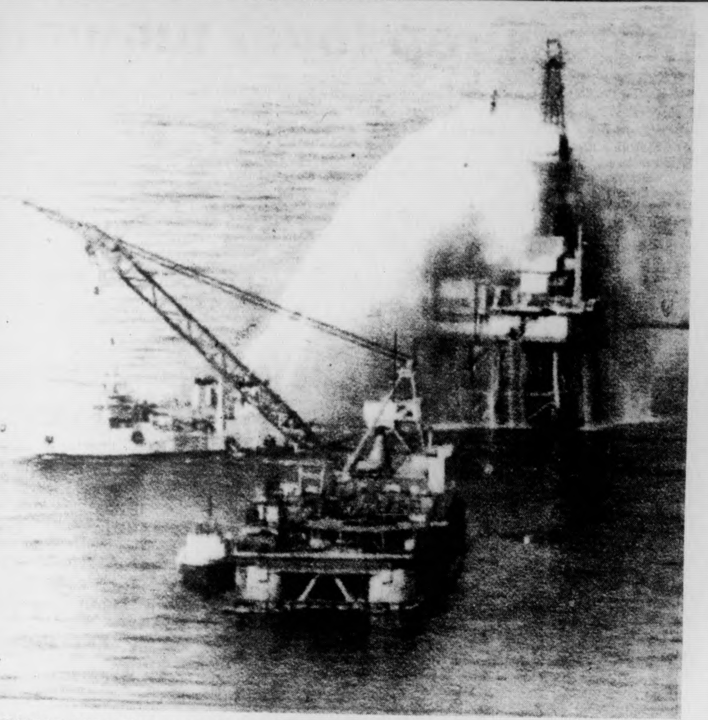
Mass PIRG

Protesting what it calls "very inadequate evacuation plans" by the state in case of nuclear accident, the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) is organizing an anti-nuke rally in Amherst at 1:45 p.m.

The group and supporters are planning to gather in front of PIRG's 233 North Pleasant St. office and from there march to nearby Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMEC), a subsidiary of Northeast Utilities, at 231 Triangle St.

Northeast Utilities is "a strong proponent for the continued development of nuclear power," according to David Pomerantz, staff environmentalist at Amherst PIRG.

At WMEC, PIRG will announce the results of its research on Massachusetts' plans for evacuation in case of a breakdown of systems at a nuclear power plant, as in meltdown of its radioactive core, Pomerantz said.



STAVANGER, Norway: This is the oil rig 'Bravo', which sprang a leak during routine maintenance work at the platform last Friday.

Blow out team halts efforts to cap oil well in Norway

STAVANGER, Norway [AP] — A choking concentration of gas yesterday forced an American-led team to suspend efforts to cap a blown-out well that has sent millions of gallons of oil gushing into the North Sea in the past four days.

The six-man team, led by two blow-out specialists from Texas, were evacuated from an offshore oil platform in Norway's Ekofisk field after a calm developed, meaning the winds were no longer dispersing the volatile gas escaping from the 10,000-foot-deep well.

Weather forecasts for Wednesday indicated it might be possible to resume efforts to cap the runaway well at daybreak.

A reddish scar of crude petroleum fed by oil sluicing out of the well at about 44,000 gallons an hour continued spreading from the rig into the sea. Impaired visibility made precise measurements impossible, but the slick split into two sectors, covering an estimated 80,000 acres.

Although environmental specialists had sounded warnings about the possible catastrophic effects of the spill to marine life in one of the world's main fishing zones, there were no reports of dead fish or seabirds.

A spokesman for the Oklahoma-based Phillips Petroleum Co., operator of the Bravo 14 well that burst open during maintenance operations Friday, said the blow-out team of Boots Hansen and Richard Hattenberg worked eight hours on the rig before retreating to a maintenance barge called the Choctaw.

Hansen radioed that the winds that forced a halt to operations on Monday died away to a point yesterday afternoon where the hydrocarbon gases escaping with the yellowish oil were no longer being dispersed.

"You can drown in that gas," said the Phillips spokesman in Stavanger, about 170 miles east of Ekofisk Bravo. "It's not toxic but there's no oxygen left and you can't breathe. Of course, it's immensely volatile."

There is some dispute about the amount of oil pouring into the sea. Norwegian officials revised downward their original estimate of 4,000 tons a day, or about 1.176 million gallons, and some estimates said the spillage may be as low as 588,000 gallons.

The spillage had run to four full days by last night.

Regardless of the amount, efforts to clean up the spill bore no proportion to its size. Six sweeper ships reported removing only 20 tons of oil yesterday before stopping because of technical difficulties.

Chemical dispersants have been ruled out for now because it is feared they could cause worse ecological damage than the oil.

Dutch oil experts who surveyed the oil slick said they felt sure that if the leak is capped before week's end, the oil will break down before reaching any coast. The Ekofisk field lies between Norway, Denmark and Scotland, and the slick has drifted in various directions with changes in the wind.

Environmentalist demands stricter maritime regulations

BOSTON [AP] — Undersea explorer Jacques Cousteau urged Americans yesterday to bar oil tankers flying flags of convenience from U.S. waters. Standing aboard the bridge of the ferry "Bay State" after a tour of Boston harbor islands, Cousteau said a few rich men — many of them Americans — are making a lot of money by evading American maritime safety regulations.

"American waters should be forbidden to ships flying a flag that does not correspond to their real owners," the French oceanographer, filmmaker and conservationist said.

"That would suppress 60 per cent of the oil slicks at least. And besides, it would give employment to 35,000 American seamen," Cousteau added.

He noted that of 20 tankers lost at sea last year, 10 were flying Liberian flags but were owned by Americans.

Cousteau praised the new Harbor Islands State Park, 15 islands rimmed by the dozens of factories lining the mainland coast, as evidence that "a very large industrial community has decided to co-exist with nature."

And he said protecting the environment need not cost jobs. In fact, he added: "When you destroy nature, the first victims are the people."

In an address to a joint session of the Massachusetts legislature yesterday afternoon, Cousteau said nuclear power can be dangerous, especially in developing nations where plutonium can be turned into weapons.

He urged more attention to solar energy, though he conceded it would be more expensive.

The commitment to nuclear power has been made without enough study of its safety "at the price of risking catastrophies," Cousteau said.

By the year 2000, he said, 20 to 25 per cent of the world's energy needs will be provided by nuclear power plants but more power could be provided by solar energy.

Cousteau told the legislature that solar energy — and wind energy provided by new, sophisticated windmills — could be developed worldwide at a cost of $1.5 trillion dollars by the year 2000. The cost of developing nuclear power plants to provide the same energy would be $850 billion, he said.

Carter holds back support of consumer co-operatives

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Carter administration parted company with consumer groups yesterday and opposed legislation designed to encourage development of consumer cooperatives.

The legislation would establish a new federal agency to make an annual $250 million in low-interest loans to nonprofit consumer-owned co-ops. Supporters say the loan program would encourage the growth of food and service cooperatives.

Consumer groups say the co-ops lower prices to consumers while industry groups say they provide unfair competition to businesses trying to make a profit.

Roger Altman, assistant Treasury secretary-designate, told Congress yesterday that the Carter administration wants a two-year study before determining whether the program should be established.

Since taking office in January, the administration has joined with consumer groups in supporting a variety of legislative proposals, including the consumer protection agency and proposals to provide federal money for defraying the expenses of consumers who want to testify before federal agencies.

Altman told a House banking subcommittee: "There simply is not sufficient evidence to support a comprehensive commitment of the size and structure envisioned in this bill."

He said the administration plans a two-year test by providing $20 million in loans and technical assistance for experimental co-ops.

"This pilot project does not imply that a larger facility will be, or should be, forthcoming," he said.

"Compelling evidence should be available before any broad new programs, major budgetary commitments or new federal bodies are established," Altman said.

St. Germain, expressing surprise at the administration's position, said: "The President talked about cooperatives in glowing terms last fall and recalled proudly the work of his father as a director of a consumer cooperative in southwest Georgia."

St. Germain also noted that several Carter aides had supported the legislation before joining the administration and Vice President Walter F. Mondale had sponsored it when he was in the Senate.

Middle East talks conclude; Hussein feels peace is near WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter said yesterday the time is not yet ripe for a new Middle East peace conference, but Jordan's King Hussein suggested the Arabs and Israelis may at least be nearing agreement on the Palestinian homeland question.

Concluding two days of private talks at the White House, both leaders cautioned against "overly optimistic" expectations of a quick Middle East peace settlement — but Carter's assessment seemed more pessimistic than usual, while Hussein was more optimistic than he has been.

The Jordanian monarch told reporters the talks Carter has been having with Arab and Israeli leaders have begun to focus on the concept of creating — from Israeli-occupied Arab lands — a Palestinian state that would exist in "confederation" with Jordan.

He said the proposal is to carve such a state — linked to Jordan rather than independent — out of Jordanian territory on the west bank of the Jordan River and Egyptian lands in the Gaza strip.

Both areas have been occupied by Israeli troops since the 1967 war, and the result would be to create a divided Palestinian mini-state on two sides of Israel.

"The idea of a confederated state appears to be emerging from the talks" Carter has held with himself, Egypt's President Anwar Sadat and Israel's Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, Hussein said.

Israeli government officials have indicated they would accept such a resolution to the Palestinian homeland question, although they would reject any proposal for a fully independent Palestinian nation.

"We are passing through a critical and important stage for the Middle East," Hussein said, expressing confidence that the United States, behind Carter's initiatives, "has the grasp of the situation and the determination to move forward."

But he said it "would be a disaster" to attempt to reconvene the Geneva Middle East peace conference without more advance planning and resolution of such traditional problems as how to overcome Israeli objections to the participation of Palestinian envoys.

Assassination committee wins preliminary budget approval

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Assassination Committee won narrow preliminary approval of a $2.5 million budget Tuesday, but not until two congressmen denounced charges reporters covering the special committee might be CIA agents.

On a 10-7 vote, the House Administration Committee approved the budget for the remainder of this year for the controversial panel to carry on its investigation of the John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King Jr. killings.

The committee originally sought $6.5 million for the year and then scaled it down to $2.8 million. The appropriations must still be approved by the full House.

The final figure of $2.5 million was settled on by the administration panel after an unsuccessful move by Rep. Lucien Nedzi, D-Mich., to provide "only what it costs for the committee to go out of business."

Del. Walter Fauntroy, D-D.C., chairman of a task force of the assassination panel looking into the King killing, said in a recent television interview that unfavorable newspaper accounts of the panel led him to wonder whether some reporters were actually acting as CIA agents in an effort to kill the committee.

"Personally I've never been for this committee," Nedzi said. "Now in recent days a member of the committee has been talking about reporters being CIA agents. That's nonsense."

"The suggestion that newspaper reporters are doubling as CIA agents is ludicrous," said Rep. Frank Thompson, D-N.J., chairman of the Administration Committee.

Proposed law would battle sex discriminatory benefit

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Companies paying disability benefits to men who undergo such medical procedures as hair transplants or vasectomies engage in sex discrimination if they don't provide benefits for pregnant women, administration officials said yesterday.

The Justice and Labor Departments and the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission told a Senate committee they endorse legislation requiring employers who cover other ailments to include pregnancy.

The proposed law would overturn the Supreme Court's ruling allowing pregnancy to be excluded from nonoccupational disability plans. The high court said last December that excluding pregnancy and childbirth from disability plans did not constitute sex discrimination.

The bill does not mandate coverage for pregnant women but would add new language to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act specifically defining discrimination for pregnancy and childbirth as sex discrimination.

Ethel Bent Walsh, acting chairman of the EEOC, said the court ruling "left a gaping hole in the protection afforded to women" in civil rights statutes.

Millions of women "work for the same compelling economic reasons as men," she said, and denying disability payments to a pregnant woman may force a choice between "having the child or keeping the job."

Committee chairman Sen. Harrison Williams, D-N.J., said it was "incredible" firms would cover hair transplants disability but not pregnancy. He said the only argument against the bill comes from industry fearful of the cost.

State House speaker raps insurance company profits

BOSTON [UPI] — Massachusetts House Speaker Thomas W. McGee yesterday charged insurance companies with evading the intent of the recent auto insurance law by dumping good drivers into an assigned risk pool and reaping unexpected income.

McGee, angry at times, told the legislature's Insurance Committee, the companies "perpetrated a fraud not only on the public but the Massachusetts Legislature.

"They made the agents evade the law. I don't think the companies misunderstood our intentions. There's no question we wanted to protect the public. They skirted the law and they did it deliberately."

McGee was referring to a decision by companies to have agents make virtually all assignments to the risk pool after Insurance Commissioner James M. Stone set rates for such assignments higher than those used by most companies in the voluntary market.

It had been anticipated that as in prior years most risk pool assignments would be made directly by companies. Under the auto reform law, customers placed in the pool directly by companies would pay normal market rates.

The effect of using the higher agent placement rate, coupled with reductions in agent commissions, resulted in $28 million in extra income, or potential profits, according to state actuaries.

Richard Underwood of the American Insurance Association, conceded "what happened was different than what you intended." But he said the action was entirely legal since Stone set all the rules.

"The insurance industry is getting awfully tired of politics in Massachusetts auto insurance," Underwood said.

He said there has been an "aberration" in the competitive rating law which caused large increases for urban and young drivers. He noted that several companies have made a proposal to reduce rates for those hardest hit by the $16 million increase.

Underwood rejected Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' proposal to limit rate increases to 25 per cent above last year level as well as proposals to temporarily freeze rates at last years level until new and reduced rates can be set.

Dukakis testified in support of the cap saying it would provide badly needed relief for those who most need it without increasing rates for other drivers. He said if the bill is not passed, Stone will cap rates administratively.

Scientists uncover power study bias

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Previously unpublished government documents suggest a federal study on nuclear reactor safety was biased in favor of the atomic power industry and views disrupting its findings were suppressed, the Union of Concerned Scientists said yesterday.

The UCS, a private organization opposed to atomic power, said an 18-month review of memos and working documents used in preparing the federal reactor study reveals an effort to support a predetermined conclusion reactors are safe.

It said the review also showed the nuclear industry was deeply involved in the study despite claims the assessment was independent.

The reactor safety study was launched by the Atomic Energy Commission in 1972 and issued in 1975 by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which replaced the AEC. It concluded the chances of a reactor core meltdown killing 1,000 people are one in a million.

Dr. Norman Rasmussen of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who directed the safety study, disputed the UCS conclusions, calling its charge there had been a predetermined conclusion "blatantly untrue."

Rasmussen told UPI in a telephone interview many of the statements cited by the UCS, including his own, had been distorted in the new review. "Unfortunately," he said, "we weren't lawyers and we didn't think of all the ways people could read what we wrote."

The UCS said its review found documentary evidence of "a concerted AEC-NRC effort to bias the study and to conceal evidence of deficiencies in the study's methods, assumptions and data base."

"The AEC's own files show how this study was carried out from the beginning to serve the purposes of the nuclear industry and with the heavy involvement of the nuclear industry, its basic conclusions on nuclear safety predetermined," said Daniel Ford of the UCS.

"It was, in fact, slanted and unscientific."

The UCS based its review of the study on more than 50,000 pages of internal documents obtained under the Freedom of Information Act.

It cited one document, a 1972 letter from Rasmussen to the AEC outlining the basic plan for the safety study, which said analysis of nuclear risks "might have a significant benefit for the nuclear industry" and the study "to be useful must have reasonable acceptance by people in the industry."

Rasmussen said what he meant was that industry would not act to improve safety unless it accepted the findings.

U.S. may ban plutonium power use

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Carter administration witnesses said yesterday the nation can ban plutonium handling and still have plenty of energy. But they balked at supporting a law stating the ban.

Robert Fri, acting head of the Energy Research and Development Administration, Gus Speth of the Council on Environmental Quality and Thomas Davies of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency testified.

The subcommittee is considering legislation that would halt reprocessing of plutonium, an atomic fuel that is also usable in nuclear bombs.

"A permanent ban ... could impede efforts to explore and develop alternative concepts, thereby perhaps prematurely impacting the use of a valuable energy resource," Fri said.

There is "no compelling reason" for the ban now, Speth said.

"If the bill is passed in its present form, such action could foreclose the licensing of any form of treatment and reuse of spent fuel," Davies said.

Carter has decided that there can be nuclear energy without continued use and reprocessing of plutonium, Davies said.

They why oppose the legislation? Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., wanted to know.

The President wants to look at all alternatives and "we are not quite at the point where we are willing to describe the abolition of plutonium as part of that policy," Davies said.

News in Brief

New food label laws adopted

BOSTON (AP) — A state agency has adopted new rules to govern contents and format of all labels on food sold retail in Massachusetts.

The Massachusetts Public Health Council said the rules are similar to federal regulations that require listing of ingredients, net contents by quantity, name and place of business of the manufacturer, packer or distributor, and detailed nutritional data when nutritional claims are made for the product.

The state regulations make it illegal to sell foods as "natural" or "organic" if they do not meet new definitions.

Carter approves arms sales

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter has approved the sale of $1.66 billion in arms to Middle Eastern nations, including sophisticated early warning plans for Iran and Hawk antiaircraft missiles for Saudi Arabia, administration officials said Tuesday.

The five AWACS planes for Iran — modified 707 jetliners that cost $112 million each — carry advance downward scanning radar plus the latest communications equipment and computers.

Mass. schools get Fed. aid

BOSTON (UPI) — More than $41.5 million in federal moneys will go to elementary and secondary schools in Massachusetts, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., announced yesterday.

He said in a press release from his Washington office the grants from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare for fiscal year 1978 will provide services for children residing in low income areas.

It will also go to state institutions housing neglected and delinquent chidlren who need special education.

SALT talks begin May 11

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States and Russia announced Tuesday that technical-level talks on strategic arms limitation will resume May 11 in Geneva.

State Department spokesman Hodding Carter, issuing the announcement in Washington, said the discussions will be a prelude to arms negotiations later that month between Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko.

Senator offers death penalty bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. John McClellan, D-Ark., Tuesday introduced a death penalty bill that would establish court procedures for imposing the death sentence for murder, treason and espionage.

McClellan, chairman of the Senate criminal laws subcommittee, said Attorney General Griffin Bell has reviewed the bill and is convinced it would meet all the constitutional safeguards required by the Supreme Court.

Nursing homes get needed aid

BOSTON (UPI) — Massachusetts Elder Affairs Secretary James J. Callahan has issued emergency regulations eliminating limits on homemaker services for most clients of his agency.

The emergency rules, made public yesterday and effective later this week, mean services for several hundred needy elderly residents which were cut in late January will be restored.

Job bill gets through stalemate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate and House conferences yesterday broke a seven-week stalemate that had held up President Carter's plan to stimulate the economy with public works jobs.

The jobs bill, a major part of Carter's economic package, would make $4 billion available to local governments immediately for construction of hospitals, schools, parks, sewers, bridges and other public works projects.

Conferees eliminated a $7.25-million, water-pollution section that had stalled action and decided to consider it separately.

HERE'S ONE ENGINEERING OPPORTUNITY YOU WON'T GET IN PRIVATE INDUSTRY.

If you're thinking about a career in engineering, think about this.

How many companies can offer you a nuclear submarine to operate? The answer is none. Equipment like this is available only in one place... the Navy.

The Navy operates over half the nuclear reactors in America. So our training is the broadest and most comprehensive. We start by giving you a year of advanced engineering technology. In graduate school, this would cost you thousands, but in the Navy, we pay you.

Once you're commissioned as a Nuclear Propulsion Officer, you'll earn a top salary. Over $24,000 a year after four years. And you'll be responsible for the most advanced equipment developed by man. All the Navy asks in return is that you serve for 3 years on active duty upon completion of your training.

You have only until May 15th to enroll in this year's Navy Nuclear Propulsion Candidate Program. If you are majoring in engineering, math or physical sciences, contact your placement office to find out when a Navy recruiter will be on campus. Or call toll free, 800-841-8000 (in Georgia, 800-342-5855) for more information. And if you're still a junior, ask about the Navy's NUPOC Collegiate Program, which pays you up to $6,000 during your senior year.

The Navy. When it comes to nuclear training, no one can give you the same opportunities.

NAVY OFFICER.
IT'S NOT JUST A JOB, IT'S AN ADVENTURE.

The Salsa-Soul Medicine Show

By ROBIN MORELLO

"I feel as if midgets have been walking over my tongue with their feet."

— W.C. Fields

I can barely remember anything that happened the night I polished off a pint of Canadian Mist, but I will never forget what I woke up to the following morning. I could tolerate the ball of knots in my stomach and the cashmere sweater that had replaced my tongue, but the hammer pounding away at my skull was too much for me to bear. Any energy I had was used up when I tried to open an aspirin bottle. I spent the entire Saturday in bed, with a pillow wrapped around my head, praying for the pain to stop, vowing never to drink again, and scoffing at the accomplishments of medical science. By now they should have come up with a cure for the common hangover. After all, they've been around for a long time. A friend of mine was skimming through an old Hindu medical book and pointed out to me a section about hangovers. I guess they suffered through the same symptoms 2500 years ago as we do today — headaches, anxiety, fatigue, thirst, vomiting and nausea.

"Is it just accidental that alcohol and the alimentary tract are both closely allied and similarly named?"

— W.C. Fields

Have you ever noticed that, no matter what you read about hangovers, the authors can never tell you what a hangover actually is. The best explanation that they can give is that hangovers are chemical reactions caused by too much alcohol in the system. I never got any chemical reactions half as powerful as some of my past hangovers when I fooled around in chemical labs.

Everyone knows how easy it is to fall into a deep sound sleep when you're drunk. Have you ever tried to wake someone else up who has passed out? It is practically impossible. When a friend of mine fell asleep at the Rusty Nail after too much Wild Turkey I thought I would have to make a bed for her on the bar. She just would not wake up. Luckily the anesthetic wore off before I wore out and the two of us got home. You would expect to feel great the next day after a sound sleep like that. Too bad it doesn't work out that way. I always feel as though I pulled an all-nighter even though I did get eight hours of sleep in.

I know that when I wake up with a hangover, I may as well call it a day. The next twenty-four hours are wasted which is pretty bogus if I had planned on doing anything. Last summer my friend Bob had made plans to go to the beach with his family. The weatherman had predicted a beautiful weekend so he was really looking forward to going. Unfortunately he ODed on Gimlets the night before and didn't make it farther than his back yard. The waves crashing on the shore were no match for the waves crashing in his stomach. And, to make it worse, he had to put up with his family and all the teasing they did. Don't you just love it when you're hungover and your friends start giving you grief and aggravation about it. You feel miserable enough without the sarcastic comments. But I must admit, as much as I hate it, I do the same thing to others. Hungover people are so much fun to tease and taunt because they are suffering too much to bitch back.

Sweetest hangover I don't want to get over...

Oh yes, Diana Ross's Love Hangover. Now that is one hangover I don't mind waking up to. When I do, I just can't hold on to it long enough. Forget the alcohol hangover. I put my maximum efforts in trying to get rid of it. My latest hangover relief tactic is to gulp down a tall glass of chocolate milk and follow-up with a Big Mac. My friend Hills swears by flat ginger ale.

Hills in mind, let me tell you about a very strange phenomenon that occurred two summers ago. My roommate Meryl had a party and invited all the kids from our floor. Since we all came from different parts of the state, we all planned on staying over night. We knew that we would be too wasted to drive and no one wanted to risk their neck just to get home. Besides that, there is something about group hangovers that makes them more bearable. We wanted to suffer together the same way we did on Friday mornings after those Thursday nights at the Pub. So we all camped .out in Meryl's living room. Sometime in the early daylight, Hills woke up, started speaking in what sounded like Spanish, and grabbed the open bottle of ginger ale he had kept near him on the couch. This was odd, you understand, because Hills does not speak Spanish. Oh well, maybe there is a new hangover system developing in humans — you become bilingual. I always did want to learn a second language but I don't think that is the way I want to do it.

Isn't there an old expression about an ounce of prevention being better than the cure? Well, whatever it is, I hear from Hills that there are some things we can do to prevent those terrible morning-afters. He found that it helps to eat before he has anything to drink. That way he can have a few drinks without getting loaded. I read that staying up for a few hours and switching over to non-alcoholic drinks also helps. I suppose I could try drinking less. After all, it is the booze that turns people like Hills into flameco dancers. I'll have to think about that the next time I am out having a few. Until then, here's looking at you kid.

The Salsa-Soul Medicine Show will feature a special program on alcoholism tonight, from 7 to 10, on WMUA, 91.1. The Salsa-Soul Medicine Show can be heard every Wednesday night on WMUA.

Zaire collects aid

WASHINGTON [AP] — The beleagured government of Zaire yesterday received much-needed financial help totaling $85 million from the International Monetary Fund.

The IMF said the money will be used to offset a decline in earnings from copper production and to assist the country in meeting a balance of payment deficits which totaled $513 million in 1975 and $157 million in 1976.

There have been questions about how Zaire would pay for the costly war it is conducting against insurgents in copper-rich Shaba Province.

Although there appears to be nothing to prevent President Mobutu Sese Seko from diverting at least part of the funds for war purposes, the IMF said it has attached conditions to the loans.

It said the Zairean government has agreed to an economic program to cut back its balance of payments deficit and also to reduce the current rate of inflation "by making possible an upswing in economic activity and a sufficient supply of imported goods."

The IMF said in the statement that Zaire's earnings from its copper production have been reduced because of a sharp decline in world copper prices last year.

It also cited "production difficulties" in Zaire's copper industry. The fighting in the Shaba region is expected to further hamper the country's copper output.

Fast for those that starve

To the Editor:

While we slept last night an estimated 27,396 people died in the greatest disaster in the history of the earth. What's more, this disaster has been going on every night and day for years, and will continue to occur in the forseeable future. Why is this story appearing on the letters page instead of the front page, you ask? Well, it's because these thousands aren't dying in spectacular explosions, and they aren't rich or even affluent; they're poor people starving at a rate of 15 to 20 million a year.

Because of the comparative value placed on lives by the news media, we never hear of the enormous famine that's going on at this very moment. This contradiction in the treatment of death as news is clearly evinced in the coverage of the recent plane crash. In the 15 to 20 odd minutes those 500 people were dying from the crash, the same number of people starved to death. And what of the families? The tragic impact of having a family member ripped away in a moment was told over and over in the media, but who told the story of the mother who slowly sees her child wasting away, and is helpless to save it from starving. And starving they are, at a rate — — of 1 every blink of the eye (don't try not blinking, they starve anyway)

— That equals the population of Boston every 18 days

— of 38 every commercial

The cause of this mass famine is obviously many-sided, a product of both overpopulation in those affected nations, and over-affluence in segments of those nations and in the "developed" world. Many who are starving could be fed from the resources of their own countries, but for various reasons the material wealth of the land does not reach those needing it. A good example of this is in a recent New York Times article about Brazil that cites both starvation among the poor people and huge profits for the rich coffee growers.

Similar examples occur here in America where food is even destroyed to raise the market price while people go hungry. This is where our acceptance of starvation in America and abroad comes in. Just as slaves in America were considered "not Human" by the southern white planters, those starving today are made "unreal" by the media. Those reaping the benefits from the poor need this mechanism, or else we would see the injustice being inflicted on the majority of the world population and rectify it.

This "rectification" can happen in small ways here at UMass, including participation in the fast being held this Wednesday dinner. To participate, merely leave your name with the ticket taker on any meal Tuesday or breakfast and lunch Wednesday. After you do this, just don't show up for Wednesday dinner and the money saved by not eating will go to OXFAM, which runs many programs to fight to existing food crisis.

The absurdity of mass individualism

To the Editor:

Monday the Collegian printed a commentary by Drew Crane attacking the Black News Service and socialism and supporting an individualist approach to fighting racism. As a socialist, I know how easy it is to shoot down rhetoric caught in a 19th century philosophy. But not with an eighteenth century philosophy.

Crane promotes laissez-faire capitalism and a philosophy of individualism that do not exist today, and we shouldn't retreat to them, to a more racist period, to fight racism. What we have today is liberal corporate capitalism and a mass culture of individualism.

There is nothing more absurd than blind adherence of large numbers of people to a philosophy of individualism; the result is everyone striving to be themselves only to find that the methods of attaining true individualism are given to us patently by a mass culture.

The commentary states, "A culture is not the product of some nebulous collective society but the sum of intellectual achievements of individuals." Tell that to the construction workers that build the Library, see what kind of response you get. Culture is never simply a summation of individuals added together like numbers in a column, much less the summation of intellectual endeavors. Crane's thinking is like putting the generator in backwards in UMass's steam plant that sits idle.

Collective society is the producer of our culture, not in any nebulous way, but in our society culture is mass produced and given to us in fun to open little packages that promise unbelievable levels of pleasure and happiness. The mass media and our large institutions foment racism in a way that can't be corrected by recognizing others as equal regardless of skin color, or as the commentator suggests, by judging others according to their minds. White professors treating black physical plant workers as equals is a safe, status-quo supporting thing to do.

As long as the conditions that provide more opportunity and privilege for whites are not challenged, fighting racism on an individual level can only relieve the guilt of a few white liberals while the institutions continue reproducing racism at a voracious rate. The philosophy of individualism itself does not reproduce racism, but it marks the impotency of this society to transform itself. It is ironic that a mass culture of individualism cannot challenge the institutions which create racism; it is the very height of alienation.

If freedom under capitalism includes the freedom to be racist, and to foment racism is in the interests of capitalism, then capitalism and its culture of mass individualism must go. Not to be replaced by a mass culture of collectivism, but by a culture that is created by Americans in their neighborhoods, communities, and workplaces.

Prevent nuclear power

To the Editor.

Nuclear power is unsafe. The United States Atomic Energy Commission did not carefully consider these following problems: disposal of radioactive waste, safety systems that have never been fully tested, and health hazards of radiation.

Radioactive waste is presently buried in deep underground salt beds. ERDA (Energy Research and Development Agency) has considered burying radioactive waste in shale, granite and other rock formations in the United States. Is this the correct solution? Clearly, problems will result from this type of disposal. These radioactive wastes are toxic and present a health problem. Toxic materials must be perfectly contained to prevent their threatening our land, water and air resources. Another major problem with nuclear plants is an important safety system which has been overlooked.

This key device is the emergency core cooling system (ECCS) which has not been fully tested. The government is nine years behind on this type of testing. Keith Miller, a mathematician and computer code consultant to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) said, "We have no ASSURANCE that it (ECCS) will work... because there has not BEEN any experiments at large or full scale."

The most important problem is the health hazard of radiation. Nuclear emissions get into the water and eventually into the food chain. Radiation causes cancer, leukemia, birth defects, low resistance to disease and premature aging.

How about caring about the future of nuclear power? Try to educate yourself on the risk and benefits of nuclear power. Decide for yourself whether or not you will participate in the May 1 Support rally at Seabrook sponsored by the Clamshell Alliance. Send your letters to your Senators and State Representatives and let them know how you feel about nuclear power. Above all, GET INVOLVED!

Budgets of Third World groups in danger

By EDWARD COHEN

On Wednesday evening, at 7:00 in the campus center, several very important RSO budgets will come up for consideration at the student senate meeting. Two of those budgets are those of AHORA, the Latin American organization on campus, and Nummo News, the Black and Third World newspaper, as opposed to the Collegian, which is primarily a white oriented paper with a small amount of Third World community input.

During the history of AHORA's existence on campus, it has continued to provide cultural programs and speakers for the understanding of issues of and about the Hispanic community. If the funding for AHORA is cut there would be virtually no Hispanic programming on campus, which would be a great loss for the greater UMass community. The end of AHORA would deprive the entire Latino community of functions and services it would need for its survival.

Nummo News, which is an important voice for the Third World community and in its first year of existence, presented issues and raised questions which help the University community understand these issues of importance to Black and other Third World people. Its voice in protest against oppression has been consistent, describing attacks against Third World people, showing the way the economic system tends to put Black and other Third World people at the bottom, and describing the repression in such areas as Southern Africa, Chile, and Puerto Rico.

These two organizations, as are all the Third World organizations, are vitally important to the UMass community, in that they serve the Third World communities and also the white community by helping people deal with issues such as widening cultural awareness and the elimination of racism. Cutting these groups would only serve destructive purposes. It is criminal that during these times of attempts at level funding the budgets of Third World groups are attacked. I urge the entire University community to support our Third World organizations, as the Latin community organization, AHORA, and Nummo News.

Avoiding divisions

To the Editor:

There will be a meeting at 6:30 in the Rm 423b in the Student Union building [student senate council chambers] to organize support for groups whose budgets are being cut by the student senate. Each group provides a unique and vital service to the campus community.

The budget of each group was cut for reasons that are not related to the strength or worth of the group's programs. Ahora and Eco Latino are the sole voices of the Latin community on campus.

The Non Traditional Student Assembly provides counseling for students not accommodated by other university services. It appears that older students are left out. Resources Judaica provides a cultural center for the university's Jewish community. Without funding these groups cannot function.

While the Credit Union is growing in numbers, the Senate has chosen not to fund it. This decision is based on an administrative contention that such funding would be illegal. LSO has come out with the opinion that funding is not illegal. Acceptance of the Administration's position legitimizes their attempts to reduce the services that are and can be provided by the credit union.

Ironically enough the cuts the Senate has proposed for its own budget reflects the goals of Provost Puryear's plan to eliminate the teaching of Asian and Slavic languages from the University curriculum. If students are to fight the university budget cuts and attempts to make UMass a second rate vocational institution we must not allow the difficult circumstances to foster divisions among ourselves.

Not what you think!

To the Editor:

Yes, belly dancing is an art form.

No, not just for men's pleasure. Belly dancing is an ancient art form from the Middle East traditionally performed by women for women.

The belly symbolizes the center of life, love, sensuality. Women would gather and coach each other through labor by doing stomach rhythms and undulations. Today, in the Lamaze method of childbirth, many of the same movements are taught to help prepare women for birth.

So, what has happened to the art of belly dancing? As evidenced in Monday's Collegian the myth still lives that women dance solely for men "prompted applause mostly from male members of audience." From its feminist origins the dance has traveled to become the object of sexist oppression. When it was introduced in the Western world it was promptly assumed that since the women were expressing themselves sensuously it was, of course, for men. Women also accept this attitude and along with men think that the belly dance is out to seduce the man in the corner. How unfair to us!!!

Belly dancing is a celebration of birth and womanhood, not a cheap "exotic" dance for the pleasure of men.

Outliving idols

> The diary of your hurly-hurly years goes to my shelf to wait for my age to pass. Whether you are pretty or not, I outlive you, bend down my strange face to yours and forgive you.
> (ALL MY PRETTY ONES, Anne Sexton)

I saw Sheila the last time I was home and since then, I cannot stop thinking about the childhood we spent together. I suppose everyone has some person in their past like her — whether it be a childhood friend or a sister, a brother, even a parent. You idolize them and somehow they become the center of your universe. No matter what they say, it's the law, the gospel. And placing so much significance in what they say and who they are diminishes your own self-conception. You feel inferior. And worse, is when they take advantage of the situation.

And then you separate, take different roads leading to different ends. Age passes and you wonder about that person until one day you meet. In aging they have failed; they haven't become the stars you expected them to become and you realize you were the lucky one all along. That's growing up, I suppose — when the "awe" disappears. That's growing up — when you outlive your idols.

Sheila and I were born nine months apart — she was the older, the taller, the blonder, the smarter — need I go on? And we played together all the time since the day we could both walk. We lived on the same street with only another house to separate ours. She was a pretty girl with sharp blue eyes, a quick mind, an ingenious imagination. We always played Sheila's games and they were always games she made-up. Sheila was leader and I her loyal follower.

My mother was forever hollering at me for "being too nice" because Sheila always got her way with me. Sometimes I'd even give her my toys. Everything was for Sheila and I wanted to have so much whatever it was Sheila had.

Sheila took advantage of the situation — always. In school she was constantly rejecting me for friends who could be a bit more challenging for her. And I was always left in the background — hurt and confused. For my world rose and set with Sheila. I couldn't imagine life without her.

But in fifth grade, I had to adjust to not having Sheila there for her parents moved away.

In those ages that have separated us, I realize that I clouded many of my talents because of the dominance of Sheila's personality. I had never done well in school. My parents wondered what had happened since my older brother was quite smart. And then after fifth grade, my marks suddenly rose.

In those ages that have separated us, I wondered often what had become of Sheila. I expected she was a star somewhere. Well, I found out not too long ago. I was pleasantly surprised. It was I whose hair was lighter, I taller, I happier. Sheila had flunked out of some community college and was now working in some factory. I noticed the dullness in her eyes. I noticed that she had outgrown her imagination. I guess I was the lucky one all along.

I often wonder why people put themselves down and put others before them. I guess it's a challenge because after you've outlived an idol, you're all the more stronger for it, all the more confident in yourself for it. And after the ages pass and you outlive them, you appreciate them like you never could before and you can forgive them. For they are no longer a threat. Your face isn't as strange to you as it was before and theirs is all the more prettier.

I'm just a city cat

Hello, my name's Keema. I'm a cat and a damn good one. No one messes with me around Cliffside Apts because I'm in charge. What I say goes.

Anyway, the reason I'm writing this is because I want to say goodbye. You see, in a few days I'm leaving to go to New Jersey and I'm taking Richie and Nancy and Heather along with me. They're not bad people, as far as people go, but sometimes that four-year-old, Heather drives me crazy. She's always pulling on my tail or messing my fur or doing strange things to me. What she really likes to do is chase me into her room and then close the door so I can't get out.

Then she chases me around her room hugging me and telling me how cute I am. Well, I know I'm cute but since I'm no good at opening doors, I have to wait until someone comes in to see what the kid is doing to the poor cat. It's usually Richie.

Now Richie and I get along just great, sometimes. We've got a communication between us. We play together once in a while, but most of the time we go our own way. He never tries to make me do stupid things, like eat cat food.

Nancy is okay too but sometimes she gets a little mushy. She calls me her little Keema and all that kind of stuff. If any of my friends are around it can be embarrassing.

There's also a few other people around. Cynthia, for instance, seems to be all right. I really don't know her that well but anyone who can keep four cats of her own happy has to be one of the better people around.

Now there are those two guys that live up-stairs from me, Wellins and Caplan.

Sometimes if they're feeling big hearted enough, they'll give me a little milk. Big deal! Never once did they give me any steak, or fish even.

Wellins is the grouch. He's always yelling at the kids or the neighbors or his car or me. But he's always yelling at something.

Caplan, I don't know about.

That guy gets a little strange sometimes... like the night he got me high on catnip and then made a tape of me purring. Now that's strange. He and Richie are always looking for a fight. They push me around long enough until I finally let them have it. The last time we went at it, it took two weeks for their hands to heal.

You know, things aren't really that bad around here. I scratch on the screen and someone comes to let me in. I cry a little by someone's door and I get milk. I really got these people trained. But it's getting to be time to move on. I've heard about those tough New Jersey cats so I'll have to show them I'm no hick country cat.

Pretty soon they'll be a lot of other cats, and dogs, leaving the area and I want you to remember they got feelings to. So take care and don't worry. Things are going to be okay.

Sincerely,
Keema the cat

To those of you who don't know Keema or a cat like him, or people like Rich and Nancy and Heather, who are leaving, then you're probably not thinking about missing close friends. But I am.

For every shadow
 there is a light that shines
 Just out of reach.
For every dream forgotten
 there is a new dream beginning.

Behind the superficial logic

To the Editor:

The argument about students' unsatisfied demand in some fields necessitating the death of two departments and amputation of student and faculty positions in humanities and social sciences sounds superficially fair. It reflects the presumably democratic logic of the market. In fact, it is a prime example of "fragmentation thinking" that sees the world as pieced together from disconnected elements, like a pawnbroker's shop window.

Higher education, as guardian and promoter of human knowledge and humanistic values, is an organic whole. The enrollment in any single of its elements is no indication of their live function. Their contribution has a way of radiating and filtering through the university community and society at large. The view of the university as an organic whole made up of specialized but interdependent departments cannot possibly be so subtle as to be inaccessible to administrators. There must be more powerful reasons behind their deliberate lack of sense and sensitivity.

Is it the deference to pressures from higher echelons of the bureaucratic establishment which mobilizes their authoritarian instincts against the professional members of the university and students? Do new administrators, having inherited an institution as a going concern, feel they have to justify their existence by inventing the need for arbitrary changes? To my mind, basic bureaucratic parasitism goes a long way toward explaining why permanent disruption of work done by predecessors always threatens to become a way of life in institutions poorly controlled by democratic processes.

If past work of the administrators at UMass resulted in a reasonably promising development toward excellence, the job of gardeners bent on ploughing up arbitrarily its flower beds can quickly turn it into a swamp. Struggle for conservation is a way of preventing decline. But, of course, we need administrators who can be nudged (if they lack sound instincts of their own) to represent the University and the interests of society against the enemies of culture and civilization in the higher reaches of the state bureaucracy.

Latin students to protest cuts

To the Editor:

We, the Latin students who participated in the counter-demonstration yesterday afternoon would like to clarify some points in respect to our position.

First, we support the demands of the workers, students and professors against the "level funding" project.

Second, no sectarian attitude motivated our counter-demonstration.

Third, we specifically back those progressive speakers who participated in the rally.

We believe that we were left with no choice but to counter protest in order to be able to take our position to the people in an effective way. Individuals were included as speakers who belong to the Democratic Party. The Democratic Party as well as the Republican Party are responsible for the actual crisis in so far as they represent the ruling class ideology.

These people belong to the Student Senate. The Student Senate cut our budget by 85 per cent. It was morally impossible to protest together in a rally against any kind of budget cut along with people who irresponsibly cut our budget. They protest at higher levels for the actions they take themselves at lower levels.

Today we will celebrate a protest in preparation for tonight's Student Senate meeting. We invite all those who are not related to political parties responsible for determining budget cuts policies to protest with us. We invite students, professors and workers to be with us at 1:00 p.m. today. They are also cordially invited to be with us at 7:00 p.m. in CC 163. We especially invite all organizations that have been unjustly cut to stay together and selectively protest any attempt to divert the attention from the real issue; who controls our lives?

Funding disproportionate?

To the Editor:

I heard a lot of cries of racism at the last Senate meeting over the proposed FY-78 SATF budget. I would like to present some figures from the currently proposed FY-78 budget for your consideration. The total budget is currently $1,248,703.27. Of this $845,667.85 is comprised of; the Senate, the advocacy services, the bus service, Area Governments, R.S.O., and other branches of student government. The remaining $403,035.42 is divided up among many different and varied outside student organizations.

Of the remaining $403,035.42, $131,108.00 goes to eleven different Third World groups [this includes the $13,200 position of 'Third World Co-ordinator']. This is 32.5 per cent of the $403,035.42 pie.

A generous estimate for Third World Undergraduate students is 1,050 vs, 17,500 total Undergraduates. This is 6 per cent of the people receiving 32.5 per cent of the funds granted to outside student organizations.

I realize the Third World has special needs and to suggest they be funded strictly by percentage of population would be to deny racism exists on this campus. However I feel this is an unduly large percentage of the budget for any one special interest group to receive. I question if this is fair to the entire community. If this isn't blatant reverse racism, then what is?

MATERIALS AND CIVILIZATION (E)

Organization: The course will be taught using lectures illustrated with slides and demonstrations.

Aim: This course will describe the contributions that metals, glass, ceramics, plastics and other materials have made to our past and present day civilization. Case studies of ancient as well as contemporary items will be used to demonstrate the properties which make materials useful. How these properties depend upon the internal structure of materials will be developed.

In this era of solid waste pollution and rapid depletion of non-renewable raw materials recycling of materials seems necessary. Methods and problems of recycling metals, plastics, glass, and paper will be discussed along with estimates of the remaining world supplies of their raw materials.

Requirements: Three exams will be given. The grading curve for the course will be provided at the beginning of the course. An extra credit plan is available to allow students to have more control of their grade. As part of the extra ceredit plan, students may do readings, or projects, such as glass blowing of Christmas ornaments, silver smithing, or blacksmithing.

Pre-requisites: No science background is required.

Added Notes: No textbook will be used, however, a complete set of lecture notes and readings will be furnished to each student. A lab fee will be charged.

For students view of the course, teacher and course evaluation forms from '74 and '75 will be available at first class meeting.

PROJECT TEN-INQUIRY PROGRAM

PTEN 190 A: THE LIVING INQUIRY SEMINAR
(3 cr.) Frank Lennox, Nesta King, Johnstone Campbell

Our seminar will be a collective, cross-disciplinary investigation of the learning process. We will evaluate educational practice in schools and college as a way of helping students design their Inquiry Program curricula. We will investigate ideas on learning, society, and culture as an interdisciplinary basis for college learning. Assignments will be done in groups and based on the principles of self-direction and self-evaluation.

Strongly recommended for all entering Inquiry Program students.

PTEN 190 B: MODES OF INQUIRY IN SOCIAL SCIENCE
(3 cr.) Charles Adams

An inquiry into the nature of investigation in Anthropology and Sociology — the assumptions, the questions, the methods: What is the human being and How do you know? Specifically we will focus on American culture and the ways the American Dream has or has not been fulfilled.

Short papers, class attendance mandatory.

Enrollment limit: 15. Can be taken with Social Science lecture series (PTEN 190 C).

PTEN 190 C: SOCIAL SCIENCING
(2 cr.) Charles Adams and guests
Lecture series — time and place TBA

A series of lectures by Five College faculty on the research they are doing in the social sciences: each speaker will be talking about how he or she formulated the questions they are working on and how they are going about finding answers to those questions. A good way to get a sense of the range and kind of things done in the name of social science (i.3., economics, psychology, sociology, anthropology, political science).

Requirements: Attendance at all lectures and an integrating paper. No enrollment limit. Taken in conjunction with any social science course, this social sciencing satisfies the Modes of Inquiry requirement (see Science is Sciencing].

PTEN 190 D: CUBA: A STUDY IN EMPIRE AND REVOLUTION
(3 cr.) Robert Cole

As implied by the title of the course, we will examine two topics: (1) how the historical forces of empire led to the subordination of Cuba; and (2) the techniques and their effectiveness by which Cubans are revolutionizing their society. These two goals are interrelated, in that the historical conditions have both created the problems which the revolution confronts and place limits on the possibilities of Cuba in the present; moreover, the continuing drive for empire on the part of the U.S. is still experienced by Cuba.

In answering these questions in the case of Cuba, we will also learn more general principles which can be applied elsewhere regarding the nature of emprie and the possibilities of revolutionary changes.

PTEN 190 E: SCIENCE IS SCIENCING
(2 cr.) Lecture Series

A series of lectures given by Five College faculty. Each person will report on current research activities emphasizing what they are doing, why it is important, and how they are doing it. Possible examples include "Theories of the universe," "Wind and solar energy alternatives," "Radiation's effect on living things," "What's going on in space and how do we know?" The people who will be lecturing are working on the forefront of knowledge in these areas.

Requirements: Attendance (one unexcused absence) and a synthesizing paper. For Inquiry Program students: to qualify as a Natural Science Modes of Inquiry, this lecture series must be taken in conjunction with any other science course in the five colleges (taken any time before graduating from the Inquiry Program). The lectures are open to anyone, either for credit or not.

PTEN 390 A: THE DRAMATIC THEORY AND PRACTICE OF BERTOLT BRECHT
(3 cr.) Johnstone Campbell and Erin Williams

The purpose of the course is to study Bertolt Brecht's plays and theory in their historical, aesthetic, and theatrical contexts. Classes will be modeled on workshops; that is, they will be a combination of discussions about literary criticism, history, and aesthetics and practical exercises in performance and design. Students need not have prior experience in play production. What is required is an eagerness to explore the interdependence and interaction of theory and praxis in the epic-dialectic theater.

Requirements include regular participation in the seminar-workshops, short critical papers, and a final semester project.

PTEN 390 B: CITY POLITICS
(3 cr.) Ken Mosakowski
First class meeting: Thurs., Sept. 1, 7:00 p.m. (attendance mandatory]; thereafter by arrangement.

A non-theoretical practicum in campaigning for public office in a city election. Each participant will be required to work actively in a chosen candidate's campaign for mayor, at-large or ward councillor, school committee, or other office in a Massachusetts city election this fall. Three or four early strategy sessions on campus; then approximately eight weeks of on-street campaigning; followed by one or two post-mortem sessions after the November general elections. Campaign techniques reviewed and specific readings assigned by the instructor. Each participant will be required to write a comprehensive analysis or his-her chosen campaign at semester's end.

Previous political experience is not a prerequisite, but consultation with the instructor prior to September 1st is strongly recommended. Contact: Ken Mosakowski, 370 Crown Point, Amherst, 253-7768.

PTEN 390 C: STUDENT INTEREST RESEARCH SEMINAR
(3 cr.) Lawrence J. Magid

AIM: To provide students with skills and ability to critically analyze their institution — the University of Massachusetts. Various methods are introduced such as interview technique, questionnaire construction, archives research, investigative journalism, etc. Methods are discussed in context of actual class work assignment. The courst stresses cooperative research and students work as a team to produce an extensive report on the subject area(s) chosen by the people in the class.

REQUIREMENTS: Working as a team, students are expected to produce an extensive report. Each student is responsible for some segments of the report and will be evaluated for his-her contribution as well as quality of overall report. STUDENT PAPERS ARE OFTEN PUBLISHED BY SCER. Thus, the class encourages students to engage in research which will provide useful information and-or analysis about an important aspect of education at UMass.

READINGS: Students are provided with a 200-page hand-out (cost $3.50) and are expected to read it plus additional material suggested by instructor or class members and agreed upon by class. There will be readings in the research area chosen by the course. These may be documents, newspaper articles, reports, books, etc.

ADDED NOTES: This course is especially useful for students interested or involved in educational reform and student rights. No pre-requisites.

RHETORIC

RHETORIC 100 G
SECTIONS 9, 10, 11 and 12

This course is designed to help students with the rhetorical and mechanical operation of preparing an acceptable paper according to college curricula standards. The approach employs research as the vehicle with emphasis on forming hypotheses, making outlines, determining organizational approaches, analyzing and synthesizing evidence, and using specific developmental materials.

Considerable attention is given to those aspects of objective writing that distinguish it from the more traditional forms such as essays. Skills in the gathering, use and presentation of verifiable data are a fundamental aspect of the course. Accordingly, students will be oriented towards and equipped with those tools needed for use in the library. Students enrolled in classes requiring written term papers, laboratory reports and research papers will find this course useful.

SLAVIC LANGUAGES AND LITERATURES

Russian 101 (110)
Elementary Russian
Levin

Aim: To introduce the student to the joys and mysteries of the Russian language. In the first semester we will introduce the writing system (the Cyrillic alphabet) and the sound system and explain the relationships between them. From the very beginning the student will be speaking and understanding Russian in class and will gradually be introduced to Russian grammar. There will be regular written assignments and language laboratory written assignments and language laboratory exercises, all of which have as their goal the development of proficiency in all four language skills. Those students seeking additional work may also register for the accompanying honors colloquium (C20) which meets one hour weekly and provides supplementary information about life in the Soviet Union.

Requirements: Regular quizzes, 2-3 one-hour exams and a final.

Text: To be announced

Prerequisites: No previous language required, but a willingness to work hard an attend regularly is highly recommended.

Russian 111, 112 (119, 129)
Russian Reading Course, I, II
Stawiecki

Aim: To develop the student's ability to read scholarly Russian prose and literature. No attention will be paid to the other language skills. This course should be of particular interest to students who need to develop a reading knowledge of Russian as a tool. The first two semesters will concentrate on providing the student with an introduction to problems of Russian grammar, word building and sentence structure.

Topical Outline: Presentation of the basic elements of Russian structure (declension, conjugation, word formation) primarily for recognition and understanding, rather than for active control. Introduction to those aspects of sentence structure necessary for reading through the use of simplified reading selections.

Text: Dewey and Mersereau: Reading and Translating Contemporary Russian Requirements: Quizzes, exams and a final.

Prerequisite: No previous language training required.

Russian 201 (130)
Intermediate Russian
Lake

Aim: To continue the work begun in the first two semesters of Russian. An attempt will be made to use Russian exclusively except for brief explanations of grammar material. Short reading selections will be introduced and there will be some opportunity for simple conversation practice. By the end of this semester students should have sufficient control of Russian structure to enable them to 1) grasp directly the meaning of simple, non-technical prose; 2) write a simple letter, description or message without glaring errors; 3) understand the sense of what an educated Russian says when enunciating clearly; and 4) express uncomplicated ideas orally with a pronunciation understandable to a native speaker. Those students seeking additional work may also register for the accompanying honors colloquium (C21) which meets one hour weekly and provides supplementary reading and grammar.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, April 27 — Born today, you are determined to achieve success in business or profession -- so much so that you may well have so little time and energy left that success on the home front passes you by. You would do well to divide your time more evenly between career and family; otherwise, you may find yourself spending your twilight years with only the former to provide -- and to share -- your memories. As a young adult, you will probably have a great many personal relationships, many of them of the "true friendship" variety. Such relationships may be forfeited to ambition, however, if you do not learn to keep in check that vision you have of yourself as a highly successful career individual.

You enjoy other people; indeed, you have a real need for the comfort only associations with other people can supply. You do not, however, enjoy other people so much that you will sacrifice material possessions to preserve that enjoyment. You are not by nature an independent person, but independence may well become the mark of your character before you are well into your maturity. Your industry is such that it is often employed by others as an example to those given to laziness. Industry, however, is not the whole of the road to gain; unless you also live by honor and integrity, you may forfeit much.

You are not one who can muster up enough interest in a given project to attack it successfully when that project does not in the first place hold at least a modicum of fascination for you. It is vital to your progress that you be able to involve both mind and heart in whatever takes your time and energy. What is possible, however, is for you to "farm" out projects until they reach a point where they do interest you and where progress for you is feasible.

Thursday, April 28

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take care that plans don't fall by the wayside as a result of being unable to keep up with a tight schedule. Reschedule, if possible.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — If aspirations out-distance ability, you are in trouble. Refuse to work on projects outside your talent, interest or preparedness.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You would do well to go along with whatever change results from recent efforts of the community at large to teach the young.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You could easily attain a position of some authority at this time. Don't rest on your laurels; fight against natural enemies.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — When you see or hear of work well done, make it a point to congratulate the worker. Compliments go a long way toward providing paths to success.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Small matters cause you more worry than you should allow. Take care to keep hands off another's work. Prepare for a new phase of work on your own.

SCORRIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Work with energy today — so long as the work you do is of a non-physical nature. Overtaxing your strength leads to failure late in the day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Restrain yourself. Refuse to argue another's point for him. Take upon vourself only those responsibilities that are rightfully yours.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 20) — Limitations placed upon your freedom at this time may prove more justified than you think. Keep personal involvement to a minimum.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Think over your moves carefully before embarking on a new project. Selfless service to others will be rewarded by day'eb. 19-March 20) -- If you have plans well set, by all means, go through with them. Take care, however, to make no changes that are uncalled for.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Trust to your own knowledge, not another's. There is little room for the doubter today where future success is concerned.

Mets get Randle

NEW YORK [UPI] — The market for Lenny Randle had dwindled to practically nothing. A couple of clubs which had been interested previously, to a degree, anyway, backed off after his assault on Frank Lucchesi a month ago.

They were afraid of the negative publicity that would follow if they took on Randle because after all, some sense of law and order still prevails among most people in the land and how much approval can you reasonably expect for picking up a ballplayer who goes and beats up the manager because of losing the second base job to someone else?

The Mets figured they'd take a chance.

Their pitchers have been hollering for a hitter so much, any kind of hitter to help big Dave Kingman, the Mets felt they have nothing to lose. They haven't been going well to begin with and need more punch so badly, they're willing to risk whatever criticism follows by adding someone like Randle, who hit .224 for the Texas Rangers last year. It was merely a case of any port in a storm even if the port doesn't look so good to anybody else.

Now what happens?

With Randle coming aboard, does Felix Millan take a punch at Joe Frazier?

Forget it. Felix Millan isn't the type, but then again those who felt they knew him say Lenny Randle isn't either.

In giving up a chunk of cash, which they can certainly spare, plus a player to be named later, who doesn't figure to be much, the Mets are dealing for what they hope will turn out to be an entirely different Lenny Randle. They're hoping all the publicity over his attack on Lucchesi eventually will die down and that a change of leagues will bring out in him something closer to the .304 he hit for the Rangers three years ago. Nothing wrong with hoping, is there? That's why so many people buy lottery tickets.

Randle's departure from the Rangers, one day before his 30-day suspension with them was up, came shortly before he surrendered to police in Tempe, Ariz., yesterday on an Orange County, Fla., warrant charging him with aggravated battery on Lucchesi. If convicted, he could draw 15 years in the slammer, a $10,000 fine, or both.

Marshall on waivers

EAST LANSING, Mich. [UPI] — Relief pitcher Mike Marshall declared an end of his career with the Atlanta Braves Tuesday, but said he is keeping an "open mind" about a trade.

The former Cy Young Award winner was placed on waivers by the club after an open dispute with manager Dave Bristol over pitching philosophies.

The club suggested a trade and reportedly will begin to work out a deal when the waivers clear Friday. Without closing any options, Marshall said he is not interested in going to another club.

"I said that I would keep an open mind about it," he said. "It's not something I am actively seeking.

"It's hard for people to understand, but there is life after baseball. As far as I'm concerned, I retired."

Marshall failed to reach an agreement with the Braves Monday in a meeting with owner Ted Turner on his grievance that he wasn't being pitched enough.

"I played baseball for the fun of it," he said. "It wasn't any fun the way they had me playing. I found out he (Bristol) had a different idea of how baseball should be played than I did. Namely, how to use the bullpen."

Trackwomen set two school records

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The cold, rainy weather on Saturday gave the UMass women's track team no more trouble than Central Connecticut State as the Minutewomen set two school records on the way to an 80-29 victory.

The women remained undefeated in dual meets this spring and are "by far the number one team in New England," according to coach Gary King.

School records were set by Julie Lafreniere in the mile run with a time of 5:02 and by Diane Sealy, who won the quarter mile in 58.6 seconds.

"We looked very strong for this time of the year," said King, "and we seem to be moving towards peaking for the Easterns a week from Friday."

Central made a meet of it early as it swept the shot and discus, but UMass came back with Gail Emond (112'2) winning the javelin and Nancy Cominoli (15'8½) and Sue Kibling taking first and third in the long jump.

On the track, it was all UMass, as the Minutewomen took every first place and swept four events. In the 440 relay, the quartet of Cominoli, Sealy, Kathy Contini, and Cindi Martin came close to eclipsing another school record with a time of 51.7 seconds. The mile relay of Martin, Sealy, Lafreniere, and Johara Chapman also came up first with a time of 4:14.5.

The women dominated the distances, as the mile and two-mile were both swept. Jane Welzel (11:18.7) Sue Swartz, and Anne Bradshaw collaborated in the longer race. Chapman and Barb Callanan took second and third, respectively, in Lafreniere's record setting mile.

UMass was no less dominant in the middle distances, and two more sweeps were the result. Bonnie Bukowski (2:23.8), and Sue Mulligan (2:23.9) ran one-two in the 880, with Laurie Wolf in third. In the 440, Martin (:59.5) also went under 60 seconds and took second behind record-breaker Sealy. Carolyn Shea was third.

The sprints and hurdles are usually high point events for UMass, and this meet was no different. Ginger Bulman (:70) and Chris Perron were one-two in the 440 intermediate hurdles, while Perron (:15.7) and Cominoli (:15.9) ran one-two in the 100 meter high hurdles.

Cominoli won the 100-yard dash in 12 seconds with Perron third. Contini took the 220 in 27.7 seconds with Karen Sweeney third.

The Minutewomen will next be in action on Friday when two of the top teams in New England, URI and Vermont, visit the Derby Track.

"If we get some good warm weather in the 70's," said King, "we should see some nice times on Friday."

With the prospect of facing the best teams in the area, both opponents should be sky high and with the meet being held on the always fast Derby Track, fireworks could result. Some of the finest women's track athletes in New England will be on hand.

Ruggers tie foe as B side wins

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

The UMass rugby football club A side fought a tough Schenectady club to a 7-7 tie in the pouring rain Saturday in New York; and the UMass B side hammered out an impressive 12-4 come-from-behind win over the New Yorkers.

The Minutemen A's started disorganized and Schenectady took an early penalty kick and a 3-0 lead. Unfazed, UMass pulled its game together and scored off a line-out play from 25 yards out for a 4-3 halftime lead.

The ball went out quickly to wing John Mulray and he made a nice run and pitch back to fullback Jeff Stefani, who went the last 10 yards for the go-ahead try. Hugh Chester-Jone's attempted the conversion from a bad angle, was barely wide, and the Minutemen lost two precious points.

"We blew some real good chances to score," UMass coach "Doc" Laurence said, "but it was because of the rain. We moved the ball very well, but it was too wet to hold at times and that cost us some scores."

Chester-Jones drilled a penalty kick through from 35 yards out and UMass had a 7-3 second half lead and momentum as center Bob Ronski's inside breaks had the Minutemen rolling.

But Schenectady's large size advantage finally began to take its toll. The Minutemen tired and were not rucking as well as earlier in the game. A Schenectady player squirted out of a ruck and scored a five-yard try that knotted the game at 7-7.

Any thoughts the New Yorkers had of romping were dispelled by tenacious UMass tackling. Ronski and Brian Coolbaugh applied several ball ringing hits and the defense held the 7-7 tie.

"Our defense is sound," Laurence said. "We've only given up five trys in four games. This was the strongest effort yet by the A side, they moved the ball well against a tough opponent," he added.

"It was one of Stefani's best games ever," Laurence said. "He and Ronski moved the ball well all day."

The UMass B side, losing 4-3 with 10 minutes left in the game, got seven points and the win on a try and penalty kick by wing Eddie Bender.

The Minutemen scored first on a 30-yard Andy Middleton penalty kick, but Schenectady took a 4-3 halftime lead on a short forward rush.

"I know coaches tend to use the weather as an excuse," Laurence said, "but rain definitely works against a small quick team like us and for a big, slow team like Schenectady. It makes team speed, which we have, much less of a factor," he added.

The mud bogged both squads down in the second half, but the Minutemen kept hitting and looking for a break. They got it on a line out play deep in Schenectady territory. UMass second row man Mike Malone's tackle separated Schenectady's fly half from the ball. Malone kicked the ball into the in goal area and Bender streaked in and covered it for the winning try.

Bender kicked the conversion for a 9-4 lead and added a 35-yard penalty kick with two minutes left.

"We were in better physical shape than them," Laurence said, "and when we got an opportunity late in the game we still had the quickness to take advantage."

"The ball handling was good despite the weather," Laurence added, "and Bender was there when we needed him."

Scrum Scraps — A side captain Rick Lopes still out with fractured cheek, but is expected back in action this weekend — Stefani pulled hamstring during fine A game performance and was replaced by Andy Middleton, who also did nice job — Not enough UMass C side players showed up to make a squad and the A and B players were not inclined to lend their talents to the C's.

Polo-men in nailbiters...

The UMass men's water polo team traveled to Brown University this weekend for the annual Brown Spring Tournament. UMass, New York City College, Brown, and Queens College battled in one division, while Yale, Lower Mooreland, Harvard and RIP met in the other.

UMass faced City first. The game was exciting with City leading early and UMass fighting back until the closing minutes, steadily chipping away at the lead. City was able to withstand being out-shot 4-2 by UMass in the last two minutes of play and won 10-6. Scoring for UMass were: Henry MacLean with three goals, Russ Yarworth with two goals and two assists, and Duncan Lomas with one goal and two assists. Goalie Rick Notini played well, chalking up a rare stop of a City penalty shot.

UMass met Brown next. It was a close game and UMass swam unintimidated against the renowned Brown swimmers. Brown held a slight edge in scoring for most of the game but UMass worried it into a 5-5 tie in the last two minutes of the game. Brown had held a 5-2 lead at the half. In the exciting closing seconds Brown scored and won it 6-5.

Yarworth had two goals and one assist, MacLean scored two goals, Ben Crooker had one goal and one assist, and Joe Hebert and Tom McGinn each had one assist.

UMass finished the tournament by tromping Queens College, 18-3. Lomas had five goals and four assists, Yarworth had five goals and three assists, Rick Mansfield had four goals and two assists, McGinn had two goals and one assist, and MacLean Hebert scored one goal apiece (MacLean also two assists).

Brown went on to win the tournament, with City finishing second.

Since UMass did not win the mandatory two games in its division, it could not play in the finals. UMass players were mostly pleased with what they learned and by the fact that their losses were close. UMass was also playing without the services of captain Bob Corb.

...women place 3rd

The women's water polo team wound up the spring AAU season at a tournament hosted by Boston College. Four teams participated: UMass, Boston College, Slippery Rock College (Pennsylvania), and Harvard University. The tournament, held at Harvard's pool, lasted two days, and each team played three games.

UMass played Slippery Rock first and lost, 13-5. UMass experienced its first taste of water polo outside New England in this game marked by the finely coached and disciplined Pennsylvanian play. Adrienne Fredey scored three goals for UMass, and Deb Hoxsie scored two.

The UMass women faced rival Boston College next and lost a hard-fought game, 14-10. UMass was playing without its starting-and only-goalie, Eve Atkinson. This was a major factor in the game, but UMass offensive scoring almost made up the difference. Hoxsie scored three goals, Fredey and Deb Schwartz each scored two, and Rachel Mack, Louise Fasser, and Alix Den Hartog all scored one apiece.

The third game was a romp for UMass as it beat Harvard 15-5. UMass teamwork was the best of the tournament and everyone took a turn playing goalie. Hoxsie scored five goals, Nancy Campbell scored three, Schwartz three, Mack two, and Fredey, Lynn Lutz, and Den Hartog each had one.

UMass ended up third and Hoxsie was the tournament's high scorer with 10 goals total.

Sox top Brewers behind Wise's arm

MILWAUKEE [UPI] — Rick Wise, who entered the game with a 54.00 earned run average, set Milwaukee down on five hits before yielding to Bill Campbell in the ninth Tuesday night and Carlton Fisk singled home one run and scored another in leading the Boston Red Sox to a 3-1 victory over the Brewers.

Wise, now 1-1, allowed a single to Von Joshua and a double to Robin Yount to open the game, then retired the next 18 Brewers in order before Cecil Cooper singled to right with one out in the seventh. The Brewers scored their lone run in the ninth on an RBI base hit by Cooper after Joshua singled and moved up on an infield out.

Wise, who had yielded 10 runs, all earned, in the one and two thirds innings he worked in two previous games this season, did not walk a batter and struck out eight.

Boston scored the only run Wise needed in the fourth on Fisk's single, Dwight Evans' groundout and Butch Hobson's double. In the fifth, run-scoring singles by George Scott and Fisk accounted for the other two Red Sox runs.

Jerry Augustine, 2-2, took the loss.

Canadiens win again

MONTREAL [UPI] — Jim Roberts broke up a scoreless tie with a shorthanded goal at 7:46 of the final period last night as the Montreal Canadiens blanked the New York Islanders, 3-0, and grabbed a 2-0 lead in their best-of-seven Stanley Cup semifinal series.

With the victory, the Canadiens tied an NHL playoff record of 11 straight wins. Montreal's current streak began with the fifth game of the 1976 semifinals against the Islanders.

Larry Robinson gave Montreal a 2-0 lead at 11:31 when his shot bounced past Smith after striking Islanders defenseman Gerry Hart. Peter Mahovlich added a power play goal at 19:24 to round out the scoring.

Montreal goaltender Ken Dryden stopped only 19 New York shots as he registered his sixth career playoff shutout.

Odd couple lead Gorilla attack

By SCOTT HAYES

When talking about Mickey Menna and Kevin Patterson, two of the superlative attackmen on the UMass men's lacrosse team's offense, one thing is certain — you can't confuse one for the other. There's just no way.

Menna is 5'6" tall and Patterson towers above opposing defensemen at 6'7". Both contribute different things to the UMass attack and the difference in stature and skills makes it that much harder to defend against the UMass offense.

"Patterson stands out because of his size and his great stickwork," says UMass coach Dick Garber. "Mickey is much more of a 'settle' player and more of a traditional attackman. He can feed and shoot or score off loose balls."

Patterson, who scored 26 goals in the first eight games this season, said he realizes that he contributes to the offense with his scoring and stickwork around the crease. The Sanborn, NY native also said that he doesn't mind watching his teammates from the sideline when an opposing defensive unit shuts off his play inside. Patterson's Tuscarora Indian background has made lacrosse a part of his life since youth. Patterson said he is the first to realize that when Garber goes with three more mobile attackmen, as was the case in the final five minutes of the Rutgers game (that UMass won, 12-11, with 1:48 to play), it's the right move and one that's not to be questioned.

"We work together well," says Patterson of his fellow attackmen, Menna and Jeff Spooner. "They hit me with perfect passes and it's easy to score. When they beat their man it forces a switch, which leaves me open."

Menna, who had scored 16 goals himself and added 28 assists through the initial eight games, lays the praise on Patterson. "He's a good target to hit, but you know, I'm not used to throwing passes so high."

Menna talks about the different kinds of attackmen — the dodgers, the feeders and the crease attackmen. "There are different types of players, but the position is mostly hustle," Menna said.

Menna's style of play combines aggressiveness and hustle that often results in a goal when he "rides" an opponent, causing a mistake around the opposing team's net. Menna's quickness often enables him to get to a loose ball first and either score himself or pass off to Patterson or Spooner.

Menna has become known for his fearless checking in his two-year jaunt at UMass. A year ago he separated his shoulder after a hit against a Brown player and was back on the field three weeks later, playing against Harvard.

Patterson is often the recipient of some hard hitting around the net because he's so big. "I'm used to it, but there are some games when it reaches a limit," Patterson says.

The diversity at attack has proved to be a blessing for Garber. "If a team shuts off Patterson, Menna and Spooner will kill 'em and if they concentrate on Menna and Spooner, Patterson is likely to have a big day."

Menna and Patterson. Patterson and Menna. They make a unique combination, but one that UMass lacrosse followers have come to enjoy. The two are like ham and eggs — they go well together.

Diamondmen face SMU

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

Put away the tarpaulin, drag out the bats and balls, clean off home plate and let's play ball. That's the attitude of the UMass baseball team after its rain prolonged six day layoff.

The Minutemen, who have had ample time to ponder their playoff possibilities, will be hosting Southeastern Mass. University this afternoon at Earl Lorden field, at 3:00 p.m.

The team's record stands at 11-14, and if any post-season berths are going to be reached, coach Dick Bergquist feels his squad must win virtually every remaining game on its schedule.

The opposition, which hails from North Dartmouth, Mass., made an acquaintance with the Minutemen earlier this month at their host Corsair Invitational tournament. UMass won that tournament by sweeping a twinbill from the Corsairs on the final day of the tournament.

Bergquist will send his two most consistent starting pitchers to the mound in hopes of beginning the teams stretch drive towards the playoffs on a positive note. Jeff Reardon and Tom Nigro will split the mound duties, in order that they may come back with only two days rest to face URI this Saturday.

If the Minutemen are entertaining any thoughts about a second consecutive NCAA playoff berth their hitting must become a more consistent factor, especially with men on base. The team has allowed 179 potential runs to linger on the basepaths, or an average of more than seven per-game.

Freshman Mike McEvilly leads the team in hitting with a .355 average and is second only to outfielder Bob Alves in the RBI department with 18. Ed Skribiski is the only other Minuteman batting above the coveted .300 mark with a solid .323 average.

Although hitting for a respectable .257 average, the team has bunched its offensive production into clusters and has lost eight one run ballgames. The under .500 record is not befitting a team which has outscored and out-hit its opponents by a considerable margin.

It's win or die for the Minutemen, today and for the rest of the season.

Gazelles gunning for revenge today

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

It will be more than just another game today for the UMass women's lacrosse team when it travels to Bridgewater St. to play the Bears in a 3 p.m. contest.

This is the moment that the Gazelles have been waiting for for nearly a year — a chance to avenge the only loss they suffered last season.

Last year, in their first official season, the Gazelles had a near-perfect season only to have a loss to Bridgewater St. blemish their record. In the game which was played here, Bridgewater St. edged the Minutewomen, 5-3 in a tight defensive battle.

However, UMass coach Frank Garahan strongly believes that things will change for the better for the Gazelles this time around.

"Our team is really up for this game," Garahan said just before his team took to the practice field yesterday afternoon. "We could have won that game last year if we didn't miss a lot of the opportunities we had, but that is in the past. There is nothing you can do about it."

Even though Bridgewater is in the middle of a rebuilding year and has gotten off to a so-so 2-2 start, Garahan is still somewhat worried about the Bears.

"There is no question about it," Garahan said, "when you are talking about the most perennial power in New England women's lacrosse, you are talking about Bridgewater St.

"You cannot sell them short just because of what their record is right now. I saw them play earlier in the season and they are a strong ballclub. They play a very tight defense and they are very good with their stickwork and passing."

However, there is a great difference in style of play between the two teams. On one hand, UMass utilizes a fastbreaking offense and an aggressive man-to-man defense, while Bridgewater plays a more deliberate style of offense and not quite as aggressive a defense.

"Their fastbreak is not as visible as ours," Garahan pointed out. "But they do have the capability of scoring from any part of the field at any time."

Garahan feels that the Gazelles have begun to mesh and are playing just great as a team.

"Our team is just improving so much each game," he said. "In the doubleheader we played in Rhode Island on Saturday, I thought that we handled the ball much better, and totally dominated the play in both games with our aggressive play.

"It isn't that we are playing a physical or dirty game. When I say we are playing aggressively I mean that we are really hustling for ground balls and checking very well."

Garahan also said that the different styles of play each team has should make it quite an interesting contest.

Bruins escape double OT

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Terry O'Reilly forced a shot past goalie Wayne Stephenson at 10:07 of the second overtime period early this morning to give the Boston Bruins a 5-4 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers and a 2-0 margin in their Stanley Cup semifinal series.

Boston gained its second straight overtime victory when Don Marcotte skated behind the net and poked the puck out to O'Reilly, who was to the left of Stephenson.

Earlier in the second overtime, the Flyers missed an opportunity to score when Boston goalie Gerry Cheevers blocked and then almost tipped in a shot by Bill Barber.

At 14:02 of the first overtime, the 17,077 hometown fans burst into wild cheers when it appeared Reggie Leach had put a backhand shot from behind the net past Cheever. The red light flashed, but officials said the puck slid in under the net and disallowed it.

The Bruins won a sudden-death contest Sunday night in the first game of the series 4-3 when Rick Middleton scored at 2:57 in the first overtime.

The sudden-death goal ended a see-saw, bruising match in which the two teams combined to score three times within 38 seconds of the second period to tie a Stanley Cup record for the fastest three goals.

The Flyers led 3-2 when the Bruins' Mike Milbury tied the game at 15:01 of the second period. Fifteen seconds later the Flyers' Gary Dornhoefer put Philadelphia ahead, and then at 15:39 Boston's Jean Ratelle tied the score 4-4 with a shot off Philadelphia goalie Stephenson's left foot.

The Bruins had taken a 1-0 lead in the first period on a goal by Peter McNab. Andre Dupont tied it with a 55-foot backhand slapshot.

Sport today— Is it worth it?

As you sit in front of the television, watching one of the hundreds of sporting events televised each year, did you ever stop to think that maybe, just maybe mind you, that we have over-emphasized the value of sport in our society?

I mean, how important is sport? Is it worth paying six-million dollars to a professional ballplayer? Is it worth having a city pay millions of dollars of the taxpayers money to support sport, while half of the city lives in inadequate housing? Is it worth giving college athletes scholarships?

When you sit down and examine the facts, maybe you can see that we may perhaps be guilty of over-emphasizing sports, and yes, maybe we are needlessly wasting millions of dollars on it.

Since professional organized sports began back in the 19th century, it has not been unusual for cities to use the taxpayers' money to build a stadium that would attract a team. It was not unusual then, and it is not unusual today, here in the 20th century.

Three years ago, New York City decided that it was time to refurbish antiquated Yankee Stadium. After all, the place was beginning to show its age, so the city's leaders decided that a facelift for the famous shrine would be in order.

It took the city two years and six million dollars to rebuild Yankee Stadium. The ironic thing about the whole situation was that there was New York City, just about on the brink of bankruptcy and yet it shelled out six-million dollars to rebuild a baseball stadium.

The city thought that by remodeling Yankee Stadium, it would pay thousands of dollars back in dividends.

Well, after one year, a year in which the Yankees won the American League pennant, recently released figures show that New York City revenue from Yankee Stadium fell far short of its projections.

The city received $1.7 million in direct revenue from Yankees' games, which was some $500,000 short of the city's own estimate of what it would receive.

So the city, which has to pay about six-million a year for the stadium, has only $1.7 million to cover, which forces the city to dip into the till once again and use the taxpayers money to pay the costs.

In other words, so far the project is a flop. It is unfortunate that the city didn't decide to use the money for housing or to combat crime in the streets; something which could have been helpful to society at large.

Why should people in this supposedly affluent country to go bed hungry at night, while cities and municipalities throw away millions into sports?

I am not saying that we do away with sports altogether. I am just saying that maybe there should be a little change in our priorities. Instead of building stadiums and bringing teams into cities, maybe we should be feeding the hungry and helping support the poor who are unable to work.

New York is not the only city guilty of such short sightedness. Every city from Boston to Los Angeles is guilty of it. And it isn't only the cities that are guilty, it is the colleges as well.

Every year, both sprawling factory-like universities and tiny colleges alike budget thousands of dollars for athletics. Is that really necessary?

When you come down to think of it, only a small percentage of the student population participates in varsity sports, so why should colleges spend thousands of our dollars to support those few athletes who reap the benefits while the majority get nothing out of it?

Instead of having a varsity program in which only a selected few can participate, why not just have a large intramural program which could serve a lot more people?

Times have changed and it is time for us to realize that our priorities have to be altered. Who knows? Ten years from now, sports as we know it today may be something completely different.

$55,000 deficit planned

Senate over-appropriates

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Undergraduate Student Senate Treasurer Thomas J. Kerrins warned the senate body last night "The budget is extended by at least $55,000." He urged senators to "think about" his admonitions before considering motions scheduled to come before voting members for requested fundings.

Kerrins clarified the tenuous budget position saying monies for Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) would come out of program support funds from the Finance committee.

Senator Kenneth Noel began discussion on Ahora, the first RSO group requesting funding. Ahora, serving the spanish speaking community has recently joined forces with spanish newsletter Eco Latino in requesting an amendment of $8992 added monies to their allotted budget of $2068 for fiscal year (FY) '77-'78.

"If you take the money out of program support then the programs that will come up next year will have less of a chance to be funded," he said.

Noel's remarks typified the feelings of many of the Third World senate representatives and many of their constituents who demonstrated their support at last night's senate meeting.

Senator Kwaku Saunders echoed his collegue's remarks, "Who here has not grown up in America as racist? The university is a microcosm of the country. We, the members of the national minorities, are quite aware of the viability of our various experiences and cultures."

Heated debate ensued following Senator Peter Graham's proposal that an alternative means of securing monies for Ahora be found.

"Last year we gave over $3000 from finance, why couldn't we do the same and have the remainder come out of somewhere else?" he said.

Senator Jay Flynn voiced disapproval of the requisition.

Noel's final remarks stating that the two organizations combined were asking for $11,000 in total led to a move calling for immediate vote.

The motion for fund request was approved 51-35.

The favored vote was met with much applause from senators and supporters. RSO groups awaiting their turn followed prededent, making arguements and responded warmly as each group was awarded their sough after funds.

Despite Senator Kevin Muldon's "objection of consideration" of the motion funding RSO group Resources Judaica $2995 for FY '78 approval of funding was passed for the "community services organization" by a vote of 41-12.

Senator Steven Ross objected to criticism that Resources Judaica was "a religious organization" explaining "that fallacy that Resources is connected with religion has been proved by this body before."

Ross denounced suggestions that Resources Judaica fund itself by collecting "one dollar from each of the three thousand Jews on campus."

He said "the organizations sponsors events of interest to the entire student body regardless of religious or cultural denomination."

Under strict enforcement of debating procedures by Speaker Brian DeLima senatorial voting moved swiftly to approve funds for some 40 RSO groups including Index, Spectrum, Lesbian Union, Collegian, WMUA and area governments.

Another area of debate came with funding of the Credit Union. DeLima called for executive session to determine if the senate would take legal action against the administration on the matter of $8,000 monies request.

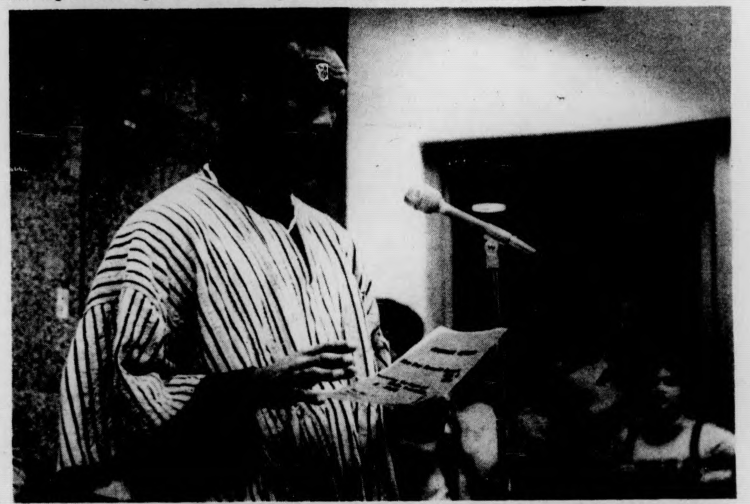
The administration contends that funding would be an illegal move due to the bank's federal status. A representative from Legal Services Organizaton (LSO) maintains funding would be legal if approved by a two-thirds senate vote.

The final decision of the senate was to delay voting on the funding pending further investigation.

Senators Noel and Saunders also addressed the senate body last night to apologize for derogatory remarks made during last week's meeting.

"I submit a general apology for the timings and implications made by my statements" said Noel of last week's ruckus concerned with racial differences within the senate.

Saunders reminded senators that "tensions were high and emotions were tense," during the seven day old resentment by some senators over the approval funding for $13,000 salaried position for a Student Organizing Project Third World Organizer.



"Who here in America has not grown up racist?" asked Kwaqu Saunders at last night's senate meeting. (Staff photo by Marilyn Mankowsky)

Ahora protests 85 per cent cut

By BRAD GOVERNMAN

Fifty protesters marched from Goodell to the steps of the student union building yesterday chanting, "We are Spanish, we are black, but we want our money back."

The rally protested a recommendation by the Senate Budget Committee that funding for Ahora, an umbrella group of Spanish speaking students on campus, be cut 85 per cent.

Ahora, a Recognized Student Organization (RSO) group serving the educational and cultural interests of Spanish speaking people in western Massachusetts, was allocated $2,068 by the proposed budget act of 1978. Last year the group was budgeted $8,601.

Speaking at the rally, Undergraduate Senate Senator Kenneth Noel said Ahora's request for an $11,000 budget was not unreasonable because Ahora had merged with Eco Latino, another RSO groups whose funding was dropped.

Speaking on behalf of Ahora, Karen Quinones called the proposed 85 per cent cut funding "a threat to our existence as the only voice of Latin Americans on campus."

Quinones said suggestions by senators that the organization raise their own operational monies were discriminating against Third World people.

"How does the senate expect us to charge admission for every event when the Third World community is financially as well as politically and socially oppressed?", she said.

Speaker Samuel Hilario drew cheers from the crowd of about 40 onlookers when he spoke on the issue of oppression and equal rights.

Nursing head quits

By KEVIN TURCOTTE

Ira D. Trail, the Director of the UMass Division of Nursing handed in a "one line resignation" yesterday afternoon effective August 31.

Eight other faculty members from the Division of Nursing have either resigned already, or will resign by the end of this school year.

The Division of Nursing has 27 faculty positions.

Trail said her resignation had "more to do with my own self concept and my view of academia than anything else."

William A. Darity, Dean of the School of Public Health, said, "I'm not in any position to make a statement, we haven't discussed this yet."

When asked about the nursing students attending next fall, Trail said, "I think they're going to be very disappointed, but I think it's the University's problem — they have a commitment to these students."

Kathleen E. O'Rourke, an instructor resigning from the Division of Nursing, said the division was "low on faculty morale. It's hard to get up and go to work sometimes."

"I've gotten a lot of bad feedback about Ira Trail," said Rich Robertson, a UMass student involved in organizing student nurses in the past.

"Her resignation comes as good news with hopes the nursing school will be better organized in the future," Robertson said.

The news of Trail's resignation came as a surprise to students and many of her senior faculty as well.

That's Absurd!

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Fear and disbelief heightened as thousands gathered under the sunny skies by the campus pond yesterday afternoon. At precisely 12:30 p.m. Weevil Kanevil straddled his bicycle and started down the grassy knoll by the Fine Arts Center Building. Weevil, a student, leaned forward to pick up speed as he headed for the crowds lining the banks of the pond. The bicycle rolled by plank after plank of a makeshift ramp that preceded the beckoning waters. The crowd clapped wildly.

Traveling at a speed estimated as greater than 30 mph the bicycle carried its rider over the lip of the supporting steel platform into the murky depths almost directly below.

Weevil, known to University administration as Michael Law, re-emerged in his Weevil costume wet but unharmed with his World War Two gas mask still intact across his face.

He then dove back under the three-foot deep waters and presented his retrieved bicycle, wet but unharmed, to the appreciation of the more than 4,000-person crowd.

"The water was cold, but I was more disgusted with the mud at the bottom," said the triumphant Weevil.

Though disappointed with his failure to span the banks of the pond, Weevil said he would be back next year.

"The grass was so wet that I felt the wheels spinning but I knew I wasn't moving, I'll make it next time."

Weevil smiled to the crowds as he turned to walk his bicycle back to the Fine Arts building. "Remember Weevil's wobble but they don't fall down," he crowed. The jump was but one of the many events sponsored by the Design Areas of the Art Department of the University as part of a co-operative venture entitled "Festival of the Absurd."

Yesterday's festivities began with a "Mostly White" party where participants appeared in white clothing and painted faces. Four gross balloons were indiscriminately handed out to students and faculty while hundreds enjoyed the unusual strains of a xylophone concert performed on the steps of the Fine Arts Building.

Seven persons donned black outfits to produce their personal "happening."

Norman Phillips, fine arts professor explained, "We want to humanize the Fine Arts building by dancing on it, singing on it and laughing around it. We want to show the students of this campus that the arts are alive."

Puryear, Bromery expected disfavor

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

Provost Paul L. Puryear yesterday said a "long range plan done at any university in the way required by the president's office can expect some kind of reaction from faculty" disfavored by the allocations.

Both he and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery in separate interviews addressed the topics of long range planning, unionization, and enrollment trends in the future.

Puryear, also the Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs, said he was "not entirely surprised" by the faculty protests, since he said he believes the University has "done very little long range planning in the past three years."

According to Puryear, a long range plan for a university "normally unfolds over a 12-15 month period, and then fully implemented in two years".

A more gradual plan, said Puryear, would let the administration "allay some fears of the faculty" by working closely with the interests affected by the projected allocations.

Puryear added he understands the president's desire to reallocate as quickly as possible resources to areas without faculty.

"It's a very serious, major problem," said Puryear, "not just in the perspective of faculty, but the rights of students for adequate training provided at state expense."

Puryear said there was "no relation at all" between his long range plan and the Academic Task Force Review, chaired last year by Associate Provost David C. Bischoff. The only action Puryear said he took was to circulate the Task Force Review to deans inviting them to comment.

Puryear said "unionization means administration under law must play the management role." He noted positions taken by universities having unions differ across the country. Puryear said, for example, in Kent State administration does not permit faculty to participate in fiscal decisions at all, because faculty have unionized.

A university administration should "create some balance" with unions, said Puryear. He added, however, the final decision concerning a union's relationship with UMass administration rests with the president and chancellor.

Bromery said he "would not think" a union at UMass would replace the faculty senate in the governance relations with Whitmore.

"Some governance may be modified," he said, adding that a complex legal environment would result.

In the situation with a union on campus, Bromery said the "administration would more likely represent students' interests when bargaining with a union."

In the UMass future, Puryear said he sees a different "student constituency" composed of older students who may have not been in college before, or seeking additional training to move into new occupations.

Puryear said all institutions like UMass, which enjoyed rapid growth, are clearly at the point of reorganizing their objectives.

"Schools which students once ran to, must now go to the students," he said.

Bromery said with the rising costs of private institutions more and more students come to UMass but not just for economic reasons, but also for the level of quality education.

Puryear said he is a member of the states post-secondary commission of higher education, a group he suspects may soon be wrestling with changing college demands.

"I hope the University will meet the challenge of students and society for more specialized training and maintain a strong liberal arts base at all levels, graduate and undergraduate," concluded Puryear.

'No roses'-secs

By ROBERT CAPOZZI

"Raises not Roses" was the cry of 35 UMass secretaries protesting outside the Student Union Building at noon yesterday.

The secretaries, members of the self-proclaimed "The 12 to 1 Group", met to gain support in fighting discrimination of female clerical workers and to eliminate the stereotype of secretaries being "just helpers."

The group advocated the "defining and limiting" of duties required of UMass secretaries.

There are 1300 female clerical workers at UMass, many of which have worked here 20 years and are still on the same pay scale as newly-hired male janitors, said Judith Kinney, co-founder of the group.

Reading from "The Bill of Rights for Women Office Workers," Kinney said women office workers are entitled to benefits and equal pay to men with similar jobs.

"Women are entitled to the right to choose whether to do personal work of employers such as typing personal letters, serving coffee, and running out for lunch," she added.

"We want to give women workers a voice and let people know we are not here for pin money, and many of us support families," said Kinney.

She also encouraged anyone interested to attend one of the group's meetings held Tuesdays from noon to 1 p.m. in the Campus Center.

Protesters taught non-violence

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

More people have been trained in non-violent protest techniques for Saturday's Seabrook N.H. occupation according to Frances Crowe, Western Mass. representative for the American Friends Service Committee.

Crowe made the statement after a training workshop held yesterday to familiarize about 70 people with non-violent tactics to be employed during the protest of the construction of the Seabrook nuclear power plant.

New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thompson said yesterday an intelligence report stated the planned demonstrations are "a cover for terrorist activity."

He added that "once the demonstrators occupy the site, they do not plan to leave alive."

Crowe said the protestors are "certainly not terrorists. I've never seen people who are more dedicated to the cause of non-violence. We're going in trying to be open and communicative. I think that Thompson is speaking out of fear and desperation. I hope we can communicate with him."

The workshop started off with a slide show about non-violence and the history of non-violent protest.

After the show, participants stated some of their reasons for occupying the plant site.

"You're battling money and you've got no money, so you've got to put yourself on the line," said one person.

Another said she feels the protest shows thoughtfulness. "Instead of swallowing any new technology, people are questioning whether or not we want this."

The workshop included information about supplies needed for the expected four day stay.

Crowe also said that the Public Service Co., owners of the plant, will have none of its employes on the site during the occupation.

"The National Guard and police have been receiving non-violence training and we have been trying to get them to look at the slide show. We've also been leafleting their meetings," said Crowe.

The workshop included role playing sessions where participants acted out various roles such as the police and protestors.

"We learned a lot from the role playing sessions. We learned that you can communicate with the police, they aren't the enemy, nuclear power is," Crowe said.

The occupiers will be organized into groups of about 10 or 15 people.

Crowe said the groups will also give support to members, protection against provocators, and make decisions.

A medic and extra food will be with each group.

The April 30th demonstration is better organized than last year's demonstration Crowe said. At that demonstration, most of the protestors were arrested and dragged off the site by New Hampshire State Police.

"Last year's demonstration was organized in about a week. We learned that the affinity groups are really important; people don't act the way they think they will in a strange situation," Crowe said.

Crowe also said the people in last year's demonstration were "hard core who had worked on the anti-nuclear movement for a long time. This year's group will be people who are just starting out.

"This is a much more decentralized movement. I think it's going to be successful. I'm glad to see so many people involved.

Nuke safety poor

BY PAT BEINER
Collegian Staff

Not one Massachusetts community is prepared to react to a nuclear power accident reveals a MassPIRG random telephone survey of communities situated near three nuclear reactors.

The survey supports MassPIRG's anti-nuke march to Western Massachusetts Electric Company yesterday protesting "very inadequate evacuation plans" in case of nuclear power plant accidents.

"The majority of citizens and local officials are either totally unaware that evacuation plans exist or are uniformed of the specifics," the study stated.

The study was based on pending legislation, House 1200, a nuclear, safety bill, which would require the state to assume a stronger role in guaranteeing the safe operation of nuclear power plants within its borders.

House 1200 would require the annual review and publication of evacuation plans, which would expose Massachusetts citizens to information that would save their lives in the event of a nuclear reactor accident.

Discrepancies were discovered by PIRG between statements made by the Massachusetts Civil Defense Agency, the group responsible for disaster planning and the type of planning that actually exists.

If an accident occurred at it either the Rowe or Plymouth, Mass. reactors, or the Vernon, Vermont nuclear power plant, Civil Defense plans call for the evacuation of communities within a five mile radius of the reactors.

PIRG'S survey indicates there has been no releasing of local response plan information to the public. Furthermore, many people do not realize that planning for reactor accidents is necessary in the first place.

The Civil Defense feels releasing a map with evacuation routes and a fact sheet with data from local plans to community residents will constitute sufficient information.

According to David Pomerantz, MassPIRG environmentalist, "Our study is revealing that the nuclear industry maintains there is no need for major nuclear accidents, and this philosophy is being passed down to state and local levels. The provisions in the Civil Defense plans are not even adequate for dealing with minor accidents, although the Civil Defense is supposed to be in the business of planning for disasters."

Civil Defense officials stated local officials were consulted during the development of community response plans. However, only a few community leaders had participated in any planning process, the survey revealed.

Though the Civil Defense Act of 1950 authorized the agency to develop disaster plans, nuclear accident response planning began several years ago.

PIRG's final report on evacuation planning with recommendations for improving the competance of planning efforts will soon be released.

Martos seeks senate seat; Collective supports Ahora

By JANIS FINSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Jay Martus, former Student Government Association co-president, announced at yesterday's commuter collective meeting he is seeking the senate seat left vacant by Dee Drake's resignation. Also running for the seat is Bob Dion.

Martus said as a commuter senator his main concerns would be transit and child care.

Martus also discussed the Law Enforcement Assistance Agnecy (LEAA), which is a subjunct of the department of justice. He questioned its operations on campus saying, "There may be some subversion occuring."

Commuter Collective leaders voted unanimously to support Ahora, a group representing the latin community on campus. The collective expressed its "full support for reinstatement of their proposed budget."

Commuter collective representatives will decide whether or not to finance the Employed-Unemployed Council, a community organization located in Northampton of working and unemployed members, and students whose intentions lie in building a united working class movement for radical economic-social-political change.

The Council requested in a proposal that the collective "put on a workshop on our organizing efforts for an honoraria at the university" costing $500.

The collective also discussed "Towards Tomorrow Day Care." The committee feels the Day Care Center is a worthwhile program but questions the costs involved for its use.

Bromery to be evaluated

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

Students, start watching your mailboxes, faculty check with your department secretaries; next week you may be asked to participate in evaluating Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery's performance on campus.

According to Dr. Norman Berlin, chairperson of the evaluation committee, one out of 20 students, one out of two of about 600 faculty and a sizable sampling of professional and non-professional staff will be randomly asked to participate.

President Robert C. Wood and Bromery will see the survey's results. They will not be made public.

The evaluation will not affect Bromery's position in the University, but "The chancellor may do his job a little differently having gotten this feedback," said Jay Demrath, committee member.

Demrath added, "The evaluation of campus administrators is supposed to be separate from whether they are kept on or not."

Berlin expects faculty response to be higher than student response because with recent faculty unrest, the "air is charged".

The evaluation committee was established by the Faculty Senate and encouraged by Bromery himself.

Harry Brooks, Johnetta Cole, Phillips Jones and James Ladtke compose the remainder of the committee.

The 16 questions rate Bromery on leadership, administration, campus governance, political advocacy and campus communication.

According to Berlin the committee was charged to have the evaluation done by May 1, but realistically it may not be completed until the beginning of next semester, he said.

This is Bromery's first evaluation since he assumed the chancellorship.

Stockbridge opposed to cuts

By JUNE CORRIVEAU
Collegian Staff

The Stockbridge Student Senate met last night to protest the cutting of the animal science technology courses and the recent "level funding" proposed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

Ron Schillady, student senator for Stockbridge said, "Ten years ago 26 per cent of the college population in the state attended a public institution. Today that figure is 58 per cent. If present trends continue low and middle income people will not be able to send their children to college."

He said, "Stockbridge maintains eight major areas of study, seven of these eight majors reject approximately 45 per cent of applicants.

"It is important that the citizens be made aware of these facts and that individuals who are concerned with the economic vitality and social well being of our state be made aware of the crippling effects that "level funding" will have on the University of Massachusetts at Amherst."

Stockbridge school within the College of Food and Natural Resources has set up a task force to decide what positions and resources will be cut within the college.

Maggie Vidrine of the Student Organizing Project (SOP) said, "The SOP wants to work with Stockbridge in a task force set up of a body of students in researching these same problems within the College of Food and Natural Resources relating to "level funding" and to organize students in the future to equal rights and collective bargaining."

Executive Secretary Cheryl Sylvester said the animal science labratory technology will be taken out of Stockbridge and incorporated into the four year program at the University, due to "insufficient funding and lack of professors."

Stockbridge Student senator's urged the group to write state senators.

Puryear Plan scrutinized

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

Tenure and academic modifications to Provost Paul L. Puryear's five-year plan are being undertaken by the provost and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Bromery said last night a six-member committee, acting as an advising council, will review individual faculty for the May 12 deadline, whose tenure appointments are affected by the projected allocations for their respective departments.

Bromery noted the policy of the UMass Board of Trustees states all affirmative tenure decisions must be made according to the long range planning. Exceptions can exist, however, and Bromery said the committee could be recommending such exemptions to the provost for his final decision.

He added the committee selection process which has not been completed should be finalized by Friday.

Puryear said talks have been progressing with the other four colleges in the Five College community to possibly develop programs with the UMass Asian Studies and Slavic Languages departments. Both programs were originally due for elimination under the provost's plan.

May Day Gethers benefit

This Sunday is May Day, and there have been many activities planned such as beer blasts and rock concerts. There are many issues that students are confronted with, however, of a much more serious nature.

One of these issues is that of the incarceration of a former UMass student, Craemen Gethers. While most students will be celebrating May Day, Craemen is still incarcerated at Norfolk State Prison serving an 8-12 year sentence for a crime that he did not commit. He is suffering the injustice and racism of the U.S. legal system. Anyone who is vaguely familiar with the case realizes that he is totally innocent and has been railroaded into jail. Unfortunately, this past year has seen a minimum of activity surrounding this case. If there is any guilt in this situation, it is our negligence regarding moral and financial support for a fellow student.

A May Day Benefit Concert, Rally and Disco in support of Craemen Gethers has been planned for this Sunday. Performing will be the Unity Ensemble featuring Sulaiman Hakim and Chris Henderson. Sulaiman has just returned from a European tour with Max Roach, and Chris Henderson can be heard on a recently-released album by Marion Brown.

Also performing at this event will be Jade, a disco, boogie, jazz group from New York City. It will be the best music of the day and also the most significant May Day event happening in the area. All proceeds will go to the Craemen Gethers Defense Fund.

This event is to begin on Sunday at 7:00 in the Student Union Ballroom. There is a donation of $2 that shall go to the Craemen Gethers Defense Fund.

AROUND NEW ENGLAND

Mass. unemployment declines

BOSTON [AP] — The unemployment rate in Massachusetts declined slightly in March to 6.7 per cent, sixth-tenths of a point below the national rate, the state division of Employment Security announced yesterday.

The new figures, seasonally adjusted, how an addition of 10,200 jobs to the state's economy since February, when the jobless rate was pegged at 6.8 per cent.

Division officials said most of the new jobs were in all categories of nonmanufacturing industries except state and local government. Manufacturing registered a gain of 1,100 jobs.

Senate approves 'flip-top' ban

BOSTON [UPI] — The Senate yesterday gave initial approval to a measure banning throwaway cans with fliptop lids after adopting an amendment to delay implementation of the bill to mid-1979.

"I offer this amendment at the request of the industry. They asked for the delay so that they could have time to rid themselves of their stock," said the sponsor of the amendment, Sen. Robert A. Hall, R-Lunenburg.

DA sees no DiCarlo kickback

BOSTON [AP] — Suffolk County Dist. Atty. Garrett Byrne said yesterday his office has no evidence that former state Sen. Joseph J.C. DiCarlo, D-Revere, was involved in kickbacks on the construction of Revere's $15 million high school.

DiCarlo's name was mentioned twice in a bill of particulars filed by the Suffolk County prosecutors this week in a case involving seven persons indicted for the alleged kickback scheme.

WMECO appeals rate hike

[AP] — Western Massachusetts Electric Co. said yesterday it would appeal to the state supreme court in an effort to get a bigger rate increase.

The firm, owned by Northeast Utilities, this month was granted a $16.7 million rate hike by the Massachusetts Public Utilities Department — $11.7 million less than it asked for.

Committee clears cancer drug

BOSTON [AP] — A legislative committee approved a bill yesterday that would clear the way for physicians to prescribe the controversial cancer drug Laetrile.

The 8-6 vote by the Health Care Committee reversed an earlier stand by the committee that would have killed the bill. During its discussion of the legislation a group of Laetrile advocates walked into the hearing room armed with shopping bags filled with signed letters.

Gilbert H. Perron, 32, of Springfield said his group, the Committee for Freedom of Choice in Cancer Therapy, had gathered more than 10,000 signatures of those favoring passage of the bill.

Oil spills are too built-up

EAST PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A British Petroleum Co. scientist said yesterday descriptions of oil spills as ecological horrors are exaggerated.

Eric B. Cowell, a marine ecologist, claimed the long-term effects of spills or drilling rig "blowouts" such as that occurring in the North Sea are slight.

He said research does not support the fear spills destroy the marine environment.

Food Stamp reform favored

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A House Agriculture subcommittee, approving a sweeping overhaul of the government's food stamp program, voted yesterday in favor of a controversial administration plan to eliminate stamp purchases by needy people.

Rep. Fred Richmond, D-N.Y., said his subcommittee's version of the food stamp program would cost about $5.56 billion a year — about $182 million more than current law but only about $82 million more than a reform bill proposed by the Carter administation.

Richmond said the administration will back the subcommittee measure, but he warned it may face attacks in both the full House Agriculture Committee and on the House floor from two directions. Some critics may call for further cuts in benefits to reduce costs, he said, and other lawmakers may attack portions of the bill which cut stamp benefits in northern urban areas.

The most controversial change made by the bill would eliminate a current rule under which stamp recipients must first pay cash for part of their food stamp allocation. After making the purchases, they get additional free "bonus" stamps.

Under the no-purchase plan proposed by the administration and accepted by the subcommittee, eligible families would simply be given their free "bonus" stamps.

The legislation also lowers income eligibility ceilings and cuts benefits to millions of present participants by adopting a modified new "standard deduction" system for determining the net income of applicants. The net income is the key to how many free stamps each applicant family gets.

Officials estimated the new income ceilings and deduction plans would force 1.5 million current participants out of the stamp program entirely. But another 3 million eligible persons who cannot now afford to buy stamps would enroll because of elimination of the purchase requirement, Richmond said.

To soften the impact of the bill on needy people in northern and urban areas with high living costs, the subcommittee provided an excess housing deduction of up to $75 a month to be used by some families in determining their net incomes.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Carter decries proposed arms cuts

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter made a direct appeal to House leaders yesterday not to cut his proposed $120 billion 1978 defense budget, a congressman reported.

Rep. Omar Burleson, D-Tex., told the House the President called Speaker Thomas O'Neill Wednesday morning to urge that the House restore a cut of $4.1 billion in defense budget authority recommended by the Budget Committee.

The proposal cut would mean a reduction of $2.3 billion in actual defense spending in 1978. The rest would come out of spending in future years.

Runaway well may be capped

STAVANGER, Norway [UPI] — Two Texans and a daredevil crew yesterday completed initial stages of their work to shut off a 120-foot high oil gusher in the North Sea and engineers were optimistic the well would be capped within 24 hours,

Senate rejects tax cut plan

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Senate rejected a Republican proposal yesterday for permanent tax cuts with the greatest share of benefits earmarked for middle-and lower-income persons.

Offered as an amendment to the tax stimulus bill, the proposal lost, 58 to 39.

President Carter has said he would veto any such permanent tax reductions enacted now, but will propose thorough tax reforms later.

New violence hits South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [AP] — Three black youths suffered gunshot injuries yesterday during demonstrations by students against government-imposed rent increases in the black township of Soweto.

Roving bands of black demonstrators set a beer hall on fire, looted a bread delivery truck and a soft drink truck and injured a policeman in a rock-throwing incident.

Police fired warning shots into the air and used tear gas to disperse crowds that numbered in the thousands.

CIA head clears release of US intelligence costs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The director of the CIA said yesterday that despite some risk, the over-all cost of U.S. intelligence activities could be made public. But a cost breakdown — even by agencies — would be helpful to the nation's enemies, he said.

"There is a risk in every disclosure, but all of us feel the responsibility to be as open with the country as possible, so the need warrants the risk being taken," Adm. Stansfield Turner told the Senate Intelligence Committee.

The CIA chief led a list of witnesses as the panel opened hearings aimed at determining whether any part of the nation's top secret intelligence costs, traditionally hidden in the budget of the Pentagon and other agencies, should be divulged.

There is strong sentiment in Congress, and some in the intelligence community itself, that public confidence in the CIA and other agencies, rocked in recent years by revelations of improper activities, might be restored if costs were exposed.

Some critics also contend it is unconstitutional for U.S. citizens to be denied this information.

Choosing his words carefully and several times declining to answer detailed questions for security reasons, Turner made it evident that any cost disclosure is not regarded with enthusiasm among professionals in the spy trade.

President Carter, he said, had ordered him not to oppose publication of the over-all budget of the intelligence community. But to furnish any data beyond that could enable foreign analysts to find "areas of emphasis" indicating what U.S. priorities were and how they might be changing, he said.

"From such information they would know where they should place emphasis in countermeasures and effectively nulify any advantage we might have. The detailed intelligence budget in the hands of our enemies would be a powerful weapon which could make further collection more difficult, more hazardous to life, and much more costly," Turner said.

"The way we spend our intelligence money in this country is one of our necessary secrets.

An urban summer camp

"Just wait until you get out into the Real World" or "When I have to leave here and go into the Real World", everyone that's a student at this University has heard these more than once. I've been wondering what the qualities of reality are that make this "world" less real than that outside.

The differences that are most striking are the ones if you live in a dormitory on campus. Take a minute and compare dorm life to home or apartment life. Where else would 20 to 60 people share a bathroom? Where else could those same people have a water fight? If you had a water fight in the halls of your apartment building, believe me, you'd be kicked out in short order.

I think that one of the reasons so much damage occurs in the dormitories is because the standards and regiments for behaviour are much less than that outside the University. Heads of Residents' and Resident Assistants cannot be responsible for the actions of the hundreds of people that live in the dorms, yet they legally are. Both can be sued for all sorts of things.

Almost all of incoming freshmen have never lived away from home before and some have never been away from home before except for camp. Dorm life often reminds me of camp. A lot of students living in dorms act as if they're living at camp.

Because of the amount of people living in close proximity, dorm life is often compared to that in a city. This is a ridiculous analogy in a lot of ways. What would happen if 500 people in a Waldorf Cafeteria decided to have a food fight? What would happen if two apartment buildings across the street from each other decided to start throwing rockets, roman candles and firecrackers at each other? The police would have more to say than, "Get out of those windows".

It is sometimes unfortunate that cliques that are hard to bread result from a dorm situation. I see it as the only natural result that could come from this type of living situation. Community sense is developed inside the dorms rather than at the University level as a whole.

An ideal dorm situation would be one that reflects the community and behaviour outside the University. This is next to impossible when everyone is in the same age group and when deviant behaviour is dealt with so lightly.

The rational perspective of what the Real World compared to this "world" is lost with the pat answer, "But we're here to have fun too". Too often, the method of "having fun" is through drunken misbehaviour that would not be tolerated outside this University.

How many people can hardly wait for Schlitzarama? How many windows and pieces of dorm property will be broken this weekend? I'm not blaming Schlitzarama for any damages that might happen; I'm blaming the lack of perspective that students have concerning their behaviour and standards on campus as compared to what's known in the Real World.

The displeasure response

"If the Senate does not approve our budget (at its next meeting), that meeting is not going to happen."

—Miguel Rivera, AHORA
26 April rally

People have different ways of responding to things that do not please them. There are some who think that the sorts of reactions evoked are a function of breeding and intelligence, but they are of course racists.

The appropriate response to bad things used to be the typically WASP "stiff upper lip". In our present enlightened times, however, this approach is no longer thought to be chic. Somehow keeping one's temper and using cold, rational thought to explain a position seems to imply that one is not emotionally involed, that one doesn't really care what happens.

Courtesy even extends across racial and cultural lines. Consider the Japanese. The Japanese are stereotypically very courteous people. Recent campus developments have probably disappointed them somewhat. But they would never be rude. Their reaction to the proposed Asian Studies cutback would be no more than something like this:

TO: President Wood, Univ. of Mass.
Dear Bobo-San,

Is with much sorrow that we hear of loss of Asian Studies and of Student Union bear. You know, the gift commemorating over 100 years of friendship between our schools. Ah so, we face many money problems too, and will have to cut our programs. Regrettably we are forced to end American Studies Dept. at Hokkaido. Japanese students simply not want to know about American culture, what there is of it. So sorry.

Sincerely,
President, Hokkaido Univ.

The problem is that civility seems to be ineffective. Otherwise it would be more widely used.

Other people, when they are displeased by the facts before them, simply make up new ones. Consider last Thursdays lecture by Dr. Francis Cress Welsing. Apparently she has developed a certain antipathy towards the conclusions of modern psychology since it, like everything else, is permeated by White Supremacy. So she has developed "Counter Racist Psychiatry", the assumptions of which seem to fit in better with the conclusions she would like to reach. Her thesis is that "white males fear genetic annihilation; thus they cause the black race to feel and act inferior." Which is of course why "white males will attack black men's testicles because that is where the genes are, the vitals of life". (Take that, feminists!) Ach, it's magnificent!! But it's not science.

Sometimes things that displease people also make them paranoid. The classic reaction to Mass Paranoia of course is for like-minded people to band together and comfort each other. Let's face it, support groups are a form of Pepto-Bismol, soothing and drippy. Consider the issue of sexual oppression. Sexual oppression is distressing to a great many people. So distressing, in fact, that many people turn into simpering wimps so unable to cope with the issue that they must have things like Men's Centers, Women's Centers and Weeks, Men and Masculinity Conferences, etc., to handle their discomfiture. This way they can drool over issues rather than face them directly. This is a decidedly inferior and gutless method of dealing with irksome problems.

And there are other types of reactions to unpleasantnesses. They vary in degrees of efficacy and civility ranging from Nelson Rockefeller's middling finger response to the vicious "this for that" backstabbing in the Student Senate.

No, actually there is only one effective sort of reaction to displeasing things: Physical Violence. Or the threat thereof. This is generally known as the Macho Approach.

This track has the advantage of not being subtle. An excellent example is Mr. Rivera's remark quoted above. Really, there is a refreshing candor to the AHORA organization's threat. While some have unkindly derided AHORA by likening its actions to the behavior of animals in heat, others (like ourselves) can only admire the crisp progressive manner in which it has been made clear to the Senate what the consequences of noncompliance with demands will be. Indeed, it's been rather gratifying to observe the sobering effect the threats have had upon the usually inflated egos of SGA politicians who rarely deal or are dealt with in such a direct manner.

In fact, writing this before last night's Senate meeting, we are so confident of the efficacy of AHORA's methods that we have no doubts at all that "El rhetorical bullshit unido jamas sera vencido!".

Clearing the air: No 'butts' about it

By PAUL J. WOLF

Smoke smoke smoke that cigarette
Smoke smoke smoke till you smoke yourself to death
Tell Saint Peter at the golden gate
That Lord you hate to make him wait
But you've got to have another cigarette

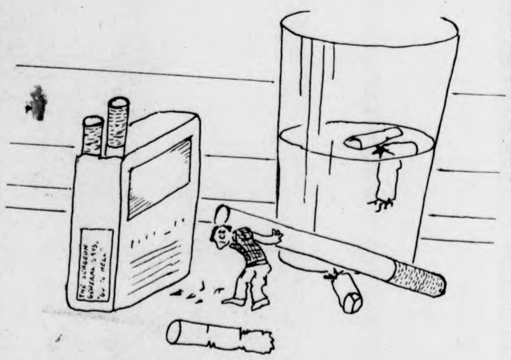
Commander Cody

It seems that the cigarette has become the bain of my existence. As I ride around campus, I get the impression that I am only one roach in the middle of one huge ashtray filled with cigarette butts, ashes and worst of all smoke. Can't you inconsiderate smokers get it through your thick skulls that one man's smoke is another man's poison? I'm not saying that all smokers are inconsiderate, but most are. Don't you realize how offending the odor of cigarette smoke is? For those of you who don't, the best analogy I could give you would be the odor of burnt toast and a rotten egg vomited on the floor of the men's room in the campus center near the Blue Wall at midnight on a Friday during the last week of the semester. Perhaps I'm exaggerating ... perhaps not.

There are a few responsible smokers on campus. These responsible ones ask if the group of people they are with would mind if he or she smoked. If someone objected, then he-she would refrain until the situation became more suitable. The irresponsible ones either wouldn't ask or would ask if the majority of the people didn't mind, but some did would light up anyway, regardless of how the others felt. This in my eyes is pretty damn selfish. Sure, I've heard the bit about "smokers have rights too" — yes they have rights, but when their rights infringe on mine, their rights become void, nil. They have no right whatsoever to contaminate the air that I am forced to breathe (it's not like I could find a substitute for the air I breathe). Let's go back to the childish argument, "which came first the chicken or the egg?" To this question there is no valid answer, but let's look at it this way ... which came first, clean air or contaminated air?

This, my friend, is only part of my argument. Not only does cigarette smoke have an offending odor, but as the Surgeon General claims, it is hazardous to one's health. The cigarette you smoke is not only hazardous to you, the smoker, but also to me as a non-smoker. You the smoker get the smoke from the cigarette brand new, first hand. I, the nonsmoker get both brand new and used second hand smoke from your lungs. This to me is as gross as eating another person's waste products.



THE SURGEON GENERAL SAYS, "GO TO HELL"

If you smokers could develop a method of smoking using some sort of apparatus whereby the smoke coming off your cigarette would be put into some sort of container, as well as the smoke that comes from your lungs second hand, then by all means do as Commander Cody says: "smoke yourself to death".

You may wonder why I am going to such an extreme to air my views on smoking? Well let me put it this way, when I lived at home with my parents my mother was and still is a chronic smoker. She is now up to three packs a day. She has been smoking since she was a teen and has only had one lung removed. Sometimes I think it's a miracle that I did not come out of her womb with a nicotine addiction. I could just imagine her spiking my milk formula with some kind of nicotine tablet to keep me from having withdrawal symptoms.

Another thing: Do you smokers believe in ashtrays or have you at the very least heard of them? Or would you rather use the floors, toilets or cups? ... Yum yum, nothing looks more appetizing than two or three cigarette butts drenched in the left over beer or coffee cup while I'm eating my lunch. Do you see me drinking out of your ashtrays? What about the familiar sight of cigarette butts in the toilets? The only reason they're there are because the inconsiderate smokers are too damn lazy to bring them out and put them where they belong, in ashtrays. Why should you worry about where you leave your cigarette butts? Someone else will take care of them, take them out of the toilets, sweep them up off the floor. Janitors like doing that kind of stuff ... After all, that's what they're payed for. Do you see me urinating and defecating in your ashtrays? Some people may argue that they flush right down the toilet. I'll tell you, they do wonders for the plumbing and drainage. And you people wonder why the campus center concourse leaks.

In writing this article, I realize that I am stepping on a lot of toes, mainly because most of my friends are butt fiends and I think that some of them may be offended, and they have a right to be. After all, I've called them just about everything except swine. But on the other hand, some will not be offended but will take this as constructive criticism and will hopefully be more considerate in the future and think of others before they light up.

When a smoker lights up near me without asking, there is a certain type of anger that runs through my mind because there is nothing I can do about it. I could ask him-her to put it out but I risk being called and feeling like an asshole. Or I could turn around and blast him with a can of air freshener or my portable CO2 fire extinguisher that I just happen to be carrying in my pack. Though the latter is not likely to happen.

The last thing I wish to ponder is, why do smokers insist on smoking in elevators? Why do they insist on smoking in classes or rooms where no smoking signs are conspicuously displayed? The only answer I can come up with is that the signs don't apply to illiterates. Sometimes I get the feeling that smokers smoke in these rooms just to spite the signs. It is as if the signs or what they stand for are like a silver cross to a vampire and the only way they can ward off their power is to over power them with smoke.

In conclusion, I would like to say that there is no reason in the world why I have to share someone else's dirty habits. And one word of warning should you happen to meet me, I chew tobacco; if you don't blow smoke on me I won't spit on you.

Save 'Global Survival'

To the Editor:

To the UMass Community:

We, the undersigned, feel that the Faculty Senate would be making a grave mistake if it were to remove funds from the Global Survival Freshman Year Program. We feel the Program has been exemplary in providing a quality education to students who need, indeed demand, this rather than institutionalized training. We feel Global Survival sets the standard of intellectual challenge, small classes and relevant issues and ideals for the rest of the University to live up to.

Some misinformed people feel GSFYP is a "gut". In fact, it is the opposite. It provides an intellectual challenge unparalleled by other freshman year courses offered by the University. Our classes, due to the low student-teacher ratio, provide special interest and personal contact, something noticeably lacking in other University courses but which is an everyday occurrence at Global Survival. The ideal of education is to get peoqle to think, not to have them processed anonymously. Global Survival most closely approaches this ideal of education as is evidenced by the fact that G.S. students show more concern and are encouraged to act for social issues (and any other) both on and off campus. Unlike 300-student lectures, which tend to bore the hell out of some students, our small classes encourage student input, build confidence, and are far more intellectually stimulating than most other University courses.

If only the University would extend support as regards recruitment of students, and allocation of faculty, the Program would be stronger than ever, and more people could share in the benefits of the Program. The issues and ideals Global Survival addresses (Peace and War, Energy Sources, Population, Pollution, the Future, etc.) are extremely relevant to survival in tomorrow's world — nothing is more important than global survival.

Help yourself

To the Editor:

On April 5th, a slate of progressive candidates was elected to the Amherst Town Meeting, in order to represent what we feel are the opinions of the majority of students and tenants in Precinct 3. We were elected as a result of hard work, organization, and student support. However, with the elections over, and our seats already won, you may ask, "Why do we bring it up again?" We bring it up because on Monday, May 2, Amherst will hold its 218th Annual Town Meeting.

We will be voting on numerous issues that are of interest to students such as the banning of transportation of nuclear wastes through Amherst, diversion of the Connecticut river, and the Montague Nuclear Power Plant — and some issues that will directly affect students planning to move off campus next semester. The most important of these is rent control. For years, Amherst tenants have been paying "through the nose" for rental units. In 1976, according to Massachusetts Department of Commerce and Development, the average Amherst rent was 36 per cent higher than the average rent in Hampshire County (Amherst included), with a vacancy rate half as great at 1.2 per cent.

Another issue that we feel is important, is the possible repeal of the "four unrelated persons" by-law. This zoning by-law prohibits more than four unrelated persons from living in one dwelling unit. We feel that this by-law discriminates against unrelated people who must, because of the high rents in Amherst, share a rental unit in order to make ends meet. We also support the warrant article which would force landlords to put a tenants security deposit in a bank account. This money could not be withdrawn without the consent of both parties or a court order. This is important because tenants have in the past lost their security deposits because their landlords went bankrupt. The main point is that the security deposit is the tenants' money and the tenant has a right to it.

If you have any questions about the above issues, or anything else, please give me a call at 546-9444, or get in touch with any of the other Town Meeting Representatives. I would appreciate any constitutent's input. Help yourself — get involved.

Union Carbide recruitment visit raises ethical questions

To the Editor:

It has come to our attention that this Friday, April 29th, at 12 noon, our University will be visited by a Union Carbide recruiting representative.

Union Carbide has been in South Africa since the 1930's. Its chrome corporation of South Africa (97 per cent U.S. owned) has stepped up its output from its South African mines in recent years which produces 20 per cent of South Africa's chrome. This has become, for Union Carbide, a source of great profit.

In South Africa, minimum wages paid by Union Carbide to whites is approximately $140.00 per month, to Africans $48.00 per month (1971 statistics). Carbide, with its ever expanding need for output and skilled engineers, is providing training for South African whites in the U.S. Blacks remain in the mines under slave conditions and continue to die at an alarming rate because of over-work and unsafe working conditions.

It is mining, combined with underpaid African labor, that has been the foundation of South Africa's economic growth. U.S. corporations, because of continued profitability and comfortable economic surroundings, lives within the oppressive racial context, and uses industrial advancement and paternalistic sentiment as rationalizations for exploitation and racism.

The University of Massachusetts Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa views that we must continue pressure of the University Administration and Board of Trustees to divest any and all university holdings in South Africa.

The Administration and-or Board of Trustees, in expressing their seriousness in this matter and in good bargaining faith, should purchase no additional shares of stock during the period that our initial request of March 8, 1977 (to "immediately sell its holdings" and "publicize its reasons for doing so") is "under advisement".

We request the Chancellor to cancel the Friday, April 29th visit of the Union Carbide representative for purposes of 'recruiting on campus'. We view that not to do so would be in direct contradiction of Trustees' consideration of our March 8 request and in contradiction to their stated opposition to Apartheid.

We are prepared to carry out a picket should this representative come and to leaflet and educate more actively about the University of Massachusetts complicity with Apartheid.

We cannot continue to allow U.S. corporations to make huge profits off the cheap labor of Black Africans while in the U.S. we face inflation, unemployment, budget cuts, cutbacks in 'Third World Study Programs' and our universities, cities and local communities deteriorate.

"Taking informed and ethical positions", demands an active solidarity through an active cooperation.

10 valuable financial functions. All fundamental financial functions required for both personal and job-related problems. Two new functions—net present value and internal rate of return for uneven cash flow—facilitate calculating capital budgets and resource allocation problems.

All this, plus 20 memories, 6 convenient clearing options, displays in fixed decimal, scientific or engineering notation.

$159.95 complete with battery pack, recharging unit, carrying case and detailed 216-page Owner's Handbook. See the HP-27 Scientific Plus today.

Advertise events with 5-college phone

The Five College Student Coordinating Board (FCSCB) can help your group publicize its events with its Five College Information Phone. We are especially interested in obtaining information about student activities as compared to academic and cultural information.

The phone is provided by FCSCB as a service to the Five College area. Now anyone can find out "What's going on?" by dialing 545-3483 and listening to a prerecorded message about the various events in the Valley. This message is updated every day, and can include an announcement about your group's activity. We will only announce events over the phone, we will not advertise.

If you group wishes to use this service to publicize a dance, mixer, outing, play or whatever, simply use the following format and mail to our permanent address for the phone.

Answer these questions in order and be concise:

— What is the date of your event?

— At what School will your event take place? and where at that school?

— At what time will the event take place?

— What kind of an event is it? (party, mixer, outing, play, etc.)

— How much does it cost?

— Phone number for more information?

PLEASE ANSWER ALL QUESTIONS

Our address is: Student Activities Mailroom, FCSCB Information Phone, No. 636, Student Union, UMass.

'Triangle Fire' Sunday, CC 101

There will be a rare blend of dance, theatre, instrumental and vocal music at a one-time showing of "The Triangle Fire" Sunday at 7 p.m. in Campus Center 101, free.

In 1911 the Triangle Shirtwaist Company, a sweatshop on New York's lower East side, was consumed by fire. One hundred and 46 workers, mostly Jewish and Italian women and girls were killed. Some were burned to death. Others died when they jumped from the 9th story window of the flaming building where a locked fire door prevented their escape.

This tragedy is known as the Triangle Fire. It is an outrageous example of human suffering caused by industrial neglect.

"The Triangle Fire" retells the story and places it within the historical context of labor struggles, specifically the Shirtwaist Makers Strike of 1909, also known as the "Uprising of the 30,000."

The performers — 9 women and 2 men include dancers, cellists, vocalists and actors. The set and costumes are of period design. The piece runs approximately one hour.

UMass Alumni discuss Med school

The UMass Pre-Med Society will have as guests former UMass students who are now attending the UMass Med School in Worcester tonight from 7:00 to 9:00 in Campus Center 911. These students will relate some of their experiences at med school.

Music of the Renaissance from England and the Netherlands will be heard tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the Recital Hall of the Fine Arts Center, free. The program will include music of Josquin des Pres, John Dowland, Jacob van Eyck, Heinrich Isaac, and other Renaissance masters, performed on recorders, voices and other instruments.

Course description revisions

The following is a list of courses that either appeared incorrectly in the fall course schedule or description guide, or were left out altogether.

Requirements: Quizzes, 2-3 one-hour exams, and a final.

Text: Lipson, A Russian Course, Vol. 1, Part II. Prerequisite: Russian 102 (120) or the equivalent.

Russian 211 (139)
Russian Reading Course III
Stawiecki

Aim: To develop the student's ability to read scholarly Russian prose and literature. No attention will be paid to the other language skills. This course should be of particular interest to students in the sciences who need to develop a reading knowledge of Russian as a tool.

Topical Outline: Reading and analysis of carefully selected texts with the aim of developing both a basic vocabulary as well as enough sensitivity to the way in which Russian sentences are organized to enable the student to read in his field with the aid of a dictionary.

Requirements: Quizzes, two one-hour exams, and a final.

Text: D. B. Johnson, Eyewitness

Prerequisite: Completion of Russian 112 (129) or equivalent.

Russian 212 (149)
Expository Prose
Stawiecki

Aim: This course is designed to continue the work of either R 211 or of R 201. Coming from either of these courses, the student who is interested in developing only his reading proficiency will, by concentrating on problems of translation, be able to achieve a higher degree of skill in this course than he could in the normal 202 course with its divided emphasis on all four language skills.

Readings: To be announced.

Requirements: No papers, hour exam, final.

Prerequisites: Three semesters of Russian or the equivalent.

Russian 250 (201)
Russian Culture
Staff

Aim: General introduction to contemporary Russian culture with a historical background, in order to introduce students to the historical roots of many contemporary Russian habits and thinking. Areas of history, literature, social ideas, music and painting would be explored in certain selected historical periods, beginning with the 10th century, but the emphasis would be on contemporary developments.

Prerequisite: No knowledge of the Russian language required.

Texts: To be announced.

Requirements: Short papers, and a written final paper.

Russian 255
Masterpieces of Russian Literature
Staff (in translation)

Aim: To present, analyze and discuss the development of Russian literature, primarily of the 19th and the beginning of the 20th centuries.

Topical Outline: Lectures and discussion of the individual authors and their works: Griboyedov, Pushkin, Lermontov, Gogol, Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, Turgenev, Chekhov; and some of the modern writers, such as Voznessensky, Yevtushenko, Akhmadulina, Brodsky, etc.

Requirements: Several small papers, (1-3 pages) one term paper (8-15 pages) and a written final.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Thursday, April 28 — Born today, you are always in favor of projects that have as their goal the betterment of mankind, whether through the improvement of man himself or the improvement of his surroundings and, thus, his condition. Your interest immediately flags when the endeavor is directed toward the improving of the condition of a single individual — even should that individual be yourself — or to the increase in his material possessions. Always in favor of the greatest good for the greatest number, you sometimes are forced by your own principles to act against yourself. On the other hand, the personal satisfaction you create by sticking to your principles cannot be duplicated by any personal gain.

You are not often found front and center when the awards are being presented. Your place is generally behind the scenes, promoting those projects and people who ultimately carry home the prizes. You are not one to keep your place in the background a secret, however; your healthy ego would not permit you to do that. You make certain that the importance of your work is known, especially to those who are the "kingmakers" of this world. For while you may never be able to maneqver another into such a noble position as king, you have every intention of producing for the world another prince or two.

You enjoy life and living and must, therefore, enjoy the things that money can buy. You are ambitious for the means to such ends — but not at the expense of other people. Honest and gifted with the sight to see yourself as others see you, you guard your reputation at every turn.

Friday, April 29

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Consider the present project on the employment scene as a whole. Piecemeal consideration will lead to error. Play politics at evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Morning depression results from attempts to understand other people's problems. You would do better to try to understand your own.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You can progress rapidly toward a position of influence if you will make the effort to impress higher-ups favorably.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — This may well be a day filled with more excitement than you've bargained for. Keep your interest up in another's enterprise; profit is assured.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You can keep yourself out of trouble better than can those who have lately been trying to do just that — with little success.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — You may have to take some time away from your work in order to help others — and thus yourself — to gains by late evening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — If plans are hazy, results of action may be even more so. Make an effort to clarify your position before you begin to act, not after.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — To gain personal goals today, you may have to sacrifice some progress where career matters are concerned.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Take some time to get closer to relatives. Those at a distance may be in need of some moral support at this time. Offer it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Become — and then remain — aware of another's needs. You can be of considerable help — if you set your mind and heart to it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — There is strength in numbers, to be sure. But there is also some advantage to being alone today. Choices multiply toward evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Check the practical aspects of present involvements. It may be necessary for you to retreat, retrench, and recover.

Batswomen sweep pair

By PAT McGRATH
Collegian Staff

STORRS, Ct. — The UMass softball team got back on the winning track yesterday with a convincing sweep of a doubleheader over UConn to improve its record to 9-1.

The Minutewomen won, 17-3, in the first game and 13-7 in the nightcap. The first game was marked by nine Huskie errors. Meanwhile, the UMass bats exploded as they belted out 12 hits in the first game and 10 in the second.

The Minutewomen came out fast as walks to Carol Bruce and Sue Peters, followed by a two-out double by Rhonda McManus produced the first UMass run. In the second inning, the diamondwomen sent nine batters to the plate as they scored four runs on two hits and three Connecticut errors. In that inning, Chris Verdini had a single and both Cheryl Meliones and Bruce laid down nice bunts. Susan DiRocco then belted a triple, bringing the score up to a total of five runs. The Minutewomen added on in the third and then exploded once again in the top of the fifth.

Pat Oski led off with a single, followed by Heidi Dickson's single-bagger. Rita Riley then ripped a triple to bring in two runs. Next Meliones walked, Bruce reached on an error, and that set the stage for DiRocco's three run scoring homerun.

"I was very pleased with DiRocco today," said UMass coach Dianne Thompson. "She had a triple and a homerun for four RBI's. She also played good defense in both games."

The Minutewomen added five more runs in the sixth and seventh innings. Meliones and Bruce gathered the RBI's in the sixth with a fielder's choice and single respectively. In the final frame, Peters walked and Sandy Lunt, filling in for McManus at second, stroked a long triple to score Peters. Dickson had a single, advanced to second on a passed ball, went to third on Riley's fielder's choice, and came across with the 17th UMass run with a single by Elaine Howle.

Peters pitched a very strong game, bringing her totals up to four wins and no losses.

"Peters pitched very well for us," Thompson said. "Her control was good as she allowed only one walk while striking out six."

The second game was another story as the usually solid UMass defense committed five errors which accounted for three of the Huskies seven runs. One bright defensive spot in that game, however, was the brilliant play of freshmen Beth Collins. She thwarted two Connecticut steal attempts and also was on the throwing end of the Minutewomen's first infield doubleplay of the season. Howle fielded a ground ball, threw to Collins behind the plate to get the forceout, and then the catcher fired a strong throw to Dickson at first base to get the double play.

The offensive standouts in the second game of the twinbill were the two UMass seniors, Matthews and Dickson. The winning pitcher had a three-run homer in the fourth and a run-scoring double in the seventh. Dickson belted a triple in the fourth and another three-bagger in the final stanza which scored one UMass run.

"We had more hits than ever today," said Thompson after the game. I was glad that almost everyone got to play. The substitutes showed that we have real team depth."

Yankees trade for Torrez

BALTIMORE (UPI) — The New York Yankees, in line with their policy of unloading potential free agents, yesterday traded controversial right-handed pitcher Dock Ellis and shortstop Marty Perez, their last two unsigned players, and minor league outfielder Larry Murray to the Oakland A's for pitcher Mike Torrez.

Ellis, 32, was 17-8 with New York last year, his only season with the team following eight years with Pittsburgh, and had a 3.19 ERA. In recent weeks Ellis had blasted Yankee owner George Steinbrenner for failing to provide the pitcher with what he felt was a "respectable" raise based on his 1976 statistics.

This spring, Ellis had a 1-1 mark and 1.80 ERA. His best season was 1971 when he had a 19-9 record and 3.05 ERA with the Pirates and was the starting pitcher for the National League in the All-Star game.

Perez, 30, acquired from the San Francisco Giants during spring training for Terry Whitfield, had batted only four times with two hits. Last season Perez, who also plays second and third base, batted .257 in 124 games with the Giants and Atlanta Braves. He had expressed discontent with the amount of playing time he was receiving.

Murray, with Syracuse of the International League, is a speed merchant. The 24-year-old outfielder stole 59 bases last year with West Haven of the AA Eastern League, his second minor league stolen base title, and added two more steals in eight games with the Yankees. He is signed to a one-year contract, the only one of the three players acquired by Oakland Wednesday who can not become a free agent at the end of the season.

Torrez is off to a 3-1 start at Oakland this year after a 16-12, 2.50 ERA season in 1976. The 30-year-old right-hander just recently signed a one-year contract. Torrez pitched previously for Montreal and Baltimore. His best season was 1975 when he had a 20-9 record and 3.06 ERA for the Orioles, who sent him to Oakland during the week before opening day last season.

Netmen host Albany State in regular season finale

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

With nature's cooperation, the UMass men's tennis team will cap its regular season today against SUNY Albany on the Boyden courts at 3:00 p.m. Today is the Minutemen's final test before tomorrow's opening round of the New England Championships.

Two of the netmen's seven previous matches were rained out, including Monday's match with Springfield, leaving UMass' record at 4-1.

The Minutemen were only a breath away from victory on Monday when the rain forced the players from the courts.

"It was frustrating," said UMass coach Bill Brown. "Another win under the belt would have looked good. Fifteen more minutes and we would have taken it."

Before the showers killed all competition, UMass had won three of the six singles matches. Barnaby Kalan and Ricky Sharton, third and fourth singles for UMass, were dominating their matches, both well into the second set, when the rain saved Springfield from certain defeat. These two matches would have clinched the match for UMass.

Alan Green, Jimmy Barnhart and Alan Staple all won in two sets. Barnhart and Staple finished their opponents in 30 minutes. Adam Rosen, the only Minuteman in trouble, lost his first set 6-4.

Brown said today's Albany match will "let us know how good we are."

"They'll be the caliber of a BC, Tufts or MIT," said Brown. Last year Albany defeated UMass, 7-2. However, the Minutemen are much stronger this year and are recognized as a threat throughout New England. ("I don't like what I've been hearing about you guys," Springfield coach Forest Tyeson confided to Brown before Monday's match.)

Brown said the Albany match "is a good match to end the season with," and with the New England's tomorrow, "it's time for a good match."

The match to watch will be Adam Rosen against Albany's Paul Feldman in the first singles. Both players have been in the winners circle several times on the New York tennis circut.

The Minutemen have come out smoking in the late season and are looking for their fourth straight win today.

Will the Minutemen be looking past Albany and on to the New England's?

"I think they'll remember last year," Brown replied.

Today's practice, the last of the season, "went pretty good," according to Brown. The Minutemen spent a lot of time on doubles. The first doubles team of Rosen and Green got a good workout from Shawn Sloane, Williams coach and UMass grad student, and Jay Ogden.

Horsehiders win, 5-3 on miscues

UMass third baseman Ed Skribiski releases peg to first in yesterday's 5-3 win over SMU. (Staff photo by Bob Higgins)

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

It wasn't a masterpiece but at least it's a start.

The UMass baseball team yesterday struggled to a 5-3 victory over Southeastern Mass. University at Earl Lorden field, utilizing the combined efforts of four of its pitchers.

Senior Jeff Reardon gained his first victory of the season by hurling four innings of two-hit ball. Reardon was the most effective member of the quartet, who appeared rusty after a six-day layoff.

Junior Tom Nigro followed Reardon and tossed two innings before giving way to an erractic Chris Kirby, who was charged with allowing the Corsairs three runs. Dave Tewhill was called upon to preserve the Minutemen's lead in the eighth as he picked up his second save of the season.

"Our pitching wasn't really that strong," said coach Dick Bergquist, "I thought they should have done a little better. It's a win, but I'm still a little disapointed that we didn't play better."

The first inning gave little indication of what was in store for the Minutemen. Reardon came out firing darts in the top of the inning and struck out the side. In the bottom half, UMass took advantage of Corsair miscues to jump out to a quick 2-0 lead.

Third baseman Ed Skribiski began the frame by hitting a routine grounder to shortstop Gary Soares. However, Soares watched the ball roll up his sleeve and Skribiski reached on an error. Starting pitcher and loser Steve Camara then dug himself into a hole by walking Jim Cullen. After Mike McEvilly had moved the runners over, designated hitter Bob Alves brought Skribiski to the plate on a medium fly to center. John Czerapowicz, (3 for 4) delivered Cullen with the Minutemen's second run with a double to the gap in left-centerfield.

UMass increased its lead to 5-0 in the sixth by exploiting the defensive liabilities of SMU. Alves led off by squirting a grounder by third baseman John Gonsalves who had a rough day at the hot corner. Czerapowicz followed with a slicing drive to right which Dave Andrade butchered into a (thank you official scorer) single. Dale Stone then slapped a bunt down the third base line which Gonsalves hesitated on and the bases were full.

Gonsalves then turned what looked like a Paul Abramowicz double-play ball into a fielders choice, error and run for UMass. Instead of going around the horn he opted to send the ball home; however, his throw was high and everyone was safe.

A frustrated Camara was mercifully lifted in favor of reliever Gary Felix. After retiring the first two batters he faced, Felix hit Skribiski with a pitch to surrender one run. Cullen capped the biazarre inning by singling to left, but Abramowicz was cut down at the plate on an attempt to score from second.

The Minutemen accepted the gifts, but then felt obliged to return the favor. Chris Kirby entered in the seventh and was wild.

"He had no idea where his pitches were going," said Bergquist. Kirby rendered three walks and was saved humiliation when Abramowicz made a tumbling, diving grab on a sinking line drive to end the inning.

Kirby was not as fortunate in the eighth. His nemesis-the base on balls- sent him to the showers after he walked the two leadoff hitters.

Tewhill entered the scene and was immediately touched for an excuse me base hit. SMU totaled three hits and two walks in the frame; however, a 5-4-3 double play thwarted the game-tying rally.

"We won it and now I'd like to get the next three to put us over the hump. We've been looking to reach that .500 mark all season," said Bergquist.

The Minutemen, 12-14, travel to Bridgeport this afternoon for a 3:00 contest. Freshman Doug Welenc, 0-1 with a 3.38 ERA, is slated to start.

Gazelles trounce Bears; unbeaten string preserved

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

BRIDGEWATER — Cindy Hartstone and Nancy O'Neil scored three goals apiece and led a well-balanced offensive attack that enabled the UMass women's lacrosse team to convincingly defeat Bridgewater St., 12-1, yesterday afternoon on the Bears' home field.

The victory was the fifth in a row for the streaking Gazelles and it also raises their season record to 5-0-1. However, perhaps even more important to the team members is that the victory also avenges the only loss of the season the Gazelles suffered last year, when the Bears defeated them, 5-3, in a tight defensive game.

"The team just went out there and did everything I expected from them," said UMass coach Frank Garahan. "I thought we were very aggressive on offense, hustling after ground balls, and I also am very proud of our defense, which played a good tight game."

UMass wasted little time in getting on the scoreboard, when Hartstone netted the first of her three goals on the day only 1:30 into the game.

The Gazelles then increased their lead to 2-0 before Bridgewater got on the scoreboard, cutting the UMass lead to 2-1, moments later.

However, that was the only goal the Bears got past UMass goalie Mary Murray and after that, the Gazelles just completely dominated the game.

It was then time for the UMass offense to take over the show, and it did just that, as the Minutewomen scored 10 unanswered goals which completely demoralized the Bears.

The Minutewomen scored four goals in a row just before the end of the first half to take a 6-1 lead and then scored six more in the second half to take a commanding 12-1 lead.

"We just picked them apart on offense," Garahan said, "Normally we are a fastbreaking team, but today we went a lot to a more deliberate offense in which we passed the ball around and looked for the open shot.

"Playing with that composure really paid off for us because we were getting such good shots on net."

Not only did the offense shine in the game for the Gazelles, but the defense was just air-tight. In fact, the Bears were only able to muster one shot on net in the entire second half.

"We play an aggressive man-to-man defense," Garahan said, "and that gave Bridgewater a lot of problems because they were having problems even getting the ball over midfield.

"I thought that Grace Martinelli, who had seven scoops, played an outstanding game on defense for us, as did Chris Basile who had 10 scoops and Gayle Hutchinson who had nine."

Offensively, Julie Hall, who is the team's leading scorer, had another fine game as she netted two goals and assisted on two others. Judy Kennedy also had two goals, while Carrie Nickerson had a goal and two assists and Evie Sneeden had a goal and one assist.

Before yesterday's game, Garahan said that he was a little apprehensive that the revenge factor might play too big a role in the game and force his players to overtry and play too aggressively. However, after the game, he said that he was pleased with the way his team handled themselves and played in such a composed style.

"I thought we showed a lot of poise by not letting the revenge factor get to us and make us overplay," he said. "The team went out there with the right frame of mind, and that was to win the game."

So the Gazelles have taken yet another step closer to becoming the number one team in New England, a goal that they just barely missed last year, mainly because of their loss to Bridgewater.

"If we just continue to play the type of game we played today, Garahan said, "I see no reason at all why we can't become the top team in New England.

The official word

In game four of the Celtics-76'ers playoff series a couple of rookie referees nearly cost the Celts the contest and coach Tommy Heisohn his reputation as a nice-guy.

But Tommy can rest easy now. The NBA's official officials are back whistling about infractions, not injunctions, and hence the Guys in Green can presumably zip through the remainder of the playoffs leaving in their wake little piles of suddenly unimportant Eastern League referees.

What caused this abrupt turnabout? Why was it made so quickly? When really is the best time to plant tomatoes?

These are just a few of the questions that were asked of one particular back-on-the-job NBA official, who asked to remain nameless.

"Harassment. That's all it was...harassment.

"When the whole thing started, we really didn't think it would be such a big deal. I mean, sure, we walked out before the playoffs, but it's not like there won't be any more next year.

"Anyway, that's what we thought, weird things began happening. Weird little things.

"Like when I left for the picket line Tuesday before last, I noticed an unfamiliar car pull into my driveway. I went to sleep that night and found out my bed had been short-sheeted. I didn't mind it at the time, because I don't toss and turn when I sleep.

"At breakfast the next morning I found vodka in my orange juice and 600 cans of Tab in my coffee. I didn't mind that either, because I like vodka and I don't drink coffee.

"Everything was rosy for the next few days, until my wife and I took the car to get groceries. About three miles to the store I noticed my breaks were gone. It wasn't really a problem — there was plenty of other traffic to stop us, but intersections were a pain in the neck.

"Anyway, we stopped just inside an A&P, and bought $150 worth of groceries. I remember putting the stuff in the refrigerator when we got home, yet the next day both steaks were gone. In their place was a note: 'Gone on strike.' i didn't mind it at the time. I mean, the steaks obviously had a good reason to walk, what with having to share the freezer with hamburger.

"Last Wednesday the house burned down. Found 32 empty gasoline cans around. We were insured, so it was okay, but it was a terrible waste of a precious product. The whole job coulda been done with four or five cans and a little imagination.

"Couple days later when we were getting settled in a Red Cross fall out shelter, I got this funny feeling in the pit of my stomach. Like something was wrong. Sure enough, when I took a head count, I saw that I was missing three kids, my wife and the dog. I still didn't consider the situation a bad one. I had four kids left.

"That's when the snipers came. We all managed to lock ourselves underground — all but the cat. We took it inside with us though. I mean the steak had gone.

"I finally escaped to Boston Sunday morning and found a picket line to stand in. That was when they broke us down.

"I didn't mind the sheets and the house, and that cat was pretty tasty with ketchup, but there we were, standing outside protesting for fair labor practices, and they had it rain on us. It was downright uncomfortable.

"The league made us pose for pictures while we were drinking champagne and looking happy. it was awful, but at least the champagne was dry."

"Oh yeah. Plant your tomatoes now. Lotsa moisture."

Singer in a Cafe

Light to catch dreams, wrapped space,   ancient,
        long enamored of the steam descending upon ears espresso-drugged in blackness pulsing —
Steering cloudy strains and flaws never sought and somehow still attained, he trembles propped with awe upon hearing in the waves new ideas that rock his skiff and cut a path beneath.
                    There,
crying for a birth, in waters uncharted,

        and celestial ship

will always float some airy seeking brave pilgrims to take to promised lands.

NEW 'LOVERS'

anothers's bed surrounds me while I try to lose reality in the pictures of ships and seas holding up the walls.

I hardly look at the boats except to catch tiny figures — perhaps to reassure myself others still ride waves, and it's off into the water that crashes sunshine colors down over and over in limitless shapes frothy textures, yet brilliant and hard.

over and over as I feel rhythms and tides of suns, of moons pulling me to balance in this unknown bed.

My cherished savings spent shall I ever afford another?

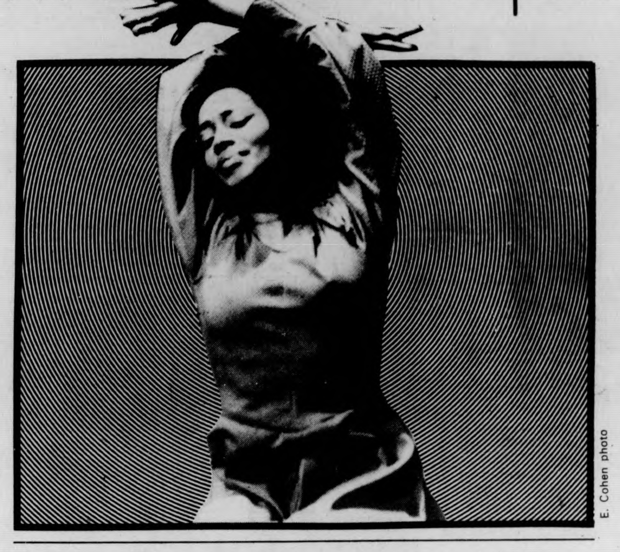
Diana Ramos : A Portrait Of Inspiration

By Leila Bruno



E. Cohen photo

"One of the most capable teachers of dance we have at UMass . . ."

Last semester after taking "Afro-Am Dance Theatre" taught by Diana Ramos, I decided that I'd like to know more about this incredible lady, especially after finding her in class to be a captivating and powerful influence over her students.

A slight black woman, Ramos has the ability to evoke in them an almost spiritual feeling for the music and movements. Each of her four classes is comprised of a wide mixture of races, and she believes that working with such a variety of culture tends to dissolve the tensions that exist outside.

Writing about Diana Ramos is no easy task — due to her immense experience as a dancer, teacher and choreographer. Born and raised in New York's Harlem district, Ramos decided on dance as her life-long ambition while just in junior high.

"I have always loved to dance", she reflected when describing her past family life which was closely-knit and included lots of music and singing." Continuing her formal training through high school, Ramos decided to study seriously in the New York studios, the names of which she sought "after looking in the yellow pages and going to the ones with the biggest ads. I wanted to dance as much as I could," which she did by then living at home while working at a variety of jobs to pay for classes.

In New York, she studied under Paul Sanasardo, Alvin Ailey, Donald McKayle, Donya Feurer, and Charles Wiedman. The scope of her technique included the disciplines of Haitian, Afro-Cuban, Jazz, and Ballet, with a concentration in Modern Dance.

It was with Paul Sanasardo and Donya Feurer that Ramos as a scholarship student at the age of 19 was invited to perform professionally with the company. From there she performed throughout the country for 10 years with the New York based Elio Pomare Dance Company as a soloist.

At Spelman College in Atlanta, Georgia, Ramos began her career as a choreographer whose works are now included in the repertoires of several companies. Her "Blues Montage" was funded by a grant from the National Endowment of the Arts and was performed by the "Sounds in Motion" dance company here at the F.A.C. last semester. Incidentally, while taking a curtain call, "Sounds" director Dianne McIntyre hailed Ms. Ramos as the chief inspiration of the company.

Ramos is an instructor in the Afro-American Studies Department, a position held since 1972. Originally she was invited here with four others to promote the Third World community in the arts, and proved to be valuable and influential enough to her students for the Dept. to retain her post. In the spring of 1972 she formed her first workshop which performed in the 5-college area, starting a string of others with the largest one held at Bowker Auditorium in 1975.

Ramos describes her main concern for creation in confronting the distortion of the Third World culture by the media to her audiences. Her goals include providing thought-provoking works that strive to transcend the Black stereotype in American society which continues to misinform and exploit her race. The "New York Times" started recently that "Miss Ramos is not out to entertain. She deals with intensity and emotion. Pain is her subject and her forthright approach is often shattering, certainly admirable."

Ramos stated that the dance as well as the theatre must transcend, provoke and inspire an audience rather than intimidate them by an oversimplification of themes.

"If dance is to be communicative of things in the world, the artist must figure the work in a sense of a pageant. It must transcend the day-to-day images."

However, regarding her teaching she exclaimed "My God, you look at these kids and see their dreams and innocence written all over their faces. I always want it to last longer for them, before they enter the real world. I think that I have learned something of a whole process of teaching from them."

In finding an impetus for the design of her dances, Ramos frequently refers to images from her past experiences with the Black philosophies, social life, and conflicts. Dealing exclusively with the Third World, her creations "come from where I know of black people", reflected by her deep-seated feelings and love for them.

Her pieces try to fight commerciality without imitating the conventional methods of survival along with a disregard for the powerful "Dance Monopoly" of professional companies that perform only to entertain.

Ramos describes her students and company members as "making my years here worthwhile. I'm deeply indebted to them", adding that her efforts couldn't have endured without their strong moral support. What is truly amazing about Diana Ramos is her totally unselfish, almost fanatical obsession to teach and enlighten the third world people about dance — but also life as well. She integrates a bit of Black history and culture from her personal research into the classes, stating that "I must do it, no matter where I go."

Students of Ramos'

Presently Ramos is unaided by another faculty person in her work with the classes which she teaches four nights a week, or the company. (It would be nearly impossible to calculate her hours working with them, which she does at any available minute, including holidays and weekends.

"It would be easier to have another faculty person with which to build, and I'd like to see a curriculum with more Black Studies courses. I don't want to just teach dance to students. There has to be some way to set up an interdisciplinary approach to the arts."

One of the biggest obstacles inhibiting the "Third World Image" is a complete lack of funding. Ramos feels that as the images of the company grow they require more budgeting with respect to lighting, sound, and other technical areas.

"I try to gear my whole thrust to the community at large but frequently the facilities are lacking with the necessary equipment to pull off a production. We've always had to improvise from the bottom up by figuring out ways to make beautiful things cheaply."

The results of the groups' collaborative efforts show their determination and success as the recent free performance at Amherst College proved by a favorable audience.

Ramos hopes that in the not too distant future the company will become an RSO group which would provide some desperately needed funds. If so aided, the "Third World Image" would be able to perform more often in both the 5-college area as well as throughout New England, with lecture-demonstrations at various schools. In addition, Ramos is looking into grants and a possible funding from the National Endowment of the Arts.

Throughout her career to the present she continues her intensive study and research "to find out as much about dance as possible." She has written a vast collection of unfinished essays and poetry, and plans to begin work on a book soon. Her theme remains throughout to be concerned with the problems of Black people in dance, and reflected that "when you care about something, you get caught up in its facts."

When confronted with questions regarding the present state of the Black dancer, Ramos gets angry, seeing the best talent "exploited on Broadway, analogous to a minstrel type of scene. She feels that the audiences expect to see it and "if it's not jazzed-up or disco, people get impatient. It's really pathetic that people don't know about the contributions of the great masters." Ramos believes that someday the world has got to realize the Black voice and heritage as a viable element of our culture.

To her students, company members, and colleagues, Diana Ramos is a respected and inspirational woman in the Third World Community. However, she is teacher to all who enroll in her classes which boost the most widely integrated of any classes on the campus. Femi Richards of the Afro-Am Dept. sees her as "One of the most capable teachers of dance we have at UMass," adding that her continued appointment at UMass. is a modest reward for her nationally recognized talent. It is that quality of her teaching that Ramos transmits to her students; an encouragement and jubilation to the Third World people; done through her incredible unselfishness and love for them.

"It's high time we were treated as artists."

By Mary Brown

Dance classes.

The words make most of us think of slightly-dusty Grange Halls or school gymnasiums, where those dreaded ballroom and ballet classes of our youth took place.

The words have a different image for UMass dance students, however. If you ask them about their classes, they'll tell you about crowded, poorly-ventilated rooms, with rows of pillars and low ceilings.

Marilyn Patton, who heads the dance program, calls the studios a "safety hazard". For the past several years, she has been asking the University to allow the dance program to utilize the upstairs sections of Goodell, with its large, wooden-floored rooms, high ceilings and large windows.

This year, the program is using one room in Goodell, but in the fall they will move to a basement room in Cottage C, an older building near Worcester dining commons. This room also is lined with pillars.

"We always get the leftovers," Patton says, "We're perhaps the most professional department on campus. It's high time we were treated as artists."

The rooms in Goodell are ideal for dance, Pattons says, because of their excellent ventilation and high ceilings. Because of the spatial dimensions, movement is not limited as it is in the studios now in use and thus creativity of choreographers is not inhibited.

Patton says the program was promised Goodell when they merged with the Music Dept. two years ago from the School of Physical Education. The offices for the five dance professors are still located in the basement of the North Physical Education Building, next to one of the three studios the program uses.

But however ideal Goodell would be, the office of the vice-chancellor of academic affairs has different plans for its use.

Henry H. Skilling, the staff associate in charge of making space allocations to the different departments, says that no departmental or special programs will be allowed in the building next year since it has been scheduled for renovation.

Skilling said the tentative plan is to make Goodell a center for student activities, housing such offices as the College of Arts and Sciences and student advising.

The current plan is tentative, he said, because the architects first rendering did not contain enough office space and also cost too much.

Meanwhile, Patton says the program's students will be practicing in the old studios, and the competition to get into classes will remain high.

Patton says of the 80 people who tried out for acceptance into the dance groups, 20 were accepted, and she received somewhere between 250 and 300 letters of inquiry about dance at UMass.

The interest in the UMass dance program, Patton attributes to the faculty's willingness to put in many hours of rehearsal time for student performances and an attitude of professionalism among faculty.

The department sponsors four performing groups: the University Dancers, who hold between 30 to 40 performances each year; the Concert Dance Group, which hold eight concerts per year; the Intermediate Dance Group; and the Beginning Dance Group. None are financed by the University.

About 350 students have been turned away from dance courses.

Pattson said there is still no dance major at UMass, although the latest in a series of many proposals for the establishment of a major is currently in the Faculty Senate.

Students who wish to major in dance, therefore, and required to go through the B.D.I.C. program — Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration.

One senior who has chosen this method, Amy Swanson, said the program "is definitely worth it" even though it requires combining dance with another discipline. Swanson said students are exposed to a variety of courses in technique, history and science-related courses.

"Students are on overtime," she said, "and so are the faculty." What surprises her is that somehow the faculty have enough energy to do all they do, she said.

With A Concentration In Dance

By Robin Costello

"I have been dancing since I was little," explained Genevieve Nass, one of three seniors majoring in Physical Education with a dance concentration.

"When I attended UMass. as a freshman, the dance major hadn't been set up yet. Therefore, to continue dancing I had to work through the Phys. Ed. department."

The following semester, the dance department was declared independent from Phys. Ed. Nass spoke highly of the students and faculty involved in the department, "When you're studying, dancing and performing with the same people everyday, you become very good friends. Therefore, there is really no competetiveness that creates bad feelings between dancers. Of course, everyone is out there trying their best, whether it be an audition or rehearsal — but everyone is also willing to help a fellow dancer if they can."

Looking back on her past years at UMass. Gen said, "I feel UMass. has been a good place for me to excel in what I'm interested in — mainly dancing and teaching...I have had the opportunity to learn from a well qualified staff, perform with the University Dancers and study in New York and these are just a few examples."

This semester she is also teaching a Dance II class twice a week. "I enjoy the class and working with people. It has been a very good experience for me, especially since I am interested in making that my career." Nass mentioned that she is looking for a teaching job in Phys. Ed. at the K-12 level, or a job instructing dance classes, similar to what she is doing this semester.

In closing she said she hoped as many people as possible would take advantage of the opportunity to see a great performance tonight. She is no longer dancing with the University Dancers, but supports them enthusiastically. They will be performing along with the faculty and Concert Dance group tonight, Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets can be purchased at the Dance office in N.O.P.E. or at the door.

Comtemporary Dance System

By Ann Murphy

The Contemporary Dance System (CDS) performed April 1 and 2 at Kirby Theater at Amherst College.

Their style of dance which is very modern, is new to me and their technique was executed to the utmost of perfection. They could move energy in a ripple from their toes to their heads in a flowing movement, blending well together.

"Steps of Silence" choreographed by Anna Sokolow was a long moving piece which conveyed bondage and destruction. It opened with the dancers staring hard at the audience, crossing their fists in front of their faces. They would move their fists as if to peek out at the audience and then back over their eyes. They all were together so well that it was creepy seeing their eyes waver in and out of view. Then the movement came, sending the dancers on a torturous journey through the destruction. It was almost as if a mystical force were twisted, throwing their bodies around.

As the dance progressed their costumes turned into shredded rags, and by the end all they had on were flesh colored underwear, symbolizing nakedness. Then, garbage was blown onto the stage as the dancers fell to the ground beaten.

The next dance "My Echo My Shadow and Me" was supposed to be funny but didn't come across too well. Some people in the audience were laughing hysterically and I thought they must be seeing something I didn't. There were three people dressed in old pin-striped suits, and a glamorous woman in a silver sparkle gown. The chaplin-like dancers bumped into each other, and hammed it up, but not to the point of comedy. They were too subtle to be hilarious. The "sexy" woman kept getting her hands stuck to her forehead, which was cute but overdone.

The last dance was the best judging from the choreography, technique and energy. It was called "Waldstein Sonata" and was choreographed in part by Jose Limon and completed after his death by CDS Artistic Director Daniel Lewis.

The music was very happy and light reflecting on the dancers' movements of jumping and kicking. The stage was always balanced well with an equal number of men, women or both. Overall the piece gave the impression of a social dance. The images and lines the dancers created were beautiful. The poses of the women, standing on one leg, the other leg bent in the air were all perfectly coordinated.

The CDS company gave a very good performance, precision and skill unseen by many others. They lacked a warmth or rapport with their audience as though they were doing another days work. The professionalism was obvious through the lights, music and quick timing of the dancers and nothing was in excess or out of place.

BOOKS

PRIME MOVERS
By Joseph H. Mazo
William Morrow Inc.
$12.50 illus.

By Ann Murphy

Prime Movers is all about modern dance in America. Joseph Mazo traces its history from pioneers Loie Fuller and Isadora Duncan to contempories like Martha Graham and Paul Taylor.

Mazo makes the description of dance movements and illuminates the imagination for those who have never seen those artists.

He shows the spirit in dance to which Isadora Duncan lived her life. Duncan was part exhibitionist, part individualist and part artist. Mazo shows that her obsessive nature came out in her dance as well as in her life.

One can see why modern dance has taken so long to become a developed art form. Creators of this style such as Fuller and Duncan had no way of passing their technique to others in a scientific manner. They had no system of notation, then, as they do now, and so many masterpieces of dance are lost forever.

It is this aspect of dance as a living art that Mazo portrays so well. The helplessness of the early years is contrasted with the strength of contemporary companies like Alwin Nikolais and Alvin Ailey.

Around 1915 Ruth St. Denis with her husband Ted Shawn created teachable techniques with the forming of their own school, Denishawn. They were most interested in teaching and had as their pupils Doris Humphrey and Martha Graham, who developed their own schools and styles later on.

Doris Humphrey went on to establish dance as a serious art form, and her main impetus on the word of dance was the following, "Dance happens in the frightening moment between falling and recovering, during the arc swept by a body moving between equilibrium and uncontrol."

Humphrey also choreographed "Shakers" in 1931 which was recently reconstructed for the University Dance Concert by Francis McClellan from the labanotated score by arrangement with the Dance Notation Bureau. McClellan is an assistant professor of dance at Hampshire College.

Mazo shows Martha Graham to be the main influence in modern dance today with respect to choreography, costuming, and set designing. Most founders of modern dance companies of today have studied with Graham, like Erick Hawkins, Merce Cunningham and Paul Taylor.

The photographs are the best and even the oldest ones are of a fine quality. They show movement in a frozen way which only enhances his writing. What else is dance except a visual art to those in the audience?

Mazo gets to the center of every artists' creativity. He shows what makes their personalities drive them to pursue their careers and links every artist to the next, forming a chain of modern dance history.

The Creative Process

Five-College Dance Faculty Interviews

By Ann Murphy

Marilyn V. Patton

"Teaching is most important to me, that is why I chose to come to the University," said Marilyn V. Patton, associate professor of dance and director of the dance program.

Patton has a Master of Fine Arts degree from the University of North Carolina in Greensboro. She studied at the Connecticut College School of the Dance, at the Erick Hawkins Studio, the Martha Graham studio and at the Nikolais-Louis Dance Theater. She has been a teacher and performer with the Erick Hawkins Dance Company.

"It's much more rewarding to watch students develop and attain success. I still like to perform though. It's much more thrilling to see these kids as professionals.

"I started to dance when I was in college. I had a friend who was choreographing "Brigadoon." I auditioned and made it and once I put that grease paint on....

"I never had taken a (dance) lesson before my junior year in college and I felt that given a basic amount of natural ability and a lot of determination and perseverance, anyone can do anything.

"Dancers have to sacrifice their personal life and there's no time or energy for much else."

Patton said that college students are better to teach because you can only go so far with children because of choreographic limitations.

She said that choreography is the same kind of creative process of any art. "You get an idea in your head that someday everything will fit together. It's also subconscious and takes a lot of hours. People don't realize the time element involved.

"I spend an hour per minute of choreography I like because I have to perfect it and throw out things that don't work."

Regarding the fate of the dance department, Patton said, "hopefully by September there will be a dance major. Now the kids graduate through BDIC (Bachelor's Degree in Independent Concentration) or PE in dance concentration."

She gave some advice for aspiring dancers, saying that if people want to be ballet dancers they can't go to college, they have to be in New York when they're very young. Now we are placing kids in modern and jazz companies, including four men who are now in professional companies, all of whom came to us with no training.

"We give students knowledge of the body, and exposure to other arts and sciences which are necessary to make them total persons."

She said that this kind of well rounded experience is not found in New York and that by performing in concerts at the University, the dancers know what to expect later on and can adjust better.

Andrea Watkins

"I teach primarily ballet and modern dance. All of us teach a variety of theory courses such as rhythmic analysis," said Andrea Watkins, associate professor of dance.

Watkins has a Master of Fine Arts degree from George Washington University. She has danced with the Utah Theater Ballet, the Corcoran Improvisational Concert Group, and the Arlington Theater Association. She has studied with David Lichine, Gene Marinaccio, Frederick Franklin, William Christianson, Yuriko, Eugene Loring, and Ruth Currier.

As to Watkins' first start in dance she said, "I had a friend who took ballet and thought it was fun. I was eight years old.

"I enjoy teaching and have taught at the college level since I was an undergraduate. I prefer to teach college where you don't have to worry about concentration spans."

She expressed satisfaction in the tremendous growth of the dance department in the last five years.

"Since I've been here there have been more highly skilled dancers. I think that the level of student interest in dance is very high. We turn away an average of 200 kids each semester from dance courses."

She attributes some of the recent popularity in dance as part of a nationwide trend.

"We had to come out of our Puritan backgrounds to feel good about our bodies. The second hurdle is about dance being all right for a man."

Regarding choreography she said, "I don't know where ideas come from, suddenly I find myself thinking of something. Then I transfer from idea to movement, but sometimes there isn't an idea. I think, well, do I make up a reason for a dance or not. The best ones (dances) happen when an idea comes first."

"Dance physically and psychologically makes me a happier person. I like myself better when I am active and doing things, for many times if you are depressed you can pull yourself out in a dance; it pulls you up!"

Watkins said that a degree in dance gives a student a wider background in terms of dance and experience. She also noted that a college atmosphere makes it hard to do well both academically and physically.

"Most dancers can cram for exams very well, I did it purely on cramming, although I don't advise it. You don't have any choice if you are dead tired."

Watkins described the fundamentals for a dancer, "someone who has the average skills, is basically strong, flexible and dedicated. You have to work consistently very hard and that's not easy, and at first it's very thrilling and suddenly you find out it isn't very much fun. The novelty wears off. Some stick with it, some don't.

People see dance at the high point in the performance. You put in so many hours, but anyone who's any good in any field pays a tremendous price."

Dan Peterson

"Personally when I'm dancing is when I can be myself most completely and most comfortably," said Dan Peterson, another associate professor in dance.

Peterson earned his Master of Arts degree at the University of California, Los Angeles, where he did developmental studies in song dance, and studied with Jean Erdman and Al Haung. In 1970 he choreographed the Los Angeles production of Mencotti's "The Unicorn," "The Gorgon," and "The Manticore." His performance experience has been with the Saida Gerard Dance theater, Lotte Goslar Revue and Storie-Crawford Dance Company.

The first thing that got Peterson interested in dance was in a high school folk dance group in a Scandinavian town in the Midwest.

"I loved it more than anything else and I later went into business in college, then I decided I wanted to get into theater. In my senior year, I started dancing and decided that moving and dancing was better than acting, and choreographing better than directing. I went to Los Angeles and continued training there, then went for my master's at UCLA. Around that time I got exposed to dance therapy, became interested and involved and at the same time performed and choreographed."

"I'm most interested in dance therapy and improvisation. I'm a registered dance therapist, and I worked as a dance therapist for two years which was a demanding experience. Two years was enough then."

At UMass, Peterson has been teaching, choreographing, performing and has developed a dance therapy course.

"The department here doesn't share my interest in dance therapy. I'm working on my PhD at NYU in dance therapy and have no definite plans except to finish my degree and develop a private practice.

"I think it's good (the dance department) and there's a lot of good channeling of energy in performing. The performance aspect is probably outstanding, and the student interest is very high. We have an awful lot of good dancers and many University students who are interested in learning about the art form and their bodies. They bring a tremendous enthusiasm to dance class.

"Take dance therapy. I bet you could take 100 people and fill classes. The University isn't responding to that interest but they are interested in performing dance. Dance History, Philosophy and Studies in Movement Therapy are very important, not just for dance, but for people in general. Since the University emphasizes undergraduate programs they should include dance as a liberal art.

"I believe in a liberal arts education. It's very important for an individual's whole life. A lot of good dancers in New York have graduated from college. I know you can also ignore the college scene and go to New York, learn technique and do it that way. Some of these people have just as full an education.

"My inspiration comes from my life, where I have more ideas than time to choreograph. I have a half dozen dances not choreographed. I'm kind of getting away from choreography into dance improvisation. Spontaneous choreography is something you'll never see in a regular dance concert, it's not part of the regular concert dance scene."

Richard Jones

"I'm interested in choreography because I enjoy creating. I feel I have something to say even though my works aren't political. You can find a statement of my philosophy," said Richard Jones, associate professor of dance.

Jones receives his Master of Fine Arts from New York University. He has taught and performed in Canada, France, Germany, Switzerland, Tunisia, Greece and Turkey. He performed with New York dance companies and on Broadway. He is a professor in residence in the summers at the American Academy in Paris.

Jones said that his inspiration for choreography is caused by music, literature and ideas in regard to a point of view.

"I've always had an idea I would be dancing. I started out dancing on my own as a child seeing as much as I could of dance, but I didn't start seriously until after college graduation. My bachelor's degree in art was related because it assists me to see patterns and to think in terms of design and competition.

"Dance is my whole way of expressing myself and communicating with others in all aspects. Not that I'm trying to be heavy in interpretating something that's philosophical. I'm into the point of more enjoyment and entertainment. I get enjoyment hoping they (the audience) can appreciate it.

"I think that a degree in dance permits a student of the dance to have a complete knowledge of the field which will aid them in their training. Even though they can't see the relation immediately, they can draw upon it in terms of academics. A professional dancer usually doesn't get this type of training. They're constantly in studios. It's more practical than theoretical. Theory comes in only when they do research on their own.

"Student interest is very high and the program is good. It can be made better with the acceptance of the major and with other instructors who can bring in other points of view.

"This concert program is to give students an opportunity to create and to see their works and ideas materialize with all the proper lighting and costumes. It gives them that privilege even though all of them aren't on that high level they should be on."

Jones feels that there should be free student recitals during the year and from those to have the best works mounted for production.

THE UNIVERSITY DANCERS

Backstage

By Margaret Chase

"Don't hit the legs — and please don't hit the shinbusters!"

"Are the dancers ready? What? Where is he? Well get him — now!"

"Why hasn't anyone signed in?"

"Cue one, GO!"

A fly on the wall backstage in Bowker Auditorium hears all these things and more from that VIP of backstage machinery, the stage manager.

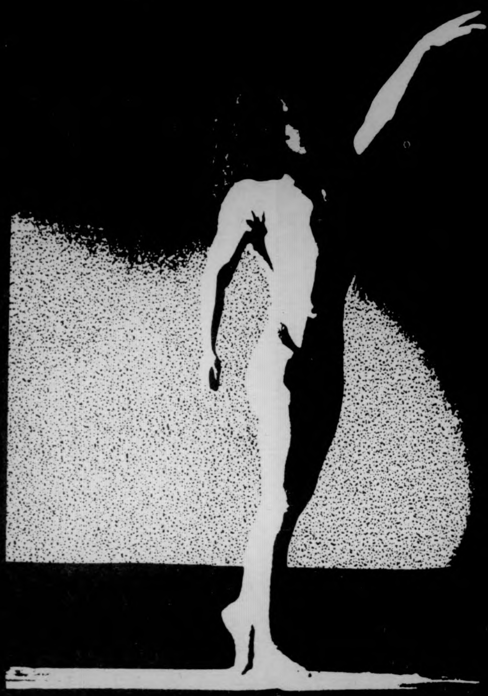
The stage manager in a dance production such as a University Dancers concert has basically two roles. He—she sees that everyone gets to the theatre when they are supposed to, yells at them if they're late without an excuse, keeps track of who is where, when, lists the rules of the theatre to the dancers, in short, heads a family for the duration of the concert.

The other role the stage manager plays is that of a fine technician. He or she must know every single dance in the concert backwards and forwards in order to cue the lighting, curtain, sound, and prop changes correctly.

The stage manager must be patient, yet firm, calm, yet ready to act quickly in any eventuality, knowledgeable, and aware of how to utilize that knowledge.

All of this is very familiar to me because I was the stage manager for the student dance concert in February. I know that at first, things seemed insurmountable. The head phones used to communicate with backstage crew buzz and sometimes screech feedback into your ears, and you feel incapable of controlling so many people. There's also always the fear that you won't get the hang of calling cues in time for opening night, and in fact, you are a total nervous wreck. Fortunately, at UMass., Jean B. Cohen, lighting designer, and Susan VanDyke, technical director, are used to training "green" stage managers and by opening night I felt confident enough to run the show.

Now when I'm dancing I try very hard not to hit the shinbusters (lighting instruments that are clamped on shin high posts in the wings), I sign in, try to be on time, and keep a healthy respect for those people backstage that make the magic happen in the theatre, headed by that brave soul — the stage manager.



On Stage

By Ann Murphy

The University Dancers and Concert Dance Group in Concert last Thursday proved to be a night filled with special effects and technical creativity.

The overall atmosphere was very lively and "up." Most of the pieces were seriously executed but not many had heavy themes behind them.

"Land of the Make Believe" choreographed by Daniel Albert was a fantasy world recreated by dance and sign language. The singer was singing the words of the song as well as incorporating movement to direct the six fairy-like dancers around her. They wore bright colored costumes which strengthened the surreal quality of the stage.

Andrea Watkins entertained everyone with her "Conversations With Almost Dances." She spoke directly to the audience, complaining that her dance ideas wouldn't come out of the back of her mind. These "ideas" were eight dancers at the back of the stage who tried to help Watkins form something. Watkins decided that "you gotta have a gimmick" so she donned a yellow crash helmet with a red headlight on top and realizing that it wouldn't work she went through a series of crazy antics with her ideas that can only be seen, not read in a review.

Francia McClellan, assistant professor of dance at Hampshire College, reconstructed "Shakers" originally choreographed by Doris Humphrey in 1931. The Shakers were a religious group who danced during their services and received their name because of the ecstatic movements that sometimes overtook them during worship. The Shakers discipline and celibacy fascinated Humphrey.

The dancers created this mystique of a lost society. A man and a woman would move toward another but never touch. The strict lines and separation of the sexes left such an astounding impression that one would see the genius of Humphrey.

"Tears of Joy" choreographed by Richard Jones, used chairs for the outline of the mood. Each dancer had one, which in the first part of the dance they sluggishly wrapped their bodies around. The sleaziness of a dark smoke-filled bar filled the stage. Then the chairs were lowered and hooked onto chains which were hoisted up about 15 feet. The pace also changed to a faster tempo whereupon they danced together as a group, not retreating into themselves. They performed this expertly showing the transition from slow to fast and individual to group effort.

Some of the pieces were performed well but lacked any expression or projection, and I realize that students are not professionals but several could have showed more enthusiasm and energy.

I felt that a few of the dances were overdone such as "Freedom Bound" which was about bondage and slavery. The theme didn't appear developed enough and the movements were too much of the same to warrant a captive audience.

This weekends' program is totally different except for three dances and should be equally as interesting.

The University Dancers will be performing tonight, Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. in Bowker Aud. Tickets are still available.

Signs Of Life

By Alice E. Horner

"Tonight we present an exploration of the life cycle. Our hope is to show the beauty of American Sign Language by combining it with music, poetry, and dance, and to perform a piece that both hearing and deaf members of the audience can enjoy — creating a true sign of life."

Those are the words of Laurel Chiten who conceived, wrote, directed and performed in "Signs of Life," a production of her Senior Honors Thesis shown recently in the Hampden Student Center in Southwest. Laurel and her seventeen member cast (many from her sign language class) achieved her objectives by offering a highly original and emotive show; and in doing so evidenced the creative potential of students on this campus.

The human experience from birth to old age was traced and celebrated in twenty-five succinct pieces drawn from contemporary literature and theater and manifested in dance, poetry, song and sign language. The sign language was an integral part of each piece, it served to add another expressive dimension to the numbers, rather than distracting from or overpowering them, even to those unfamiliar with American Sign Language (ASL). ASL is very much like written Chinese — it creates a picture for each word — and is not to be confused with finger-spelling, the practice of manually spelling out each letter. As such, ASL is a matter of communication in motion and logically is aligned with the genre of dance.

The show was tied together by the motif of dreams: the wistful dream of a child held out by Karen Urgotis in "Starlight Starbright"; Elaine Louisos's danced dream for love in Carole King's "First Day in August"; the desperate dream of the old for time adapted from "No Time at All" from Pippin and performed in dual perfection by Meribeth Anderson and Jo-Ann Waide.

Many of the numbers themselves had surrealistic and primal qualities to them, including: "Birth," Rosemary Jaffe's solo unfolding on a darkened stage; "Land of Make Believe," a University Dancer's piece choreographed by Dan Albert that swished and swirled the viewer to a state of sublime awareness; "Carousel," a Jacques Brel song, where dancers merry-go-rounded around Laurel Chiten's terrifying marionette; and "Do Not Go Gently into that Good Night," where Linda Harris appeared in Druid fashion to cast an enchantment with her hands through Dylan Thomas' poem.

The finale of "Signs of Life," written for the show by brother Paul Chiten, picked up and crescendoed the propensity of humans to dream, and provided a fitting ending for the show, and (for the time being) for Laurel: "Dreaming' on Hard Times gone-Fortune smiles upon us-Dreamin' on..."

"We are given hands that touch
We have eyes to see
Open mouths to taste the world
All these gifts are free
But some people must hear music
Through the sign of hand
Though they do not use their ears
They can understand..."

"...Dreamin' On
Hard Times gone
Fortune smiles upon us
Dreamin' on..."

Dance As Therapy; One Man's Experience

By Ann Murphy

Tim Ney is pursuing his career in dance therapy and his main accomplishments are working with convicts in houses of correction. In the summer of 1972 his interest in dance therapy was reinforced by a summer intensive course in contact improvisation at Tufts University.

He then volunteered at Deer Island House of Correction to conduct a self-development group, focusing on how the inmates were going to change their behavior so they wouldn't get into jail again.

For example, Ney would initiate a trust circle; where one inmate who was angry would get in the middle, fall, and every one would catch him — which developed a more trusting relationship.

Ney also helped to create a theater workshop which the group of men responded well to.

"The inmates discovered the connection between what they were holding in their bodies and their emotions. I try to help them bring it out, but I didn't have any clinical training so I am going back to school for that part," he said.

Ney spent a year of internship with Mara Capy, a noted storyteller, at the Veteran's Administration Hospital in Florence, Mass.

"There were mostly Vietnam vets not being able to adjust to street life, alcoholics and schizophrenics.

"One success was with a schizophrenic who never would participate with the group. He laid down and never did anything. I tried to get to him so I asked him if he wanted a massage. He said yes and that's just what he needed. He reciprocated and we established a relationship.

"It isn't always progress. In working in institutions, mostly prisons, the role of the dance therapist is that the administration can see that movement doesn't lie. You remove the tension of the institution and you help people open up to their peers, not to turn them into dancers. They have a better body concept.

As part of his regular routine Ney said he starts with relaxation, "It depends on who you're dealing with. In prison it took a long time to get someone to lay on their backs."

"I'm working right now with court involved youths in Attleboro, workshops for senior citizens, grant writing, meetings and trying to establish a program in prisons.

"In prisons there is extreme tension, sexual frustration, and a high level of violence. Because of the regimented routine, prisoners have to withhold a lot. In a community we have emotional support, not in the prisons."

Ney is in favor of an integrated arts approach in institutions, using them all together to find what people respond to.

He also worked on "Project Good Start" with 766 special needs students. He said some of the children would be very lethargic and others very hyperactive.

"This is an example of where we can have a dance therapist to work with these kids. Then we can avert the problem before it turns out to violence.

"If we wait, there's violence and then they're institutionalized."

Ney is also on the Board of Directors of the Institute of Integrated Arts which consists of dancers, choreographers, and visual artists who work on developing programs and getting funds to consult school systems and prisons, while having workshops to develop skills.

AN OPEN LETTER TO ROSALIND DE MILLE
Homage to the Woman Who Would Restore Isadora's Home

By Risa Graubard

Rosalind de Mille is Chairperson of the Smith College Dance Department.

This letter started out as an interview, but early on I realized that it would be difficult to give it any semblance of order — chronological or otherwise. So I'll suffice with my own personal homage to Rosalind de Mille.

The example that you are — your beauty and lifestyle have touched me and countless others. Your grace and charm, has taught the most stubborn and abrupt of us, that the best way to get along with people, even the most difficult, is to drown them with kindness.

Last week when we sat down to talk — I brought you a flower — the fragrance was heavenly. You told me a legend of Hawaii. Some would commit suicide by lying down on a bed in a room surrounded with leis — they would be smothered by the aroma. I mentioned a book I had just read by Henry Miller about Mishima — that harikari was an honor that only a near saint was allowed to commit — what Mishima had done for the classical arts in Japan — that Henry Miller was my favorite writer and that Anais Nin had just died.

You replied that nobody could write a book about Mishima besides Henry and proceeded to tell me about your friendship with Miller — then about those years in Hollywood when Paris moved to California — the white Russians, Grabo's circle, Stravinsky's, Chaplin's, Rheinhardt's — and then back to Henry. His image had preceded him — the Tropics were abounding, though banned.

All of the artists you had known, your journalist parents then living a public life — in those days children were seen and not heard, so you spent much of your time under the dining room table — just listening.

All these round-about tales of the dance world first hand — what Madame Nijinska was like; frumpy but gentle with her dapper aristocratic Polish husband who would translate her class corrections. (Step to the chosen one; click his heels and bow, but I forget in which order). "Madame would like your plie a little deeper?"

Then work on Max Rheinhardt's Notre Faust in the hills opposite the Hollywood Bowl. Rehearsals would begin at midnight, when he would stalk in with his entourage, and the gates would slam open — he of course wore a cape and a fedora replete with plumes. The dancers would descend the hills with torches and begin their dance.

The visions you conjured — dancing with Adolph Bolm, Lotte Goslar, Carmelita, Loring, Lichine and others have been so real and so magical. Your spirit and youth are a lesson in life.

Interview

(con't from pg. 7)

As advice to a career in dance, Jones said that the person has to realize that it is a dedication and it means many sacrifices.

"It's discipline. Lots of discipline has to go with it. It does consume your time but I don't think a dancer is narrow minded. We have to be so aware of everything around us such as politics, sciences and other arts. These are the things that give us the motivation. We draw from these other areas of life in order to communicate. It broadens your whole awareness of life as a whole.

"Dance is not focusing just on the self. It seems like self indulgence but it's not, it's making other people aware. You can't take it as a job that goes from nine to five. It encompasses your whole life. You're at the studio from morning to night, where you leave the physical aspect being but the mental part is working. You think it through all the time."

KIKI DEE
(Rocket)

After hearing Kiki Dee's third ablum, I'm surprised that she still hasn't risen to full-fledged pop-star status. The warmth and freshness of her voice, combined with a fine collection of songs and some notable instrumental performances, make this a thoroughly appealing album. There are enough catchy ballads here to provide plenty of well-needed quality for the AM airwaves, but Kiki can also pull out the stops and rock quite substantially, as she does in grand fashion with "How Much Fun", the Robert Palmer song which is one of this album's highlights.

My only complaint about this album concerns Elton John's production. Although Elton has done a fine job in assembling the musicians (the Electric Light Orchestra string section, the Brecker Brothers on horns and the back-up band from Blue Moves) he occasionally tends to make the production a bit too elaborate by overshadowing Kiki's voice with orchestration and background vocals. Just how strong her voice can be when it is allowed to stand on its own is shown by a song called "Into Eternity", which features some lovely interplay between her voice and the ELO's cellos.

In all, however, this album is sufficient evidence that when Kiki Dee sings "I've got the music in me", she means it.

WEATHER REPORT
Heavy Weather
(Columbia)

With the release of Heavy Weather, Weather Report have once again shown why they are one of the top experimental jazz groups around today. Josef Zawinul's keyboard playing is top-notch throughout, providing along with Wayne Shorter's mellow sax expertise, that distinctive sound which marks this band. On Heavy Weather, they have also been joined by bassist extraordinaire, Jaco Pastorius, who produces some unearthly sounds with that instrument as well as playing some drums. Also present on the album are two mysterious people known only as A. Acuna and M. Badrena on drums and percussion respectively.

The music is intense, well-written and fresh. Some of the best cuts are "Birdland" and "A Remark You Made", written by Zawinul, as well as "Harlequin," written by Shorter, and "Havona," written by the newcomer Pastorius, who does a more than adequate job replacing Alphonso Johnson. Watch out, this could be a big one for these guys. (AB).

GENE CLARK
Two Sides To Every Story
(RSO)

Gene Clark on this album has overworked the overworked slow, hypnotic country rock song. Clark is a veteran of the L.A. folk-rock-country scene, and he was once a real force in the original Byrds, as well as the Dillard and Clark Expedition, which was a short-lived and under-rated country band. Two Sides, Clark's third solo album, has its high spots, but generally fails to achieve its promise.

Clark has a somewhat whiny voice, though it is a steady one. The best vehicles for it are slower ballads or faster songs with limited range, and this album is full of both. The problem is that there are too many of the sappy, whiny, weepy country-type songs. "Sister Moon" and "Hear The Wind" are prime examples. He even slows down his old "Kansas City Southern" to about five miles an hour under a caution light.

There are a few flashes of the old brilliance, especially "Home Run King" and "In The Pines," which echo the 1971 vintage Expedition. James Talley's "Give My Love To Marie," which is about a miner dying of Black Lung, is certainly the emotional peak of the album. Although it is truly evocative, it cannot push the rest of the album out of the various ruts that it's in.

THE BEACH BOYS
LOVE YOU
(Brother)

So this is their first album fully written by Brian Wilson in eight years. So what? So this is better than their last album. What isn't? It's still terrible. Were it by anyone without such a reputation, it would be ignored.

Like so many other albums lately, this has a slow side and a fast side. The slow side is awful; the singing is unlistenable (especially Brian's), the melodies aren't fully developed, the performances are listless, and the lyrics are so cutesy that they are annoying as hell. The fast side is so much better, it fully qualifies as mediocre. The production is good and the tunes are catchy. But Brian's hideous singing still gets in the way, and those ridiculous-but-not-funny words are still impossible to ignore.

I don't hear any cuts that would make it as hits, either by old-fashioned rock and roll radio standards or by those of today's deplorable Slush-30. And what does it matter that the Beach Boys were the originators of their sound? The hell with auteurists, what counts is what's in the grooves, and Henry Gross is now making far better Beach Boys records than the Beach Boys themselves.

DARYL HALL — JOHN OATES
No Goodbyes
Atlantic

This is not an unwise move by the former record company of the now hot Daryl Hall and John Oates to sell their past catalogue. And a more varied five lp history is hard to find. Initially Atlantic thought they had a folk duo with these two when they got Whole Oates. Only "Lilly (Are You Happy)" Is here from that. Next came War Babies which Todd Rundgren produced. Todd's space-age influence is immediately apparent on the three War Babies cuts here. Of these ("70's Scenario," "Beanie G and the Rose Tattoo", and "Can't Stop the Music") it is the last that is really identifiably Hall and Oates material. Rundgren so overwhelmed the two in the studio that much of War Babies could go on a solo Rundgren lp.

It was the final Atlantic lp, Abandoned Luncheonette, that introduced most people to the group. No Goodbyes contains three cuts from it, including their first big song, "She's Gone." The remaining three songs are previously unreleased tapes from 1973 sessions that may be out-takes from Luncheonette. Opening song, "It's Uncanny" is superb.

I am not sure that the album title is meant to suggest a wry warning to the buyer or not. This isn't a Greatest Hits, but is a good retrospective of a team of writers—performers who continue to develop and polish their art. If you lack their earlier, pre- RCA albums, this will please you greatly.

We Stand Corrected

In a last minute slap-together of facts and hearsay concerning local cinemas for our last week's celluloid supplement, Below The Salt consulted printed matter from days gone by in summing up the Mountain Farms 4 Theatres. Humbly we stand corrected.

"Well, as a matter of fact," Manager Jim Merck tells us, "the marquise does light up. It's automatic and turns on at 5 and switches off at 11."

Merck went on to explain that many cinemas in the area no longer offer a dollar night while Mt. Farms 4 has a "twilight hour" every night for $1.25 (5 p.m. Fri.-Sat. and 6 p.m. Sun.-Thurs.). They also offer a 50 cent student discount card and the lowest priced concession stand in area theatres.

Emerson, Lake & Palmer

EMERSON, LAKE & PALMER
Works
(Atlantic)

With a prolonged timespan of nearly three and one-half years between this studio elpee and its predecessor, the necromantic Brain Salad Surgery (not counting 1974's live bonanza, Welcome Back My Friends To The Show That Never Ends), Emerson, Lake & Palmer have certainly got to be numbered among the rock world's most methodically meticulous practitioners. The wait for Works was indeed lengthy, but easily justifiable. The boys needed time out to establish some goals in regards to where they were musically headed, also to enable them to rest a bit and attempt to lead semi-normal lives.

A complex two-record set, Works takes considerable time to totally digest and comprehend. Each of the three band members takes an entire side for the exhibition of his individual talents, while the fourth side brings the three together as a unit once again. The most ironical aspect of it all is that even after the aforementioned hiatus, the boys could only see fit to include one group original on the fourth side. Why weren't there more? I wonder.

Keith Emerson In Concert

Side one belongs to keyboard whiz and master technician Keith Emerson. He presents his own composition, the classically-inspired "Piano Concerto No. 1," split into three separate movements. Emerson's piano proclivity is beyond question, but his ability to hold one's interest for an entire side is not. Ego-indulging pretentiousness (shades of Rick Wakeman!) plus an all too heavy reliance upon the strings and woodwinds of the London Philharmonic Orchestra results in a rather overblown and ineffective first movement which borders on the brink of total tedium. Fortunately, if one finds the intestinal fortitude to sit through it, movements two and three prove themselves to be more palatable. During these, the orchestra's highly concerted efforts remain secondary to Keith's pounding on the old eighty-eights, as they should be. This is not the case with the opening movement, though. In summation, Emerson should have been able to accomplish more on this side.

Side two is the domain of Greg Lake, the lone member of the trio who includes lyrics in his songs (written in collaboration with old King Crimson pal Pete Sinfield). Lake is definitely among the cream of rock's singing crop and his vocal renderings are ever so sharp and distinctive; there's no mistaking Greg's unique voice anywhere. Of this side's five original compositions, two stand out from among the rest. "Lend Your Love To Me Tonight" starts out simply with Lake singing and plucking away on acoustic guitar, then suddently trancends itself into a whirl of lushly orchestrated richness. It is the one tune from the album which I have heard being given consistent radio airplay and it deserves it. The other splendid selection here is the ecclesiastical "Hallowed Be Thy Name." Despite the sermonic title and lyrics, it turns out to be a finger-snapping, toe-tapping rhythmic ditty. The remaining three cuts are hardly earth-shattering, but Lake's dynamic vocalizations are enough to carry them through unobtrusively.

Side three brings percussionist Carl Palmer into the spotlight and he does surprisingly well. He is the most rock-oriented of the three musicians and his side bobs and weaves its way through six cuts. Joe Walsh employs his enviable guitar skills most adroitly on "L.A. Nights." Palmer himself is at his best on the jazzy "Food For Your Soul," the perfect track for showcasing his spectacular lightning-quick drumwork. Also included to round out this side is an updated version of "Tank." (Five bonus points to all those correctly identifying the ELP album it originally appeared on.)

The trundling triumvirate successfully unites as one on side four. Featuring two extended cuts, it opens with a nearly ten-minute instrumental, Aaron Copland's "Fanfare For The Common Man." From the resounding first notes heralded by majestic trumpetry to the final beat of Palmer's percussion, the track incorporates a great deal of finely-polished technical expertise from Emerson with the more subtle simplicity of both Lake and Palmer, not to mention the usual ELP trademark of heavy orchestration. The blend works amazingly well. Finally, we come to the lone new group composition (there really should have been more than just this one). It's a thirteen minute extravaganza chronicling the swashbuckling exploits of "Pirates," as they loot, pillage, and plunder for profit. Again, Lake's vocal work is superb and the group interplay is excellent. On past ELP albums, the penchant for over-orchestrating such a selection has often hindered rather than helped, but here it has been toned down to a more conservative, and thusly a wiser, degree. Mayhaps the boys have mellowed somewhat over the years. No longer do they feel the overriding necessity of throwing in everything but the kitchen sink.

All things considered, Works is a fine album. It's far from perfect, though. Emerson's side could have and should have been superior to what it actually is and there should definitely have been more of a combined group effort in presenting original material on side four. Sad to say, the rather exorbitant list price may be a trifle more than most rational human beings are willing to shell out; fortunately, there are lots of irrational folk running around today. (Sorry about that. I must stick to music.) Nevertheless, I find more rays of sunshine than clouds of darkness concerning Works. A summer tour should go a long way towards indicating just where the band's collective head is at. For the time being, this latest creation earns Emerson, Lake & Palmer a " 'elp is on the way" B+.

Gabriel Gives Up Genesis

PETER GABRIEL
(Atco)

Like many people, I feared the worst for Peter Gabriel. The fellow is prone to excesses and the mere fact of not having Genesis around to curb those tendencies is enough cause for concern. Then tack on the additional factor of bad boy producer Bob Ezrin.

Happily, this album is a success by virtue of Gabriel and Ezrin coming to terms with each other. Both have benefited. On Peter Gabriel, our Aerosol Kid shows a wide variety of styles. His compositions are brutal sorties of symphonic sound and diverging musical styles. "Modern Love" and "Slowburn" are crushing rock tunes, while "Humdrum," "Down The Dolce Vita" and "Here Comes The Flood" are Genesis-like, but something different. This is particularly true of "Slowburn" and "Flood"; Gabriel constructs brilliant shifts in tempo and mood, abated by Ezrin expert production. The juxtaposition of rock tempo and near-ballad piano in "Slowburn" is something that'll keep any listener off balance.

Finally, the band assembled for this disc delivers some awesome things; Robert Fripp, Larry "Synergy" Fast and the Ezrin Studio band (Hunter-Wagner-et. al.) are a combo that clicks. With only two throwaway tracks ("Excuse Me" and "Waiting For The Big One"), Gabriel's debut is more than we hope for. In leaving Genesis, Peter has become liberated to a certain extent. Obviously this is an artist who has a lot to offer and will do anything to achieve it, even if it means giving up something he must have loved tremendously.

FacSen to complain to Board of Trustees

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate yesterday voted to send its governance grievances to the Board of Trustees.

In supporting the motion, Faculty Senate Secretary Terence Burke told his colleagues, "In my opinion the current problems have been discussed in adequate length without avail." He said it is the "trustees themselves to whom the faculty should now appeal.

"No time should be lost," continued Burke, "in making a case to the trustees of this institution."

The senate also passed three other motions, all related to the current conflict between the senate and administration over different interpretations of governance documents.

The first motion was designed to draw the attention of University administrators to the Redbook and Morris Document which, according to the motion, prohibit application of personnel policies detrimental of faculty in cases initiated before the promulgation of such current regulations.

The senate then supported a motion refusing to accept "Provost's (Paul L. Puryear's) unwillingness to act in accordance with the letter and spirit of established governance procedures."

The fourth motion, approved just prior to adjournment, instructs the secretary to call a campus general faculty meeting for 3:30 Tuesday afternoon in Mahar Auditorium.

After Burke addressed the floor about approaching the trustees with grievances, Student Government Association co-president (SGA) Jon A. Hite told the senators if they are going to vote on a motion about University governance, then the motion should be "double starred," meaning other governance bodies on campus (SGA) could also determinte its fate.

"You talk about governance," Hite said to the senate. "We in SGA are very familiar with it. We've found it to be a single edged sword used against SGA and the senate (undergraduate student). Every time we bring a motion, it's challenged.

"This motion clearly asks the Board of Trustees to reaffirm governance, said Hite. "It is clearly a governance motion."

Hite said he was not trying to subvert the efforts of the Faculty Senate, but "you have urged the administration and students to accept governance and follow it; do it yourself."

Michael Federow, of the Graduate Student Senate (GSS), and Afro American Studies Associate Professor Michael M. Thelwell supported Hite.

Calling the Faculty Senate present relationship with the administration "ironic", Federow said the senate "may finally realize something, the governance document doesn't work. The senate holds an advisory role to the administration."

Thelwell said governance is not really the issue. Instead, he said the issue is "this dismal demonstration" of pompousness and selfishness." He said some of his colleagues in the senate and College of Arts and Sciences (CASIAC) have been "thinking of themselves."

At their annual meeting Tuesday night, the CASIAC faculty voted overwhelmingly to seek the resignations of Puryear and UMass President Robert C. Wood. Heated debates had characterized this three and one half hour meeting.

Thelwell said many faculty were not considering students' program demands, which have been mentioned by Puryear as one criteria for judging allocations.

Employees strike Amherst Record

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

About 15 employes of the Amherst Record went on strike yesterday to protest what they said was owner Michael DeSherbinin's refusal to recognize their union and to negotiate with them.

The employes set up a picket line outside the Record office at noon.

Andrew Marx, a reporter for the paper and a member of the union negotiating committee said, "We believe that he (DeSherbinin) hasn't negotiated in good faith with us. We feel, and the courts have ruled this, that simply sitting down at a table and dictating terms isn't negotiating."

DeSherbinin said he recognizes the union, but "the economic situation at the University has affected the retail businesses in the area and therefore has also affected the advertising in the paper."

He said the 10 cent an hour raise which he has offered the union is all the paper can afford.

DeSherbinin also said he was willing to "make an arrangement with the union as long as it didn't raise our costs."

The paper's employes voted to form a union and affiliate with District 65 of the Distributive Workers of America in April of last year. Since then they have filed three unfair labor practice charges with the National Labor Relations Board, all of which were decided in favor of the union.

Marx said the union is willing to compromise over the money issue and the main reason for the strike is DeSherbinin's refusal to negotiate.

Marx had no idea how long the strike might last and said he hoped no issues of the paper would come out until the strike is settled.

DeSherbinin said the next issue would come out as planned on Saturday. "We don't expect to be impeded by this. We expect to publish on a regular basis."

DeSherbinin denied rumors that he had plans to ask the Greenfield Recorder for help in putting out the paper. He also said it was too early to tell whether or not he would employ UMass students.

Journalistic Studies Dept. chairperson Prof. Lawrence Pinkham said he knew nothing about the strike and no one had talked to him.

Collegian editor-in-chief Ronald Arena said he didn't think "it would be in the best interests of the students or the strikers for students to cross the picket line."

The newspaper's editorial, production, and classified advertising departments are on strike. The display advertising and circulation departments, along with the bookkeeper, are still at work.

Cool, man, cool.

Damage extensive in Main St. blaze

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

A one-alarm fire of undetermined origin swept through one of Amherst's oldest buildings last night, causing damage termed "extensive" by firefighters.

Flames engulfed the white two-story wooden frame building at 6 Southeast St., corner of Main and Southeast Sts., built in 1770 and formerly known as Baggs Tavern. There were no injuries. The cause of the fire is under investigation.

The house was inhabited by David M. Edwards, a former UMass student who withdrew from the University; David J. Eulian, a UMass CASIAC major; class of 1978; Anthony L. Fiore, a Feb. 1976 UMass graduate; Lisa R. Gilman, a UMass Communications Studies major, class of 1977; Dennis P. O'Brien, a Sept. 1975 UMass graduate; Deborah A. Pierce, a UMass Physical Education major, class of 1978; Jon Prenson; and Tracy Steadman, who is due to enter the University June 20 as a special student.

The house is owned by Lt. Col. John C. Topping, who owns several other houses in the area. Topping was unavailable for comment last night.

The alarm, a normal box alarm, was sounded at 5:12 p.m. Amherst Fire Chief John Doherty reported the fire "under control" at 5:43 p.m., although firefighters continued to battle the blaze for another hour.

See photos on page 8

First reports from the scene by Doherty to the fire station reported the house "fully involved" and the fire concentrated in the front right side of the second floor.

Five engine ladder trucks and the chief officers responded to the alarm, a standard "all-units" call. Arriving on the scene were the two on-duty engine crews at the Amherst fire station in town, all of the off-duty permanent force, the auxiliary force, the volunteer student force at the north fire station and the call force.

Firefighters said last night the age of the building caused the rapid spread of the fire and contributed to the extent of the damage. The building is the original one contructed in 1770. The Town of Amherst was chartered in 1759.

Trail discusses resignation

By KEVIN TURCOTTE
Collegian Staff

"I wrote a one-line resignation because I don't want a lot of gossip and innuendo about the thing," said Ira D. Trail, the director of the UMass Division of Nursing.

While Trail said some of her reasons for leaving were personal, she also said she was dissatisfied with the administration's handling of the Blue Ribbon Committee report which agreed to long-range plans to help the Nursing Division.

"I have received not one word from President Wood," she said. "My ego is not going to allow me to be dangled on the end of a string waiting for an answer," she said.

The Blue Ribbon Committee visited UMass during intersession and reviewed the nursing program and its problems first hand. Sent to President Wood, one of the recommendations the report made was that the nursing program remain on the Amherst campus.

Concerning the recent Faculty Senate uproar over Provost Paul Puryear's long-range plan, Trail said, "This is the same symptom. People are beginning to feel like non-persons.

"I had no problems with Puryear's document. It was clear, we knew exactly what he was saying, and there was a chance for rebuttal. When it's fuzzy and hazy, I can't deal with that." said Trail.

Trail also said the problems arising in her department did not stop with her department.

"I was devastated when Dean Odiorne resigned," she said. George S. Odiorne is the dean of the School of Business Administration and internationally known for his "management by objectives."

"The people leaving are the strong people who can get jobs anywhere," Trail said.

"I have four or five job offers where people are waiting on a decision," Trail said.

"It's not going to be easy to replace this job.

"There are 17 other deanships across the country who are looking for someone," she said.

Many of the faculty in the Nursing Division are hired as instructors with a three-year contract, and because of financial conditions are not rehired or promoted.

"We're constantly losing the young and energetic," said Trail, "and we're left with a tenured group waiting to retire. You have to be very youth oriented in a college."

Concerning the relative condition of the Nursing Division, Jeff Marks, the junior representative of the Student Nursing Organization (SNO), said, "I don't think student nurses think the blame should be put on any one person. I personally feel the majority of the problems facing the Division of Nursing are directly related to financial conditions which are not controlled by anyone in the Division of Nursing."

When asked what he thought the future of the nursing program was, Marks said, "That will depend in part on who replaces Dr. Trail."

"I don't know what precipitated the resignation," said David C. Bischoff, associate provost for Professional Schools.

While not wishing to comment further until later, Bischoff did say, "Ira Trail is a person who cares deeply about Nursing education."

In the face of recent resignations from the nursing faculty, many of whose contracts were to be terminated next winter anyway, William A. Darity dean of the School of Public Health said, "We're in the process of recruiting new faculty."

"It's scary," said Sally Baldwin, a sophomore in the Nursing program, "As weak as the system is now, we're losing a leader. What does it mean when one-third of your department is out looking for better jobs?"

Recruitment protest set for today

By RICHARD E. BARRELL
Collegian Staff

Members of the Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa (CLSA) are planning a demonstration at Berkshire House at 11:30 a.m. to protest recruiting by Union Carbide Company a corporation heavily involved in South Africa.

"This is a slap in the face to students she said, it shows they have no intention of selling the stocks. I have heard they have even purchased more," she added.

Carabineris said students can play an important role in supporting the liberation struggle of the people of South Africa by barring this type of recruiting from the campus. She encouraged students to demand that the University not allow recruiting on campus by corporations invested in South Africa.

CLSA will be joined by other campus groups, such as the Veterans Coalition for Community Affairs (VCCA) and the Revolutionary Student Brigade.

Jerry Morton, coordinator of VCCA confirmed that members of VCCA plan to demonstrate.

"I support the demonstration 100 per cent Morton said. "I hope they continue in the future and become more militant."

Morton said he feels the University must sell its stock and divest itself of all holdings and interests which support the minority apartheid government of South Africa.

"Until this is done, I cannot support UMass as a viable educational institution," he said.

According to William F. Field, dean of students, the decision to allow Union Carbide recruiters on campus does not conflict with the decisions of the Board of Trustees regarding South Africa stocks.

The trustees have decided on an open campus policy for recruiting, Field said. The policy, according to Field, is "all or nothing". Either allow all recruiters or none at all.

Commenting on a statement in a demonstration leaflet circulated on campus which accuses the University of "breaking into the office of the SGA co-presidents and stealing their file on Southern Africa and University investments there," Field said the possibility was incredibly remote. "There are a flock of keys out to the office," he said.

According to Carabineris, the demonstration will be followed by further demonstrations on May 4 in which students will march from New Africa House to the Student Union Building and on to Whitmore to bring the concerns of the group to the attention of Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Rich Robertson, the student quoted in yesterday's Collegian article about the resignation of Ira Trail, director of the UMass Division of Nursing, is not involved in organizing student nurses, as was reported.

Rick Roberts, the sophomore representative from the Student Nursing Organization (SNO) said yesterday, "I hold Dr. Trail in the highest esteem."

Near-rape victim recalls experience

By KAREN LaBONTE
Collegian Staff

It's a warning women have heard time and time again — *don*t hitchhike alone — you never know what will happen. It's been a warning that has gone unheeded by many women. This article has been written to share an experience and some thoughts that come from it.

As far back as junior high, my mother had talked in oblique terms about what could happen when hitchhiking; later, I learned to call it Rape. Magazine accounts of assaults on women had left me with vague impressions of sensationalist-type horror — women just weren't tied to trees and beaten or raped in the real world. I pictured rapists to be drunken old men or greasers who leered at or slobbered over their victims. Even when female friends alluded to attempted assaults made on them by "normal" looking men, I continued to hitch, sometimes with a voice droning warnings in the back of my head, but usually with no fear.

Two weeks before Easter, I was hitching in the Courtesy Pick-up Zone in front of Amherst College. I wore a skirt and a V-necked T-shirt that day; as I walked by a man who had already established his hitching spot, he joked, "Oh, you'll probably get a ride before me."

He was right; moments after I'd stuck out my thumb, a voice behind me called "Hey, you still want a ride?" I turned to see a man leaning out of the window of a sleek silver car, pulled to the side of the road. I jogged to the passenger's front door.

Settling inside, I gave him standard directions to drop me at the Grist Mill at the bottom of the hill, and immediately commented on the car. "Yeah, it's new. A '77," he told me. The rest of our conversation was pleasant enough — we agreed we'd had enough of winter, but he didn't believe the spring weather would hold for long. Our weather topic exhausted, I was ready to be left off.

But the car didn't seem to be slowing. As we neared the Gristmill I repeated that he could drop me "Here, at the bridge," but he swung the car onto East Hadley Road and stopped in a driveway. Cooly, he leaned over (the way the boy does on his first high school date when he moves to kiss the girl goodnight), laying his hand confidently over my breast, and looked at me quizzically, as if to say, "Well, how about this?"

There was no lecherous gleam in his eye, he didn't slobber or drool in excitement. His gaze was quizzical, but overriding was the sense of proprietary confience in himself and his action that told me he was serious.

I moved back before he could lean any farther. I grabbed my pack, almost fell out of the door. He paused, and finally drove off, not in the direction of the main road, but towards a side street farther down.

I panicked. Within seconds, images of being followed to my empty apartment or run off the road flashed into my head. Even in the next seconds my thoughts seemed to switch to automatic control; crouching in the road, I grabbed a pen from my pack and copied down the license plate number. Then I began to walk towards home, seeing him at the corner of the side street where he'd turned around, knowing he'd pass me again.

He cruised by. Although I concentrated on looking straight ahead, I caught his stare out of the corner of my eye.

I couldn't believe what had just happened. Yes, my physical body had been abused. Having my breast grabbed by a total stranger was not a pleasant experience, but I suffered no physical pain. What was badly shaken was my sense of self: that man's actions, his attitudes, and the look on his face all told me he felt he could do whatever he pleased with my body — with me.

His action symbolized an extreme violation of personal space — with that assault on my physical body, he had discarded my essence — my values, beliefs, and self-esteem — as being worthless. My only value was as a prospective whore.

I knew my experience had not been all that serious, and that any formal charges I pressed would be difficult to prove in court, but I did want to give someone the license plate number and warn them the man was in the area. I called the Amherst police.

The officer who answered the phone said if I wanted them to arrest and formally charge the man,

Rape: Offender vs. victim

This is the second segment of a 3-part series.

By LAURY ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

"A lot of what is written about rape is about victims and offenders. Most of it is so negative that you assume you'll be a victim. We're trying to get away from that."

What Ruth Fessenden of the Rape Task Force says is true. The chances that you will be raped are probably minimal, particularly if you are aware of potential rape situations. But the ugliness of rape is inherently negative. This series of articles is attempting to approach a negative topic in a positive manner — that of providing knowledge.

Who are the victims and offenders? The victim is your mother, your lover, you or your child. She is not the beautiful victim of Medialand. She is of every age, social background and color. The victim can even be a man.

The offender is your father, your husband, that neat guy who offers you a ride home from the singles club or asks you for a light on the sidewalk.

A majority of rapes are committed once the offender has gained the confidence and attention of the victim. The offender may come to a woman's home on false pretenses, such as acting as though he were a salesman; or he may create his advantage by asking a passing woman the time.

Often, the victim and rapist will already have a casual relationship. They may have a class together, be co-workers, or live in the same building.

Sometimes the victim is raped by her husband or father. Age is no deterrent. A "cartoon" in a recent issue of the "Village Voice" shows one man saying to another, the night before he had sex with a 12-year-old, but she looked younger. This is not only a prime example of rape culture, but that children are often victims.

According to Dr. Nicholos Groth of the Division of Legal Medicine of the State Department of Mental Health, there is a high incidence of incest committed by convicted rapists.

"Many rapes are not reported because there's some kind of relationship between victim and offender," said Sgt. Mary Dumas of the UMass Department of Public Safety. "They don't realize they can anonymously report the crime or seek assistance."

Persons related to the victim may also desire support services. "It goes beyond the individual rape victim," said Dumas. "Everyone who interacts with the victim is affected. It's like a death in the family."

Victims are also raped in "blitz" attacks, when they may be grabbed off the street. Rapists do not always operate alone. According to Groth, close to 20 per cent of the convicted rapists with whom he has dealt were part of a gang rape.

The rapist generally perceives others in specific categories: virgins or whores, studs or queers, strong or weak. A prostitute may be brutalized and raped because she represents everything the rapist hates.

Most apprehended offenders are of a lower socio-economic status with no financial or community resources, and see themselves as "victims of the world". Half of the convicted rapists Groth worked with were married.

"Due to our criminal justice system we know very little about the white upper-middle-class rapist," said Fessenden.

The patterns of rape include that of displaced aggression. The of-

Free beer May 20— for seniors

By THOMAS CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

Beers, bands and burgers are some of the planned components for Senior Day 1977, to be held May 20 from noon to 6 p.m. in the Northeast Quad area.

"Just the particulars have to be worked out yet," Mike Lorrigan, treasurer of the Senior Day committee said.

"It's going really good; it's pretty much all planned," Chairperson Charlene Galarneau said.

Galarneau said the traditional senior mug will cost $2 for seniors and $3 for all others. Also figured in the price of the mug is the cost of the bands and the beer, both of which are free. Not included in the mug cost is the price of hot dogs and hamburgers sold during the day.

Other money for the Chancellor's Reception for Graduating Seniors, the official name of Senior Day, comes from a trust fund which has funded the event for several years.

"Tickets will go on sale for the mugs at least by May 6, but probably by Monday, May 9," Galarneau said last night. Tickets will be distributed through TIX and can be exchanged on Senior Day for the mug.

The mugs have been ordered and the logo for the mug was decided on during a meeting Wednesday afternoon. The design was selected after a competition in a design class in the Art Department between 15 or 18 juniors and seniors.

Final details haven't been completed yet, but plans should be finalized soon, according to Lorrigan.

The treasurer said $2200 has been budgeted for three bands, though Bruce Wingate, in charge of entertainment, has no definite results.

Lorrigan estimated that 2500 people are expected to attend.

According to Lorrigan, some volunteers have been gathered to help distribute the beer, which will probably be Miller.

In case of rain, the reception will be held in Worcester Dining Commons, at the same day and time.

Soon Tony Ogden will be joined by hundreds of other students as finals once again approach. (Staff photo by Chris Bourne)

Puryear won't talk to grads

By M.A. LEWITT
Collegian Staff

Standing in Provost Paul Puryear's threshold yesterday, Teaching Assistants (TA) claim they heard him repeatedly say he couldn't discuss graduate student employe budget allocations with them, according to Graduate Student Employes Union (GSEU) Chairperson Sherry Flashman.

The group of five who came from GSEU's 25 person picket outside Whitmore were at the provost's office less than 10 minutes when, reported Flashman, "Vere Chappell, acting associate provost of the Graduate School, rushed in saying something to the effect that there was an immediate crisis that an electrician had to bring a ladder in and would we all please leave."

The graduate students went back outside to petition and talk with graduates, undergraduates, and faculty, who, Flashman said, were generally supportive. One administration member signed their petition.

Last Friday GSEU requested Puryear, in a letter, to negotiate with them now and not wait until the group was granted legal bargaining status from the state.

Puryear replied on Monday that he could not recognize the union until the State Labor Commission recognized it. Since unions can't hold their own elections, Puryear was effectively telling GSEU to wait, probably until next winter, when the Labor Commission makes its decision on the case, she said.

GSEU is asking the administration not to make them wait for the state's ruling so they can negotiate on this year's scheduled TA cuts. They originally asked the administration to recognize them last spring.

In hearings before the Labor Commission a few weeks ago, lawyers for the administration testified that graduate students are not real employes, and therefore are not eligible for legal bargaining status.

When Puryear told the group in his doorway he couldn't legally negotiate with them, Flashman said, "We responded by telling him that on the advice of our lawyers, we know there's nothing legally restraining him from talking to us. He wouldn't clarify what this restraint was."

She claimed, "It's the University's choice, not a legal issue. They're not restricted by law from sitting down with us."

Belchertown bus route may be derailed

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

UMass bus service to Belchertown could end next year unless the town joins the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA), a University transit service official said last night.

Steve Murphy, operations manager for the Student Senate Transit Service (SSTS) said the bus system would be reimbursed by the state and federal government for 65 per cent of its costs to operate in Belchertown were the town to join the authority. Currently, the University absorbs the full cost.

"It's not going to cost them (Belchertown) a penny," Murphy said. "All they have to do is sponsor it."

"There'd be a couple of hundred bucks administrative cost," said Terence Tornek, PVTA administrator, but not to the town. The University has said it would pick up any costs involved in PVTA membership.

"For the town it seems they have everything to gain and little to lose," he said.

Murphy said rising fuel costs and insurance rates which increaed $60,000 this year, are increasing the expense to the University to run buses to non-PVTA-member towns like Belchertown.

The transit service's budget for next year is $454,000. The SSTS is funded through student fees.

The transit service which is free of charge, makes six in-bound and five out-bound runs to Belchertown a day, a total of 250 passenger trips.

William G. Whitlock, chairperson of the Belchertown selectmen, said SSTA is "a tremendous system" and, "I don't think any of us object to paying for the University system."

But Whitlock is wary of getting involved with the Springfield-based PVTA.

The town will first have to meet with representatives from PVTA to discuss any costs involved, he said, before it makes an decision.

"I can appreciate their concern," Tornek said, although he insisted, "They're not running any risk at all."

The University bus system provides service to Amherst, South Deerfield, Sunderland and Belchertown.

Amherst, the only PVTA member of the four, is now in the process of renewing its first-year contract, which expires in June.

"It's worked out extremely well for us," said Diana Romer, chairperson of the Amherst selectmen.

Murphy and Robert J. Godding, University head of transit and transportation, have contacted Sunderland officials about the PVTA, Murphy said. South Deerfield served least of the four towns, has not yet been approached.

Instituting fares to help fund the University bus system is not out of the question, according to Murphy. "The possibility for collecting fares always has existed and always will exist," he said.

Murphy admitted however this would be contrary to the bus system's goals to reduce traffic problems and offer cost-free service to people otherwise unable to ride the buses.

"Everyone liked the no fare," he added.

Global Survival cut favored

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

The Global Survival Freshman Year Program, an alternative curricula for incoming freshman, was recommended for a one-year suspension by the Academic Matters Council of the Faculty Senate last night.

The recommendation is scheduled to go before the Faculty Senate for a vote next Thursday.

A major reason cited for suspension was the steady decline in student enrollment in the program, said Richard Baga, student member of the council.

The program comprised 69 students when it began in the fall of 1973, but enrollment has since dropped. Only 36 students entered it last fall.

Baga, who is also chairperson of the Academic Affairs Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate, voted against the motion to suspend the program as did the council's two other student members, Paul M. Cronin and Jack M. Leader.

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted unanimously to support the Global Survival program at its meeting Wednesday night.

"It seems to me this is tantamount to elimination of the program," said Cronin, former Student Government Association co-president.

The nine council faculty members present voted for suspension. John A. Hunt, associate provost for special programs, abstained.

Another reason cited for suspending the program was "staff and recruiting difficulties" according to the council's motion. Baga said departments have been hesitant to commit faculty to the program for a variety of reasons, among them being work in the program is not considered when a member of the faculty is up for tenure.

The council unanimously passed a motion earlier in the night to evaluate all freshman year programs including the Project 10 and the Inquiry Program, which will be reviewed by the council next Wednesday.

A 13-member evaluation committee was formulated, which if the Faculty Senate approves, will report its recommendations by next February.

Cost-of-living raises due for Univ. workers

By RICHARD E. BARRELL
Collegian Staff

Approximately 3.1 million dollars in long promised cost-of-living pay raises will soon reach University faculty and employes, according to State Representative James G. Collins.

Raises, due since July 1, 1976 have been hung up in the state bureaucracy said Collins.

Money for the raises came from a special reserve account created last August to provide funds for cost-of-living raises. Following a meeting between Collins, State Senator John W. Oliver, and Secretary of Administration and Finance John R. Buckley, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis signed an authorization for a transfer of the necessary funds to the University accounts.

Collins credited efforts by union local 1776 of American Federation State, County, and Municipal Employes (AFSCME), Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) and other campus groups with helping to provide the necessary pressure to move the state bureaucracy. Only details and technical problems within the University structure remain to be overcome.

According to Collins, UMass President Robert C. Wood is anxious to get the money to University employes and assured Collins he would work to expedite the matters within the University.

Retroactive to July 1976, cost-of-living raises amount to approximately $850 and Christmas bonuses of $300, which hopefully will reach employes in their next check or the check after, according to Collins. "But I want to be careful not to raise false hopes," he added.

One problem delaying raises has been the threat of level funding. If the University paid the cost-of-living raises from its operating budget, it could be vulnerable to critics, such as the governor, who wish to cut the University budget.

"They could use the rationale that if you have the funds in your operating budget for cost-of-living raises level funding will not be a problem, he said.

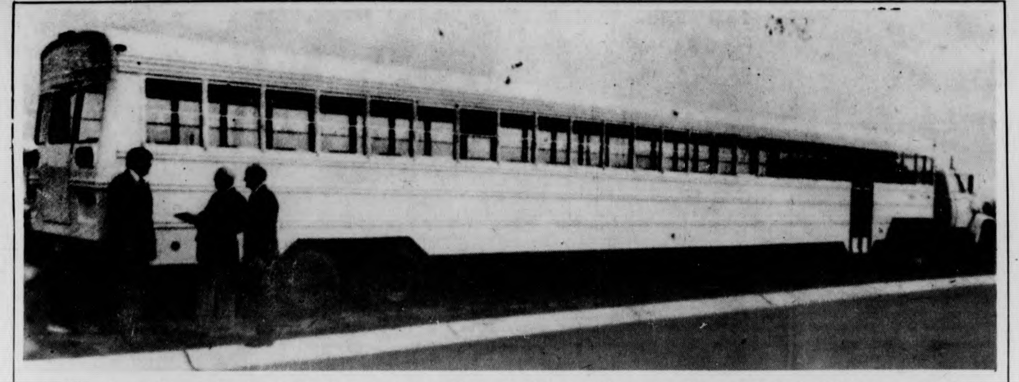
It is imperative to get this money to employes as soon as possible, Collins said. Morale is down, since people have been waiting for four years for their raises, he added.

Cost-of-living raises for 1977 due as of July 1 still remain to be worked out, Collins said. New legal problems raised by statewide collective bargaining must be solved.

"Hopefully, people will get their Christmas bonuses at Christmas this year," he said. Legislation for these funds is now in the senate, he said.

John L. Denyse from the Personnel Office in Whitmore, said he had no definite information on pay raises.

"I am very concerned about pay raises but there is nothing definite I can comment on at present," he said.



Here's another entry for the Guinness Book of Records: the world's longest bus at 62 feet. It'll transport 185 workers to Egyptian oil fields. (UPI)

'Disaster Survival Test' to quiz nation

By ALAN SHEPARD
Collegian Staff

Would you know what to do if you were alone with someone suffering a heart attack during an earthquake, the lone survivor of a plane crash in the mountains during a snow storm, or if you were stranded on a country road during a hurricane with a person struck by lightning at your side?

If not it may be to your advantage to tune into the "Big Event" on NBC this Sunday night as the program called "The National Disaster Survival Test" will be aired at 8:00 p.m.

According to Charles F. Richter, formulator of the Richter Scale which measures earthquake intensity, "Over 90 per cent of the loss of life and more than half of the property loss in national disasters is unnecessary and preventable."

The topics covered in the program will include water survival (floods, boating calamities), wind survival (hurricanes, tornadoes), survival of temperature extremes (blizzards, heat waves, fire survival (home, highrise, and forest fires), and earthquake survival.

The test itself will relate to questions dealing with those disaster situations and first aid. The questions in each section will be formulated around a special theme, testing judgment, knowledge, alertness, stress and leadership.

Along with people taking the test at home for self-evaluation, there will be a cross section of Americans in studio audiences in five major cities taking the test. Their results will be transmitted to a central anchor booth. Electronic boards will break down the answers into the categories of city-by-city, age, sex, and profession for comparisons.

The program will incorporate into its format dramatic reenactments, actual film footage of diasasters, interviews with survivors, animation, film of Hollywood-conceived disasters, documentary

'Sherlock Holmes' witty, entertaining

THEATRE REVIEW

By E. PATRICK McQUAID
Below the Salt staff

Not too long ago, 28-year-old John Michalski read for the part of Sherlock Holmes for the Paul Elliot—Bernard Jay production by the same name. "I gave them what they were looking for," he said following last night's performance at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Major criticism about his performance rests on the fact that he plays the neurotic role of Sherlock Holmes all too well. The fast talking, electric nerved character was extremely difficult for those sitting at the back of the hall to hear; however anyone familiar with the great sleuth, whether by reading the collected detective stories or viewing the many Basil Rathbone or Peter Cushing renditions, can appreciate what they saw regardless of what they may have missed.

Arch enemy, Professor Moriarty was played by stage, film, and television veteran Kurt Kasznar. He treated the character as though he were an Austrian Sydney Greenstreet and was most effective in his portrayal of the "Napoleon of crime."

Well it was here and now it's gone on its way to Newbury, New York and then to West Point and will wrap up on May 3. If you missed it, you missed out on an extremely enjoyable and entertaining evening of light humor.

Of special note were the props and scenery. Five stage sets converted the concert hall into a turn of the century London setting, complete with thick, velvety fog.

Watson, played by Richard Lupino wasn't the bumbling side kick that we've been used to. He was cast as a clear headed companion to Holmes, but retained his baffled, awe-struck character and was the center of several laughs.

All in all the play was very professional and very Broadway, an example of the fine productions making the UMass circuit since the opening of the Fine Arts Center.

Working in a class place

By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

This is the last in a series of interviews with students working their way through college in one way, shape, or form.

Some student jobs, Research Assistants for example, have class. Others, like bartenders and waitresses, are classic working-through-college positions. Steve Brander's job is in a class location.

Steve, a sophomore Business Administration major, is a guard in the Fine Arts Center Gallery. He spends an average 10 hours a week checking that no one steals or molests the displays, serving as a host of openings, and helping set-up chief Peter Bena arrange the artworks to the best advantage.

"It's not a bad job," said Brander. I picked it off the work-study board down at Whitmore because it didn't sound difficult and it fit my hours. I didn't have to know anything about art.

Are there any advantages to bring an art gallery guard as opposed to other on-campus jobs?

"There are a few," smiles Brander. "When I help Peter set up, I get to talk with the different artists, which is interestin'. I also get free tickets to the shows in the Fine Arts Auditorium.

Since the Gallery is open during intermissions, we have to be here to keep an eye on things. Because we're here, they let us into the performances."

Occasionally, Brander or one of the other guards will escort a collection to New York or Boston with Bena in a University van.

"That's great," said Steve. "I get paid for takin' a ride and helpin' Peter load and unload the van."

While sitting inconspicuously in the gallery, Brander has become a habitual people-watcher.

"We have lots of people from outside the university come through, especially on weekends. Some people come quite a distance to see the shows, a lot come from around Amherst. Especially the older people who tend to drop by during the week. They look at some of the more modern stuff and say 'This is ART???' I tend to like most of what they show here, especially the sculpture."

Some of the sculptures and paintings on display are done by UMass Art Department faculty, some by outside artists.

"We've had virtually no problem with thefts," glowed Gallery Registrar Elizabeth Youdin. "We interview our guards intensively. It's probably one of the most rigorous interviewing processes in the University. To get the eight guards we have (four male, four female), we interviewed 50 people. We need people we can count on to be here and to be attentive while they're here."

"They're really flexible around here," said Brander. "They give you a chance to use up your work-study allowance. The best part has to be the openings. I get dressed up and work as a host. They have wine, beer, cheese and crackers.

"That's one advantage to working in a class place."

he would go after the guy. When I asked if filing a formal complaint led to court, he told me he couldn't haul the guy in for no reason. I told him I'd call back.

Fifteen minutes after an indecent assault occurred in his district, this Amherst office didn't even ask for my name, phone number, nor did he want the license plate number of the car. His tone was matter-of-fact and he was very polite; but when an official's attitude seems to be a Don't - bother - me - I - can't - cope response of "Well, these things happen," how can you react?

A day and a half later, I made contact with Ruth Fessenden of the Everywomen's Center. Ruth was the first person who wasn't just shocked by my story; she was the first supportive person who outlined alternatives which would inform authorities of my experience without making court my only channel of action.

Ruth's call notifying Sgt. Mary Dumas of the UMass Rape Task Force about my experience made establishing contact with the UMass Police less threatening. When I called Sgt. Dumas myself, she asked for details of the assault, and whether I wanted to press charges (meaning formal court action) or put the information on file. In either case, she requested I come to the University Detectives' Division with the information, prepared, if possible, to help a UMass detective put together a composite picture of the offender.

I was nervous when I went in, by then wondering whether my brief experience wasn't being blown out of proportion. Mike Grabiec of the Detective Division immediately dispelled my feelings that the assault didn't warrant the serious treatment it was getting. If the man had placed his hands on any private part of my body without my permission. It was a case of indence assault, considered a serious offense and punishable by a court of law. Although I could have chosen to speak with a woman on the staff, I felt comfortable with Mike's openness; we talked for almost an hour.

I learned my information would remain on file with the detectives, and my name would be included only if I chose to give it. If I wanted to take further action, my complaint would be used as grounds to bring the man to court. In my case, since there had been no witnesses to the assault, both parties would present their story to the judge, who would decide on a suitable course of action.

A law recently passed to restrict the admissibility of a woman's sexual history to the case directly at hand, made the prospect of court less fearful, but I decided not to pursue court action unless other complaints were filed against the same man.

Not until Mike asked me for a complete description of the offender did I feel any strong emotion. But when my description seemed to tally with that of other descriptions of a known offender in the area, I felt nausea and fear. Mike talked on about what had been known to happen with sexual offenders around Amherst and all the sensationalist horror stories, I'd ever heard became real. We closed the conversation soon after; Mike promised to call with information, and asked me to call if I had any questions.

I'd entered the police station nervous; I left numb. Although I felt I'd done the right thing, that knowlege was my only consolation then, for in the last minutes of conversation with Mike, I had finally allowed myself to feel the horror of the potential danger I'd been in, as well as the full force of the personal degradation even my minor assault had caused. Despite the concern of friends and authorities, I was alone with the fear and the memory of the experience. For the rest of the day and into the next week, it was hard to convince myself the same man wasn't hiding in my closet.

I don't hitchhike much lately; when I absolutely have to, I hug the door. I check to see that window and door handles work, that there are no remote control locks on the doors. I stare straight ahead and avoid starting conversations. I've stopped saying hello to strangers. I don't like mistrusting people — by nature I'm friendly even with strangers — but my roommate tells me friendly women are raped more often than women with cool, distant personalities.

For a while, I felt conscious of and uncomfortable with my body. Even now I'm aware of my physical appearance in a way I never was before. I still feel helpless anger that within a society, women can be so physically abused and so psychically degraded. I'm upset that women who have experienced worse have a harder time finding help.

fender's intent is to injure a woman; the breast and vagina are the focus of assault. His penis is used as a weapon; erotic feelings are absent. Sex has been "dirty" in the upbringing of the anger-motivated rapist and he may be a wife beater.

The compensatory rapist is into a power trip. He must gain control of his victim. Sex serves as a form of mastery for him. Rape may be a way for him to deny homosexual feelings on the premise that it is more manly to rape than to think about being homosexual.

The rapist may be acting out a pre-meditated fantasy in which the woman is gratified once she realizes what a wonderful lover her attacker is. The compulsive rapist needs to feel adequate by rendering his victim helpless, although he does not necessarily wish to brutalize her. Sometimes, he may even make a date with his victim and can't understand why the police show up when he meets her at the arranged time and place.

The sadistic rapist equates eroticism with aggression. He sees his victim's struggle as a display of her sexual excitement. He receives pleasure by harming his victims and is often impotent until he commits a violent, lustful incident. He may force his victims to commit various acts and his sexual frenzy can lead to murder.

According to Groth, most rapists deny personal responsibility for the crime, or try to minimize the offense by saying he thought his victim was older or that the woman had deserved to be raped. Only half of those offenders arrested are convicted.

Often rapists will talk to their victims during the rape. Many times the type of offender can be identified by trained police when a victim relates the conversation of her assailant.

The woman may be the victim of two crimes: rape and robbery, but may only report the robbery.

"We can confidentially answer health and legal questions related to rape without forcing prosecution," said Dumas. "Our first obligation is to fulfill the right to be informed."

Fire

Shortly after 5 p.m. yesterday, fire broke out at 6 South East Street in Amherst. The house, one of the oldest in the town, was once used as the city tavern.

The single alarm blaze left eight persons homeless, including UMass student Lisa Gilman (far left), shown leaving the scene of the fire. The UMass student volunteer fire department aided the Amherst firefighters in battling the blaze.

STAVANGER, Norway: Robert Archimbeault, engineering manager for Phillips Petroleum, displays and explains a blowout preventer valve — similar to the one mounted up-side-down in the tower of oil rig "Bravo" — during press conference here. (UPI)

Norwegian oil field closed; 'Bravo' remains uncapped

STAVANGER, Norway [AP] — Fearing a chain-reaction fire that could set the heart of the North Sea ablaze, the Norwegian government yesterday ordered its Ekofisk offshore oil field closed after a "well killer" team failed three times to cap a six-day-old blowout.

Phillips Petroleum Co., operator of the runaway well, was reported to be flying in new equipment for another attempt Friday at stopping the gushing oil and further massive pollution of the sea.

Norwegian officials estimated that the well, 170 miles west of this Norwegian oil center, had sprayed 6½ millions gallons of crude oil into the surrounding waters by noon Thursday.

Phillips officials told reporters that a "blowout preventer," or valve, at the top of the well had been mistakenly bolted on upside down last Friday, only hours before the blowout occurred.

But the officials insisted that the error did not cause the blowout. They acknowledged, however, that it severely impeded the Texan-led troubleshooting team's attempts to seal the well.'

Government reports indicated, meanwhile, that the pollution problem created by the spillage was less than originally feared.

They said that by yesterday morning the size of the slick being fed by the Bravo well dwindled through evaporation and the action of the waves to about 270 square miles, half of what it was Wednesday.

The slick, less than an inch thick, was said to be moving east at about one mile an hour. It posed no immediate threat to shorelines.

The government's decision to close the well came after pressure from left-wing members of parliament in Oslo. The order temporarily shut down 30 wells in the Ekofisk Alpha and Bravo zones. The wells produced 9.8 million barrels — 69 million gallons — of oil in March.

Though it made no mention of Thursday's failure to shut off the well, the order clearly was related to it. The capping procedure is risky because of the possibility that sparks from the equipment could ignite clouds of gas and oil at the platform, setting of a fire that could spread through linked pipelines to the entire Ekofisk field.

A Phillips officials, who asked not to be identified, called the closure order "a political maneuver so the government looks like it's doing something. The risks ... are just the same as they were on Monday when we closed down briefly and then reopened."

New equipment reportedly being flown in by Phillips from Aberdeen, Scotland, included steel discs called two-inch pipe rams which, when closed over the four-inch-diameter well-head, reduce by half the diameter of the gushing stream of oil.

This would make it easier for the specialists to put in place a four-ton, three-part assembly that would effectively stop the flow. This assembly would be maneuvered over the inverted blowout preventer.

The "well killer" team, headed by Texans Boots Hansen and Richard Hatteberg, managed to cut off the powerful fountain of oil for only a few seconds on each attempt Thursday.

Cuba, US okay fishing pact

WASHINGTON [AP] — The United States and Cuba announced agreement on fishing rights yesterday, prompting the State Department to predict that chances are good for improving relations in other areas.

Asst. Secretary of State Terence Todman negotiated the fishing agreements during a three-day visit to Havana, the first such trip by an American diplomat in more than 16 years. The face-to-face diplomacy was widely viewed as a symbol of an improved climate between Washington and Havana.

Todman also conferred with Cuba's foreign minister on a broad range of other issues and said he sees a possibility for "gradual and constant improvement in relations."

He declined to give details of his discussions with the foreign minister, but indicated the two sides will meet again shortly.

The stage for the maritime negotiations was set eight weeks ago when both countries extended their jurisdiction over fishing rights 200 miles out to sea. Because Cuba is only 90 miles from the U.S. coast, the boundaries overlapped, creating possible jurisdictional conflicts.

However, the two countries agreed on a new boundary midway between their respective coasts.

Agreement also was reached permitting Cuban fishermen to catch a limited amount of fish in the American fishing zone outside the common boundary area. No figures were given on the amount of species of fish Cubans would be allowed to take from U.S. waters.

Todman said the fishing agreements are similar to those already in effect with 10 other countries.

President Carter said two weeks ago that the United States is attempting to determine whether improved relations with Cuba are possible on a "measured and reciprocal" basis.

Todman said the Cubans "seem to understand" that any move toward reconciliation cannot be made on the basis of unilateral concessions by the United States.

"The Cubans know they could take measures which would be well received here," Todman said.

If the Cubans interfere in the internal affairs of foreign countries, he said, "this obviously will affect the possibility of normalization."

Lawyers negotiate over Russian trawler

BOSTON [AP] — Federal lawyers argued yesterday that a Russian fishing trawler should be confiscated because its captain understated his catch by about 100 tons.

The ship, the 275-foot Taras Shevchenko, was the first foreign ship seized by the United States as it enforced the new 200-mile fishing limit.

American lawyers for the Soviet government have asked that the ship be allowed to go back to the fishing grounds while its fate is determined in the courts.

Judge Rank Murray held a secret hearing on the request yesterday in U.S. District Court but issued no ruling.

The session was held behind closed doors at the request of the Russians' lawyer, Richard Dahlan.

"Portions of my argument may deal with matters not appropriately made public at this moment," Dahlan said.

The ship was seized April 10 after the Coast Guard discovered that it had more than its quota of river herring. The vessel has been tied up in Boston Harbor since then.

In its written argument, the U.S. attorney's office said the ship's captain had stated in his log that the vessel carried 317 tons of fish, including four tons of herring. But when the cargo was weighed, officials found more than 400 tons of fish, including more than 10 tons of river herring, they said.

"The master of the vessel was no neophyte," the government argued. "He had been fishing in the North Atlantic for 10 years. Disregard of accurate recording procedures must be treated with severe sanctions."

Nuke plant site

Demonstrators warned; injunction challenged

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — A spokesman for the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, prime builder of the $2 billion Seabrook nuclear power plant, said his firm won't allow anyone on the site this weekend during the occupation proposed by the Clamshell Alliance. Norman Cullerot said reporters following protestors would be "taking their own chances" of being arrested.

The firm has an injunction prohibiting anyone from entering the site, but the injunction will be challenged today in Superior Court.

Two members of the group spearheading a mass occupation of the Seabrook nuclear power plant site told Gov. Meldrim Thomson yesterday the demonstration was not a front for terrorism and would be nonviolent.

Cathy Wolff and Robin Read of the Clamshell Alliance met for about 30 minutes with Thomson, Deputy Attorney General Thomas Rath and three gubernatorial aides.

The meeting was requested by the alliance after Thomson said the planned occupation slated for April 30 was a coverup for terrorist activity and demonstrators planned to stay on the site until they were killed.

"We wanted to clear up some misunderstandings and explain our strong stance of nonviolence," Miss Wolff said. "We plan to demonstrate against nuclear power in a totally nonviolent manner."

Read said Thomson would not divulge the source of his reports the occupation was a terrorist coverup. Aide Jay McDuffee said Thomson's reports were legitimate, but when challenged to verify them, couldn't.

Rath said the meeting informed both sides of the state's responsibilities. He refused to specify what the state planned for the demonstration.

"Predictions have a way of falling flat on their faces. We would respond to the situation as it presented itself. The state has a responsibility to see that the law is upheld. We will do that with firmness and fairness," Rath said.

Thomson's remarks drew criticism on the Senate floor from Sen. C.R. Trowbridge, R-Dublin. He said the governor's intelligence sources which identified the alliance as a terrorist group "are probably the same sources which told the world there was a missile in the pond in Wakefield.

Terrorists found guilty, sentenced for life

STUTTGART, West Germany [AP] — Urban guerrilla Andreas Baader and two companions were sentenced to life imprisonment yesterday for the terror-bomb murders of four U.S. soldiers during the Vietnam war.

Baader, 33, his girl friend Gudrun Ensslin, 36 and Jan-Carl Raspe, 32, were found guilty of bombing Army posts in Frankfurt and Heidelberg in 1972 and NIR OTHER German cities.

"Not everyone can declare himself a subject of international law and declare war on his own," chief Judge Eberhard Foth declared in rejecting defense claims that the bombings were legitimate protests against U.S. military actions in Vietnam.

The three terrorists were also convicted by the five-judge-tribunal of 34 counts of attempted murder and of forming a criminal conspiracy. They are on a hunger strike in their jail cells and refused to come to court to hear the verdict.

The 23-month trial in a special security courthouse built for the case at Stuttgart's Stammheim Prison was punctuated by the same outbreaks of antistate violence that made the Baader-Meinhof gang West Germany's "Public Enemy No. 1" from 1970 to 1972.

The three other American soldiers were killed May 24, 1972, when the gang set off three bombs hidden in civilian cars at the Army's European headquarters in Heidelberg, wrecking a computer center.

Watergate attorneys seek reversal

WASHINGTON [AP] — Attorneys for the convicted Watergate cover-up defendants hope to receive permission today to tell the Supreme Court why a news report about the court requires the justices to reverse the convictions.

The lawyers for former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell and ex-White House aides H.R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman stand ready to tell the justices that the new report, if accurate, is an unprecedented leak from the court's closed deliberations and has made it impossible for them to get fair treatment of the appeals.

Ultimately, the unusual circumstances of the case could determine whether Mitchell and Haldeman ever go to prison for crimes a jury in 1975 determined they had committed.

The news reports that surfaced last week said the court had voted to deny the appeals of all three officials of former President Richard M. Nixon's administration. Chief Justice Warren E. Burger has declined to comment on the reports.

Oil co's accused of consumer rip-off

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Federal Energy Administration yesterday accused 20 multinational oil companies of trying to overcharge consumers more than $336 million by improperly raising the price of oil sold by foreign subsidiaries to parent firms in the United States.

FEA officials said they intend to roll back the price hikes and order consumer refunds. They said some companies may have to reduce gasoline pump prices by a penny or two a gallon for several months to provide the refund.

Alleged overcharges ranged from a high of $79.62 million for Gulf to a low of $117,949 for Cities Service.

An FEA spokesman said the companies were notified of the planned action and given 10 days to reply. Final orders will be issued after the replies are in, the spokesman said, and companies wanting to challenge those orders can do so either before an FEA appeals board or in court.

"We feel like our case is pretty strong," the spokesman said.

FEA regulations allow U.S. oil companies to raise consumer prices to cover legitimate crude oil cost increases.

The FEA accused the 20 companies of violating those regulations by artifically inflating prices listed for crude oil sales between foreign subsidiaries and U.S. parent firms. It said the transactions took place from October 1973, through May, 1975.

A spokesman said the violations were discovered by comparing sales between foreign subsidiaries and their U.S. affiliates with "arms-length" sales between non-affiliated firms.

"The notices we have sent to the 20 oil companies are the result of a lengthy examination of the very complex transactions of the international oil market," said FEA chief John O'Leary.

"They fulfill a commitment the agency has made that the prices consumers pay for their oil products be based on fair market values for crude oil rather than artificially high prices paid by U.S. companies to their own foreign subsidiaries."

The new FEA accusations replace overcharge notices issued during 1975 which totaled $275 million. The oil industry questioned the validity of data used in the 1975 calculations.

New calculations were used for the latest notices, the spokesman said, and the total overcharges were boosted $61 million because oil swaps as well as cash sales were included.

Ban to be revised on Tris sleepwear

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A federal judge yesterday ordered the Consumer Product Safety Commission to revise its ban on children's sleepwear treated with the fire retardant Tris so manufacturers of nightgowns will not have to bear the estimated $200 million loss alone.

U.S. District Court Judge George Hart said the commission acted "arbitrarily and capriciously" when it banned Tris, a cancer-causing agent, but left the apparel manufacturers responsible for refunds to consumers and stores that sold the Tris-treated garments.

The American Apparal Manufacturers Association argued that perhaps 10,000 jobs might be lost in towns across the country if small manufacturers had to buy back the garments without compensation from the companies that made the material or the chemical.

In testimony earlier before the House Small Business Committee, the children's sleepwear makers said they are threatened with "chaos and ruin" because of the commission's original order.

Attorney Louis Nizer, arguing the case for the apparel manufacturers in court, said, "The destruction of dozens of firms is to exaggeration." He said one company in Pennsylvania has already closed its doors throwing 120 persons out of work.

Hart suggested that the commission put the blame on the manufacturers of nighgowns because they were "little people" who wouldn't fight in court whereas the big companies would have.

There was a rumble of approval from the courtroom audience, mixed with muffled cries of "here, here" at Hart's comment. The room was crowded with apparel manufacturers, many of whom had come to Washington to testify

Town lumbers toward energy independence

SPRINGFIELD, Vt. [UPI] — The scenic Black River rises in the heart of the rugged Green Mountains near Shrewsbury, then winds its way some miles through southeastern Vermont before emptying into the Connecticut River.

If local officials have their way, it will soon do more than just keep rolling along; it will produce electricity for this town's 10,000 residents.

Springfield's road to energy independence has been long and tough and littered with obstacles, but officials say they are right on schedule with their plans to harness the river and have it churning out power by the end of 1980.

Town Manager Paul McCarthy is aware of the historical significance of Springfield's plans and of the timing as the nation finds itself in a period where new sources of energy are needed. He also is aware many unforeseen pitfalls lie ahead.

"No one down here's been smug about this," he said.

The project was conceived in 1974 when selectmen, meeting secretly to keep their plans from the local electric company, began studying the idea of establishing a municipal power system by building hydroelectric dams along the river.

Such a system, they believed, would provide a renewable source of power and cut electric rates for residents.

Springfield voters responded eagerly at Town Meeting in March 1975 with a 3-1 vote to proceed with feasibility studies and authorize a $58 million bond issue to build the system.

Then the opposition began to surface.

The Central Vermont Public Service Corp. — the state's largest electric company — tried to convince Springfield residents the project was not feasible and visions of lower electric bills were pipe dreams.

CVPS sells some $2.5 million worth of electricity to Springfield each year.

When CVPS failed to sway the citizenry, it went to the Public Service Board and the courts, challenging the way Springfield officials conducted the early planning.

When both upheld Springfield, CVPS appealed to the state Supreme Court, which is expected to hand down a ruling in June.

The project did more than scare CVPS. It created a bitter dispute between Springfield and the small neighboring communities of Cavendish and Weathersfield.

In order to build the system, Springfield will have to use its powers of municipal condemnation and seize property in both those communities.

In fact, the heart of the project — a 500 acre, five-and-a-half mile long reservoir — would be located in Cavendish. An estimated seven or eight families would be affected.

State lawmakers representing Cavendish and Weathersfield succeeded in suspending Springfield's right of eminent domain for two years while the legislature studied the issue. But no new laws resulted from the studies, and the suspension was lifted automatically this year.

Meantime, Springfield is "lumbering along" with its plans, said McCarthy, a young New York native with a masters degree in public administration.

He said the town is about "mid-stream" in preparing an environmental impact statement, has received preliminary approval from the Federal Power Commission, will apply for a full license this summer, and is proceeding with site acquisition.

Moreover, McCarthy said, Springfield has obtained options on 10 per cent of the necessary land and will obtain interim financing or issue its first revenue bonds as early as this summer.

"We know we can abstract the power and we know that the cost will be competitive," McCarthy said.

New prison sites approved

BOSTON [AP] — The House Ways and Means Committee approved the creation of two new prison sites yesterday — at the Gardner State Hospital and at the former juvenile guidance center on the grounds of the Bridgewater State Hospital.

Conversion would require a year and cost $4.9 million, said Rep. John J. Finnegan, D-Boston, chairman of the committee.

The combined total of 300 beds, 200 at Gardner and 100 at Bridgewater, are only half the number Gov. Michael S. Dukakis had requested.

Stricken were proposals for prisons at the former Shadowbrook Seminary in Lenox and Stockbridge, at the Westboro and Foxboro state hospitals and at the Westover Air Base in Chicopee.

Held for possible future considerations were sites at Grafton State Hospital and Otis Air Base on Cape Cod.

The governor expressed mixed pleasure at the committee action. He said it was constructive but did not provide enough new prison beds.

"We think Grafton ought to be designated as a prison site quickly," the governor said.

He said the Grafton site, plus one other — and he said he would restudy Otis as a possibility — would be needed.

"We will continue to press for 600 spaces," Dukakis said.

The Gardner state prison would officially be known as the Massachusetts Correctional Institution of Northern Worcester. The prison would be restricted to an area of about 30 acres, including Thompson Hall, the administration building for the former 1,200-acre hospital site.

The committee attached an amendment giving residents of the Gardner area preference in jobs at the prison, both during renovation and when it opens.

Correction Department officials and the governor pleaded for additional prison accommodations to relieve what was described as severe overcrowding in several existing prisons.

The committee action was unanimous. A House floor vote on the measure was tentatively scheduled for May 9.

Both sites selected had been anticipated on the basis of testimony at public hearings. Legislators from the Gardner and Bridgewater areas supported the expansion of prison beds at those sites, while there was strong local opposition to the sites rejected or deferred.

Bar the South African corporations

By ELLIOT KASS

Soweto, South Africa — April 27. Thousands upon thousands of Black Africans poured through the streets. Their protest was aimed at the 80 per cent rent increase for the government owned shanties where they are forced to live. Their banners declared — "We Will Not Pay", and "Away With Capitalism". The police attacked the demonstration with teargas and gunfire.

Amherst, Massachusetts — April 29. A representative of the Union Carbide Corporation will be recruiting here today. He will be offering us a few jobs in return for which we are supposed to forget about the shanties, the poverty, the segregated labor camps, the gas and the guns. Well, no way.

Union Carbide is a major supporter of the white minority governments of South Africa (Azania), and Rhodesia (Zimbabwe). They are the corporation responsible for mining over 70 per cent of the chromium ore from these two countries — one of the most important (and profitable) resources in the region, and key to the economy of these two white settler states.

Union Carbide makes their money by paying Black miners 20 cents an hour, while they force them to work in the mines 6 days a week — 12 hours a day.

Union Carbide has undermined and defied an international boycott, sanctioned by the United Nations, of Rhodesian chrome.

It is an outrage that they are to be permitted to set foot on this campus. Chancellor Bromery has flatly refused to disinvite them, and by doing so has taken a clear-cut stand in defense and support of these white minority governments in spite of all his fine talk to the contrary. In fact, while condemning apartheid and saying that they will investigate their stock holdings in corporations that prop up the racist regimes of Southern Africa, the Board of Trustees has just finished purchasing an additional 700 shares in these same corporations!

The time has come to take a stand. The peoples of Southern Africa, and the millions around the world who support them in their just struggle, will not be put off any longer. The Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa has called a demonstration at 11:30 at Hampshire House (near South-West) to stop the Union Carbide recruiter. Furthermore we are demanding that all recruiters from corporations that invest in Southern Africa be barred from the campus. We call upon all the students at the University of Massachusetts to join us as we stand shoulder to shoulder with the freedom fighters of Azania and Zimbabwe, in their struggle against those who would keep us all bowed down for the benefit of the tiny few.

A meeting with 'the biggies'

By HEIDI BERENSON

"Heidi meets the biggies" was what one friend said to me upon learning of my recent meeting with three top journalists from the Boston Globe.

To tell the truth, that was my feeling when I discovered that I was to come face to face with persons that I was only familiar with as bylines.

So when Washington Bureau Chief, Martin Nolan, Washington Political Correspondent, Curtis Wilkie, and Assistant Executive Editor, Jack Driscoll arrived the other day to confer with students, I really didn't know what to expect.

Curtis Wilkie, the real character of the three, possessed a heavy southern drawl, a droopy moustache, and contrary to his appearance, a quick wit and a sense of humor. When asked if he slept better with Carter in the White House he replied, "I sleep better in sin, actually."

Martin Nolan was the sophisticated member of the group: refined and well-seasoned. It's evident that he has covered every facet of Washington. He sees people for what they are, and assesses them on their own credibility. He couldn't understand why Carter used CIA statistics as backup for his energy plan; he thought it was "strange" Carter didn't present his own figures, taken at his own merit.

He told of how he thought Nixon's last presidential TV messages were each turned into a "comedy hour".

Jack Driscoll was the subtle skeptic of the group. He exuded a sense of apprehension regarding Carter's current popularity by saying, "The third year will show the president's normal course of events". Driscoll doesn't take things for granted.

In this post-Watergate era where the journalism field has been glamorized beyond its scope, while Woodward and Bernstein hopefuls lay waiting in the wings for their big break at instant fame, it is encouraging to see the real "I've been through it all" journalists simply doing a job.

The phenomenon of Woodstein U. has practically taken over as the new concept of journalism better known as investigative reporting.

These men however are the actual investigators. They remain anonymous, doing relevent reporting that establish the stories and breakthroughs that put them where they are. They may not have had a movie made exposing their careers, but they don't need it as their professional contribution in stories, far surpasses any media coverage of them.

Wilkie is a newsman who discards press releases and goes after angles and sources that are not average. He said he feels that if he wrote stories from the information contained in the releases and quotes from the press secretaries, he wouldn't have to be there, as there wouldn't be any real work.

At the present time it is relatively quiet in Washington and Wilkie said he wants to return to Boston to "cover some real stories about some real people."

Driscoll commented that Wilkie is an excellent journalist and writer and he can "pretty much do what he wants", in regards to his move from Washington back to Boston. From what Driscoll said, Wilkie is a valuable asset to Morrisey Blvd.

When I relayed to Wilkie what Driscoll had said about the Globe's editorial staff recognizing his talent, he shrugged it off. He suddenly became modest and changed the subject to the Celtics.

Nolan expressed how much he too missed Boston. He talked about Faneuil Hall Marketplace in Boston, of how he missed shopping there, and of his recent visit there.

He talked politics with a sense of humility. He spoke with equal interest in city as well as national politics. His style is so spontaneous: instant humor. He does not though, come off as a comedian or funny man, but merely says what he's thinking in successful execution.

All these men made me feel very much at ease with them. They empathized with the lack of reporting jobs and the overabundance of journalism students.

But the job market outlook was far from my mind while talking with these men. Just to see and hear how they made themselves into the journalists they are was enough to reassure me of what they and their newspaper were made of.

There was no sense of press cards, or flashy suits or frills on any of these men. There was just a love for their jobs, being good at what they do, and having fun being what they are; maybe that is what Woodstein U. students should strive for.

Meeting with Puryear requested

To the Editor:

On April 22 we [GSEU] sent a letter including a list of eight demands ratified by the membership to you and to the Chancellor requesting a meeting to discuss the allocation of teaching assistant [TA] positions for next year. By refusing to meet with us at this point, you are asking that we accept major cuts in TA positions, the likelihood of increased workloads, and conditions of greater insecurity and competition among graduate student employees quietly and without resistance.

Your reference to the unfinished legal recognition process obscures the fact that the University has the choice to at any time recognize our petition and agree to an election. In this event the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission would supervise just such a "democratic election" as you desire. The extremely costly legal process we have been forced to pursue so far has been our last resort given the Administration's interminable stalling.

It must also be made clear that even barring recognition, there is no legal reason which prevents you from meeting with GSEU to discuss the critical decisions affecting graduate student employees on this campus.

We therefore urge you to arrange a meeting with us to discuss our concerns or we will be forced to consider taking more drastic action.

Praise for Progressive series

To the Editor:

For all those viewers of political films at their best, "State of Seige" played to two capacity crowds in Herter 231 Thursday, April 21. The plot centers around the actions and interference of the United States in the political affairs of a small Latin American country [that remained nameless.] The tension builds throughout the film as the audience becomes sympathetic to the urban guerilla group that fights to regain control of the country from the hands of the ruling dictorship; a dictatorship fully backed by the U.S. in both financial and technical assistance.

More important than the entertainment value of the film, "State of Seige" clearly portrays the manner in which the U.S. has manipulated the governments of small countries for American investments abroad. As was the case in Chile in the early 1970's, the U.S. government has repeatedly ignored the right of self-determination of foreign countries in the interests of American investments abroad. The foreign policy of America, as has been recently exposed by various institutions negates any values expressed by our own "Declaration of Independence". Indeed, the importance of a movie such as "State of Seige" is not the entertainment value, the importance of the film is that it exposes the complete idiocy of previous United States foreign policy decisions. "State of Seige" is a movie that commands the attention of the viewer, and implores the United States to stay out of decisions of self-determination.

I extend my congratulations to the sponsors of the Progressive Film series. I can only hope that more students will take advantage of the quality films that the Progressive Film series has to offer.

Educate us, instead

"He's communicating his deeply profound and intense feeling on the very hot issue of 'level-funding' and its subsequent effect on the university in its entirety, however he seems to be under the mistaken impression this whole thing's going to be effective."

"Oh my God, look at that Russian flag over there, look at all those liberated, aware Socialists, hey is that a Russian flag over there, hey is that a Russian flag you're holding up over there? I don't believe this whole thing."

"If that guy would just get off it, off that podium, and quietly express his valid feelings toward you and I, maybe, just maybe some positive things would get done around here. Even if there's twenty dedicated people and each of them passes. Their good intent and awareness on one other individual, and that individual convinces another the knowledge would multiply itself a hundredfold in days. From a fetus to a baby to an adult to a fully grown adult (perhaps even above average in size, say ten feet tall what the hell)."

"You mean instead of jumping up and down and screaming down at us? It wasn't my fault, I don't think it was my fault. Was it my fault?"

"Yes, that's precisely what I mean, instead of yelling obscenities and turning red in the face, instead of hitting us with racism, socialism, thirteen different forms of communism, sexism, and the budget cuts all on that semi-acquaintance relationship level, he should educate us. To put it simply, he's just yelling too damn loud to here anything."

What's wrong with Puryear's report

By NESTA KING and SHERRY FLASHMAN

Provost Puryear's report of March 24, 1977 entitled "Long Range Plan: First Stage" is of great concern to the Graduate Student Employees Union in its implications for us as both workers and students. Criticisms of the report fall into three basic areas:

I. ASSUMPTIONS ABOUT THE PURPOSE OF THE UNIVERSITY

While the introduction of the Provost report uses the rhetoric of continued "commitments to graduate and undergraduate teaching" and a "liberal arts core" for graduate and undergraduate learning, the specific recommendations would create an institution increasingly offering " raining" as opposed to a critical liberal arts education. We agree that the institution must address the implications of a changing job market for college-educated labor, but tailoring educational offerings to meet current market demand is not at all the obvious direction for change for several reasons.

A. We already know that the average worker will change careers 3 to 5 times in her-his lifetime. Training in more narrow specialization could be detrimental to making desirable occupational shifts in the course of our adult lives.

B. Assuming that the most prestigious schools will not commit themselves to vocationalism to any great degree, a general education could continue to be accessible to only the most privileged students, thus exacerbating already existing class distinctions in the quality and nature of higher education.

C. The repeated use of "market demand" as a criterion for allocation of resources assumes that the University's function is one of serving those demands is objectionable. Given the unequal distribution of power and wealth in this society, we cannot assume that such "demands" reflect real human social needs.

II. EVALUATIVE CRITERIA

The quality of a faculty or a program and the potential for research within a given field, cannot be readily quantified, and certainly don't lend themselves to the establishment of an objective formula for determining priorities. For this reason the report appears to rely heavily on quantitative criteria — faculty-workload distribution, student FTEs, enrollment figures. Of course, these can hardly be viewed as "objective" if one considers the great and perhaps immeasurable influence of student advisors and institutional requirements.

III. PROCESS

The design and implementation of a plan which calls for major realignment of the University's resources and priorities should be done in cooperation with students and faculty, represented through the governance channels, and more importantly through their respective bargaining agents. Further, this report was completed in February, released at the end of March and was accompanied with statements regarding the urgency of time and a request for final feedback by April 15. This double-dealing is an insult to every constituency within the institution.

CONCLUSIONS

If cuts are to be made, the first area for consideration should be the ever-expanding administration. Secondly, the University should immediately cease expending resources to resist the legitimate rights of graduate students and faculty to collectively bargain.

Another source of savings could be breaking down the parochical nature of the various disciplines, encouraging cooperation and a less individualistic competitive consciousness — NOT however at the expense of program elimination.

We strongly believe the University must address itself to the plight of students who will face unemployment and who will find meaningless and unfulfilling work to be their only choices. There are three possible approaches to this problem: restructuring of the social and economic institutions of our society such that the economy provides meaningful work for everyone is certainly one solution, shaping people's consciousness and skills such that they fit into the existing social order comfortably, or preparing people to create the kind of world they want to live in.

GSEU demands that there be NO CUTS in graduate programs or graduate student employment. We make this demand not only for ourselves, but for the undergraduate students who will reap the consequences of cancelled and dosed courses, huge lectures without discussion sections, "demonstration" rather than participatory lab work, etc. The narrow vocationalism charted for the University by the Long Range Plan is the unimaginative and self-serving response of a bureaucracy grown too large. We do not believe it serves the best interests of the students, faculty, parents or children of the Commonwealth.

Nesta King and Sherry Flashman are members of GSEU.

U.N. out of U.S. and Amherst

News item: Prime Minister Vorster of South Africa orders the extermination of 50,000 Black Christians. The world is outraged. The UN Commission on Human Rights condemns the Republic of South Africa and recommends that the UN General Assembly both impose sanctions on South Africa and organizes an expeditionary force to terminate the white ruled regime.

The above is a fictitious scenario, for those events never occurred. But it is almost the truth. It is necessary to make only a couple of minor alterations to make the scenario conform to reality. Firstly, change the name of the murderer from Prime Minister Vorster (who did not murder 50,000 people) to Idi Amin (who did). Secondly, change the response of the UN commission on Human Rights, who in reality ignored the Ugandan genocide. Apparently, the actions of a black man are beneath the notice of the commission.

The failure of the UN commission, and by extension the UN itself, illustrates the fatal flaw of the United Nations; namely, that the UN is incapable of acting in accordance with genuine moral principles. Instead, it is capable only of selective moral indignation, where the selection is determined by selfish partisan interests of whomever commands the greatest influence.

The UN by design is inevitably a weak sewer of moral bankruptcy. But this is nobody's fault. How could the UN ever be anything but what it is? What nation would ever willingly surrender meaningful sovereignity to a world government? The result would be national suicide. Since the charter members never intended that the UN would ever have the ability to infringe upon national sovereignity and self-interest, the UN is fundamentally incapable of ever being a force for peace or virtue.

Also, it is impossible for the UN to be a moral force genuinely concerned with human rights when the two greatest abusers of human life in history are members in good standing. These members are the USSR and Red China, who together have murdered over one hundred million persons. Even if one could dismiss the genocide committed against its own citizens as being a purely national matter outside the legitimate scope of the UN, the USSR still presents moral problems to the world which demand international attention, like the profates of the 90,000 Germans captured at the Battle of Stalingrad. Ten years after the battle, and eight years after the war ended, the USSR finally allowed 5,000 Germans to return to Germany. What happened to the other 85,000? All the other participants in World War II returned all their prisoners at the conclusion of the war. Did the USSR use the 85,000 as slave labor? Did the USSR murder them? Did it do both? And where are they today? The UN never investigated the matter. It performed the only option for which it had the power — nothing.

I have and still do advocate that the United States withdrew from the UN, not because the UN could hurt us — it is too weak for that — but because the UN is a great symbol of the perversion of mankind's yearning for peace. While it is unlikely that President Carter will really recall Ambassador Young, we still have right here in Amherst a small opportunity to atone for this oversight. We have the opportunity of lowering the UN flag which flies at the Amherst Police Station and replacing it with the American flag.

It is understandable why the UN flag waves o'er Amherst. Being a university town and a center of learning, Amherst would like to adorn itself with a cosmopolitan facade. What could be more cosmopolitan than the UN, which ostensibly stands for world peace and world government?

Yet, the UN flag ought to be an insult to any thoughtful person. I hereby initiate a petition drive to remove the UN flag from Amherst. Anyone wishing to add his name to the petition, or possibly to help organize a signature campaign for May, should send his name and address to me, c-o the Collegian.

Tear the flag down!

U.S. dollars in S. Africa: Positive action for our economy

To the Editor:

On South Africa, I would like to present a view not to be thought of as conservative but as a revolution against revolutionaries. South Africa will remain an area of much discontent and controversy for years, undaunted by the diffusing viewpoints. There does remain a reality in the midst of the controversy that cannot be changed. This is the fact that through the humility of a democracy, evolved the aggression of a capitalist. Now this is the state of our state and to replenish and maintain our country is to sustain its compelling forces. South Africa is a frontier now for new American investment. This investment of U.S. money overseas is a positive step to curbing our inflation rate at the same time bringing a higher standard of living to South Africa along with better education and hospitalization.

The continuing problem of black oppression cannot and will not be allowed to continue contrary to misleading and outdated propaganda of the socialists in order to discourage instead of encourage cooperation between classes. To rebut this fallacious notion and the April 15 Nummo News headline "The Amerikkkan dream is the African nightmare", I will quote President John F. Kennedy in his 1961 inaugural address: "If a free society cannot help the many who are poor, it cannot save the few who are rich." This implies a direct reprimand to the Marxist, socialist, increasing UMass obsession that the capitalist system is an immortal fortress isolated from and determined to succumb the labor force.

Unless there exists a reason why our industry shouldn't set foot off the North American continent, I will conclude with a saying put better than I could ever say: "I do not believe that any of us would exchange place with any other people or any other generation. The energy, the faith, the devotion which we bring to the endeavor will light our country and all who serve it — and the glow from that fire can truly light the world. And so my fellow Americans: ask not what your country can do for you — ask what you can do for your country."

This second quote by Pres. Kennedy possesses the feeling of myself and millions of other Americans, and as it implies this is the best government around and if you don't like it leave.

High school students caught counterfeiting

DAVIE, Fla. [AP] — Two high school pupils did extra work during their printing-shop classes, but police said they weren't after good marks.

Officers said yesterday that the students used school equipment to print at least 200 phony drivers' licenses to sell to fellow students.

The licenses — with teenagers' real names and pictures but phony addresses and increased ages — were sold for $5 to $40, said Ron Pagano, a spokesman for the police department of nearby Hollywood, Fla. They were used primarily as proof of age for entry into bars.

"I was amazed to learn that something like that could happen," said Richard Broekhuizen, chairman of the industrial arts department of Nova High School in this Fort Lauderdale suburb.

"It was an ingenious scheme," Pagano said. "These kids were pretty good."

Pagano said the 16 and 17-year-old pupils used class time to make counterfeits of Arkansas drivers' licenses.

"They made the prints, reduced them by photographing down to size and then they laminated them with the student's picture on it." Pagano said.

He said they had been in business since Dec. 13.

The two pupils were in their parents' custody Thursday. Counterfeiting charges were being prepared against them, Pagano said, and "we anticipate multiple arrests of other students on charges of possessing counterfeit licenses."

The scheme failed, Pagano said, because of inaccurate details — not bad printing quality.

same, but the fronts were different."

Among other things, Arkansas licenses do not have pictures on them, he said. In addition, the state seal was in the wrong place on the counterfeits and the number series was wrong.

Another detective said the Arkansas license was apparently chosen "because they thought that would be the easiest to reproduce. They copied a picture of a state seal from a yearbook."

Pagano said an investigator heard about the scheme "in the course of normal duties," and a 10-day investigation led to the classroom businessmen.

He said the pupils kept a list of their customers.

Prepayment of veterans to be eliminated June 1

Students enrolled in Veterans Administration (VA) educational programs are reminded it will be a long time between paydays following receipt of their May 1 allowance check. Their May check is their last under VA's prepayment system.

The Veterans Education and Employment Assistance Act of 1976 eliminated prepayment of monthly allowances for VA trainees, effective June 1. The monthly check for June enrollment will be issue July 1. Subsequent VA checks will follow each additional month of enrollment.

New procedures for advance payment also become effective June 1. Advance payments at the beginning of a school term for the first or partial month, plus the following month, will be made only if the student makes the written request to the school and the school agrees to process the advance payment. Previously, advance payment was automatic with enrollment.

The student's written request for advance payment must be included with the enrollment certification submitted by the school to the VA at least 30 days before the start of regular registration. Following receipt of the advance payment, no additional VA check will be mailed for about three months, because of the elimination of the preypayment provision.

Complete information on all VA educational assistance programs is available from veterans representatives on campus or local VA regional offices.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Friday, April 29 — Born today, you have a great love of people, most particularly people in difficulty. Not one to wait beyond the first call for help, you are usually first to the scene of any need, offering your aid, whether of a material or a spiritual nature. Your great feeling for people, however, does not blind you to the fact that there are many who would take advantage of your desire to help those in trouble. You are not easily fooled; you know as if by instinct whether the woe another may attempt to make you aware of is real or not. You know, too, whether a given individual is able to handle his own affairs and come to his own rescue when the going gets rough. Your sympathy does not extend to sentimentality.

You enjoy all efforts to get to the heart of life's mysteries, whether they are your own or someone else's. You will not, however, risk life or limb in the interest of furthering any scheme to get at the truth that strikes you as either foolhardy or unintelligent. You have tremendous respect for any who will apply knowledge -- both learned and received -- and instinct to whatever problems are at hand, for you realize that such people are employing the whole of their energies to the discovery of solutions rather than leaving half of the possibilities of discovery to chance.

Your ideals are extremely high -- but not so high that you need to feel out of line when demanding that others attempt to live by them. You may have many quarrels with the young when it comes to efforts to change their behavior to fit in with your expectations.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Keep a critical eye on another's performance. It may be that you are not giving quite enough credit where it is due.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Relationships with children should be emphasized today. Make it a point to reveal a new side of yourself to those you wish to impress.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — The key to any success today is originality. If you have to follow in another's footsteps, you can expect only ordinary results.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Recognize the difference between what you need and what you want. The practical and the pretty are two completely different things today.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Though social interests are few, social obligations are many. It is never too late to begin to repay debts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Shopping must be carefully undertaken if you are not to find yourself well beyond your budget by day's end. Look at labels -- on both sides!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Success may be unexpected and exciting. Home front activities bring you into close contact with new talents – your own and another's.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Surprising developments on the home front yield developments just as surprising outside the domestic circle. Prepare to move quickly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A long-standing arrangement with another may come to an end today. Don't allow sentimentality to stand in the way of good sense.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You would do well to firm up your position within the family. This is no time to ride on your reputation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Whether the results bring tensions or new joys, you would do well to work as long and as hard as possible today. Begin early; end late.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A day when romance may prove confusing. Emotional fulfillment may not be as easily come by as you had been led by another to believe.

Golfwomen meet Lyons

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's golf team will attempt to break a two-match losing streak when it takes on Mt. Holyoke today at 1:00 at Hickory Ridge.

The women golfers have met Mt. Holyoke twice already this season, and have lost to them twice. Mostly recently, Mt. Holyoke outshot UMass 345-357 in a match played last Friday at Hickory Ridge.

UMass' Joanne Smith tied for low honors with Mt. Holyoke's Jan Van Munching, as each shot 78's. Smith's round was featured by a 37 on the front nine, despite having an eight on one hole.

"She played very well and improved a lot over the first match," UMass coach Jane McGahan said in reference to Smith.

Deb McCulloch had an atypical 84, while Meg Groden had the third best score for UMass, a 92.

One might think that UMass and Mt. Holyoke are getting a bit weary of meeting each other, but McGahan feels otherwise.

"At least we're getting matches," she said.

UMass may play the South Hadley college again this season, before both schools travel to Penn State next weekend to compete in the Lady Lion Invitational.

McGahan said that six or seven women's golf teams should be there. Along with UMass and Mt. Holyoke; Cortland State, Ohio State, Salisbury State (Md.), and host Penn State should be represented.

The culmination of the relatively brief spring season, the Lady Lion Invitational will take place next Friday and Saturday.

Gridmen set for scrimmage

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

It's only five months until the September 10th opening against Army but the football fan can start to get warmed up as coach Dick McPherson's spring football training camp concludes with an intrasquad scrimmage tomorrow afternoon at 1 p.m. at Alumni Stadium.

The team is divided right down the middle with team captains Peter McCarty and John Gladchuck acting as respective team coaches in drafting their teams.

It will be a regular officiated game with kickoffs, punts, and regular offensive and defensive strategies. However, both the offense and defense will be limited in the type of different stunts used as the team has had only 13 practice days.

"It's been a great spring for football," said assistant coach Bob Pickett. "The weather and the field conditions have been excellent so that our practices were very productive. I'd say the players are anxiously awaiting this game as it concludes the camp. The overall conditioning of most of the players was also one of the pleasing aspects of camp. It should be a good scrimmage," continued Picket.

Pickett, defensive coordinator and linebacker coach said the aim of the defensive position.

"We want to have the 11 best football players on the field at all times. With last year's injuries to key people, our aim this year is to develop quality depth," said Pickett.

Twelve returning lettermen lead the defensive squad with starters Phil Puopolo and John Willis the veterans at nose guard and defensive tackle, respectively. Dave Bemis, Marty Trymbulak, Steve Telander, John D'Amato, and sophomore Peter Russell and Peter Stephens are competing to fill the three other positions.

Co-captain Peter McCarty centers the linbacking spot while juniors Steve McInnes, and Joe McLaughlin are battling for the other spot. According to Pickett, McInnes, a versatile football player, is also being used as a possible safety.

In the defensive backfield, Dave Croasdale and John Beerworth are the returning lettermen. Todd Holt, out last year with an ankle injury is coming back while Joe Harrington and Kevin Sulliven, starters on the JV team last year are pencilled in as starters.

On offense, the main objectives of the spring drills are to find a replacement for center, develop depth at offensive tackle, and find a speed receiver and a power and blocking fullback.

"The key to our offense this year," said offensive coordinator Bill Maxwell is to develop a consistent offensive line because that's where the offensive battle is won. In order for a quarterback to have success, he has to have a good line in front of him for every play."

Russ Cooke, a 1974 starter out for two years with a head injury, has recovered and has been given clearance to join the team. He will join Russ Schubarth, returning from academic suspension, and "will give a tremendous boost to the line," Maxwell said. Other returning linemen include Gerry Greene, Bruce Kimball and Jim Penta.

At fullback, John Romboli is the only returning fullback but sophomores freshman Henry Sareault has impressed so far this spring. In the halfback slot, 5-9, Dennis Denl and starter Bill Coleman are expected to be the main offensive running backs next year.

Kevin Cummings, hurt in the last half of '77 but named ECAC receiver of the week in one game, is the most threatening receiver at tight end while senior Gladchuck is scouted as the most sure-handed receiver on the team. The team however, is still looking for a dependable speed receiver.

Mike Fallon, Tim Fontaine, John Santinella, and Don Roeder and all share the quarterbacking duties Saturday with Fallon the top prospect at quarterback for next season.

Ruggers join forces and travel south

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

"Any time a bunch of UMass and Amherst College athletes play together that's a real bastard team" — UMass rugby football coach "Doc" Laurence.

Politics and rugby do indeed make strange bed-fellows and this weekend 21 rubgy players from the two Amherst schools will try and capture the Commonwealth Cup in Charlotsville, Virginia.

"The UMass and Amherst boys are working well together," Laurence said, "and will be known as the Bar Sinisters."

"I think respect for New England rugby is low in the south because a lot of our second and third sides travel down there," Laurence added. "We'd like to show them we've got some good players."

The Bar Sinisters, with UMass stars Mike McCabe, Rick Lopes, Larry Tebo and Amherst standout Danny Wack, are a long shot to take the tournament against the likes of Beacon Hill, Pittsburgh, University of Virginia and the Bar's first opponent, Washington.

"I doubt we'll beat Washington," Laurence said. "It's unrealistic to think a college side that has never played together can go down and beat a tough and experienced club side."

Wack, Amherst rugby star for four years and leading ground gainer on the Jeff football squad his senior year, once played for the Washington club and is being pumped by Laurence for information on his ex-mates.

"We're getting a book together on them," Laurence said, "and we hope to exploit a few expected weaknesses."

The Bar Sinisters are in the same bracket as Nevilly-Sur-Marne, a French side that Laurence hopes the UMass players will keep a close eye on.

"The French play the fast running style of rugby that I want our boys to play," Laurence said, "and watching this French side could be a great experience for us."

Beacon Hill, with ex-UMass players Billy Foye and Jerry Bruen, is expected to be the team to beat, with Virginia and the French side right behind the Beantown boys.

Meanwhile back in the not-too-sunny North the UMass B and C sides have no definite weekend opponent as yet. Friday night's scheduled home match against the University of Rhode Island has been cancelled because the rugby field is being used for intramurals.

"URI invited us down there Saturday," Laurence said, "but we're not sure yet if we're going."

Oarwomen top Smith

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's crew slammed its traditional rival, Smith College, in Wednesday's race on the Connecticut River. In a six minute race, Smith came in 17 seconds after UMass' finish.

Smith jumped off to a lead at the start of the race until the 300 meter line where UMass gained on them. By the 500 meter line, UMass poured on the speed and ended with a run-away lead.

Doug Frost, coach of the UMass oarswomen, said UMass rowed well, but not as well as at last weekend's race against Syracuse and UPenn where the crew did its best this season.

The course was only 1000 meters long as opposed to the usual 1500 meter length. However, because the boats would be rowing against wind and current, the course length was shortened so it would take approximately five minutes to complete which is the normal length of a women's crew meet.

Linksters lay waste; take state tourney

By BOB HASKELL
Collegian Staff

Their mathematical abilities may be suspect, but any doubts about the UMass golf team's talents on a golf course were laid to rest yesterday, as the Minutemen laid waste to a field consisting of 18 of the state's finest golf squads in the Massachusetts State Tournament held at Stowe Acres golf course in Stowe, Mass.

Ever since coach Fan Gaudette's hardy band of birdie-mongers won and then lost, the Salem State Invitational tourney last Monday because of a faulty scorecard; the ominous suggestion of a jinx has been hanging over their heads. Judging from yesterday's results, all UMass varsity teams should be so jinxed.

Freshman sensation Flint Lincoln did everything except roll up the greens and take them home, as he coasted home with a one-under-par 71 and medalist honors. Teammate Bobby Sanderson also found the 6500-yard layout to his liking as he finished second in the medalist sweepstakes with a round of even-par 72.

This was the third annual edition of the Mass. State event, which might be rightfully renamed the UMass State Tournament, after the Minutemen wrapped up their third straight victory in the tourney.

The linksters finished with a highly impressive 295 stroke total in the best four out of five scoring system. Southeastern Massachusetts University took second with a 306 tally, and Stonehill College garnered third at 311. Amherst College grabbed fifth behind Lowell University (313) with a 317 stroke total which featured Jimmy Wisor's hole-in-one.

"Flint really played well out there today," said coach Gaudette after the match. "He hit the ball well, he putted well, and he's getting a lot smarter about keeping the ball in play, and not letting the round get away from him."

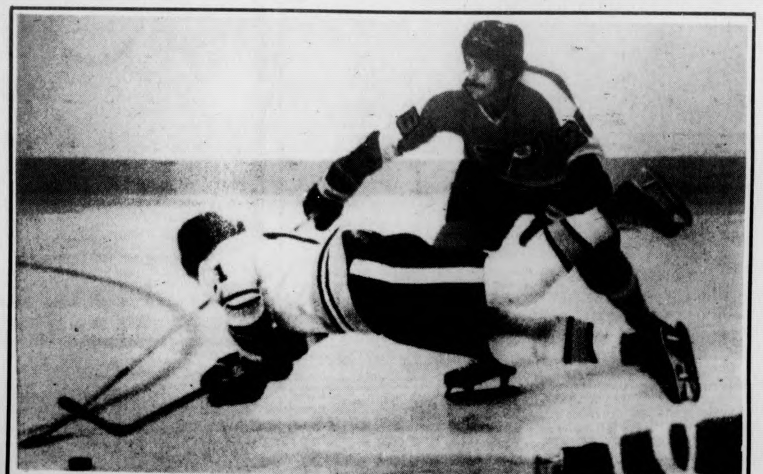
Defending New England champion Jim McDermott found the going a bit rougher as his putting stroke deserted him. With six holes to play, he found himself at six-over-par, and all the signs pointed toward a final score featuring very large numbers. But Jim McDermott did not win the New England championship by resigning himself to poor scores. Scratching for every advantage, he mustered two birdies in the final six holes to finish with a respectable 76.

Freshman Mark Powers continues to provide consistent quality golf as he supplied the final strokes in the UMass total with a steady 76.

Sanderson has been playing some sterling rounds in the past few days. In addition to his fine 72 yesterday, he also shot a brilliant two-under-par 70 in a practice round.

All this success bodes well for UMass team's professed goal of peaking for the New Englands-NCAA Qualifying tournament which is slated to begin this coming Thursday and continue into Friday's concluding round.

"We're showing some consistency now," said Gaudette. "We're together. All we have to do is play up to our capabilities next week, and I think we'll win it. Our top four guys are pretty much set now, and the only question is about our fifth man. I'm gonna be watching to see how the guys are scoring this week, and if anyone seems to be playing especially well, he's my man. I'm keeping my eye on Charlie Dempsey, Chris Hales, Mark Duggan, and John Ciborowski, but it's still very much open."



Bruins' Bobby Schmautz is tripped by Flyer's Orest Kindrachuck in action last night. Boston won, 2-1, on a goal by Mike Milbury in the third period to take a 3-0 lead in the series. (UPI photo)

Frisbee championships here

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

When Earlham and Bucknell get together on the athletic fields near Southwest this afternoon at 2:00, Earlham will be undertaking a task of mammoth proportions. Not only will they be playing Ultimate Frisbee against the 1977 Eastern Ultimate Frisbee Championship Tournament's top-seeded team, but they will also be competing with the UMass lacrosse team for spectator support.

With the Penn State-Columbia contest, also at 2:00 on the fields near Southwest, Earlham and Bucknell will open the eastern half of this year's Ultimate Frisbee championships. Unlike last year's National Championship which was held here, this year there will be separate eastern and western championship held. The winners will meet during the end of the World Frisbee Championships. The competition will be keen for the all-expenses paid trip to the Rose Bowl that the winning team will receive courtesy of Wham-O.

Though Earlham is a fairly recent entry into Ultimate, most of the other teams were either close to being in last year's tournament or actually participated. While last year's championship was the first Ultimate championship ever held and consequently a novel thing for both players and spectators, the teams that will be here this year take their game seriously and the quality of Frisbee play will be rather high.

Cornell, Glassboro and Princeton round out the top four seeds in the sixteen team field, and are allowed by Penn State, Hampshire, Rutgers West, the defending champion, and Michigan State. The remaining unseeded teams are: Amherst, UConn, Brown, Kalamazoo, Rensselear Polytechnic Institute and Webb.

Following the 2:00 games, UConn will face Princeton and Glassboro will face Brown at 4:00. RPI will play Rutgers and Webb will play Cornell at 6:00 on the lighted intramural fields followed by the 8:00 games between Kalamazoo and Hampshire and Amherst and Michigan State.

Two of the four quarterfinal games will be played at Amherst tomorrow morning at 10:30 and the remaining two will be played there at 12:30. The semis will be at UMass on the lighted fields at 6:00 and 8:00.

On Sunday morning at 10:00 Frisbee Golf will be played on the UMass course near Alumni Stadium to lead off a day of many Frisbee activities. The Ultimate consolation game will be held at Amherst at 11:00 while other Frisbee players will be freestyling, or, executing trick throws and catches in pairs. The championship game will be played at 2:00 at Amherst.

Ultimate, developed in 1968 at Columbia High School in Maplewood, New Jersey, is the team Frisbee game that has attracted the largest national and international following.

Seven players line up opposite their opponents on opposite goal lines set 60 yards apart and 40 yards long and throw-off. The objective for the receiving team is to move the Frisbee down the field through a series of completed passes culminating in a pass to a teammate in the opposition's goal area, thus tallying one point. After two 45-minute running time periods, the team with the most points wins.

Various rules govern the movement of the Frisbee, defensive and offensive play and whether or not teams can have a good time (a good time is required).

Since the game is played in a continuous manner, play is often conducted much like basketball or lacrosse (except for the fact that the person holding the Frisbee cannot move). Both the give-and-go and the run-and-gun offense are used successfully and acute discipline is a must, for the cohesive team is the team that plays well.

Mittwomen host Warriors

By MEL WEBSTER
Collegian Staff

The high-flying UMass softball team returns home tomorrow after a week's absence to take on Boston State at 1:00 p.m. in a doubleheader at NOPE Field.

The Minutewomen sport a 9-1 record after their doubleheader sweep of Connecticut on Wednesday, that saw them belt out 22 hits and score 30 runs.

"I hope we can continue to get a lot of runs, so I can continue to use the people on the bench," coach Dianne Thompson said.

Thompson will send Gail Carter to the mound in the first game and will follow with co-captain Gail Matthews in the second. Carter has a 2-0 record, and the top ERA at 2.00. Matthews has a 4-1 slate and a 3.33 ERA.

The UMass pitchers will be facing a Boston State squad that boasts a record of 4-1.

"This record could be deceptive because they have played a weak schedule, but I'm still expecting a tough game from them," Thompson said.

The Minutewomen were defeated by the Warriors 14-7 last year.

The leading hitter among the regulars after 10 games is Sue Peters with an average of .429. Sue DiRocco, who has "looked very good at the plate in the last three games," is second at .393. The offense in the first game will be enhanced greatly by Carter's bat. The freshman hurler has only been to bat 12 times, but she has 7 hits for a team high .583 average.

DiRocco has been producing in the clutch as she leads the Minutewomen with 12 RBI's. Co-captain Heidi Dickson is second with nine, and Rhonda McManus is close behind with seven.

Reflecting at the halfway point of the season, Thompson said she isn't surprised at the success of the team. "The new young kids on the team have brought a whole new concept to softball here," Thompson said.

"The team is young and enthusiastic and they want to do well, and I hope they continue winning," Thompson said. She added that the veterans on the team may be somewhat surprised at the success so far this season, but they know now that this is a strong team.

"We are really glad to be back home, and I expect the team to be sharp against Boston State tomorrow," Thompson said.

Gazelles travel for UNH meeting

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

Two unbeaten clubs will battle it out when the UMass women's lacrosse team travels to New Hampshire tomorrow at 11:00.

The Gazelles, coming off an impressive 12-1 over powerhouse Bridgewater, know that they will have to be sharp in order to win. New Hampshire, also winners over Bridgewater, is undefeated in two seasons of competition.

"We didn't face them last year so I don't know how strong they are or what kind of a game they play," said coach Frank Garahan. "But whatever style they play, I know we have the tools to beat them."

Considering the way the Gazelles have been playing lately, that sounds like an understatement. In their last five games, UMass has outscored its opponents 66-13. Taking into account that their opposition is considered to be some of the best teams in the area only makes that statistic more impressive.

"What I'm pleased with is that our offense is balanced," Garahan stated. The statistics in this case don't lie. Nancy O'Neil has 18 goals, eight assists, Julie Hall has 17 goals, nine assists and Evie Sneeden has 15 goals, six assists. Carrie Nickerson is close behind with 14 goals and six assists.

The scoring is close but makes little difference to the players. "They realize that they are at their best when they play as a unit and individual scoring doesn't matter," said Garahan.

Garahan praised the work of the defense which when effective (which has been the case), adds greatly to the offense. He cited the fact that the defense allowed only one shot on goal in the second half of the Bridgewater game.

The Gazelles are now working on polishing their fundamentals. When polished, their play can become more intellectual and therefore lead to an even stronger team. The players are working with each other in practice and trying different things on offense and defense.

The New Hampshire game should provide the toughest opposition the Gazelles have faced this year. It will give UMass a chance to see how good it really is.

There are only a few unbeaten teams left in the East and two of them will go at it on Saturday. A noted authority in women's lacrosse called the game "a tossup."

"We'll be ready," Garahan confided.

Runners in Philly

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Seven members of the UMass men's track team journeyed down to Philadelphia yesterday for the 'grandaddy' all the relay races — the annual Penn Relays.

All-Americans Mike Quinn, John McGrail, co-captain Jim Hunt, and three-miler Frank Carroll will join fellow teammates John Richards, Steve MacDougall, and Jeff King at UPenn for the four day event which started Wednesday.

Senior McGrail, junior Carroll, and sophomore Quinn were to run last night. McGrail was to enter the 10,000 meter run while Carroll and Quinn were scheduled to run the 5,000 meter.

The 10,000 meter run is equivalent to six miles and 380 yards while the 5,000 meter race is listed as three miles and 125 yards.

Their results were unavailable as of last night.

This afternoon Hunt, Richards, MacDougall, and King will enter the two-mile relay.

According to assistant track coach Arnie Morse, the Penn Relays are the largest and oldest relay in the country. Started 95 years ago, this track event will host 600 teams from all over the country. Teams as far north as Maine, as far south as Florida, and as far west as Oregon will compete in addition to world caliber and Olympic entrier.

"The Penn Relays are the premier social track event of the year. They are certainly the grandaddy of all track relays. Anybody who's anybody in track in the United States will show up for this," added Morse.

McGrail will aim to break his own record of 30.16.6 as he will compete with Olymic runner Will Rogers of Melrose, Gary Betrocklin of the University of Colorado, and former UMass All-American graduate Randy Thomas.

"John's in great shape to break his own record which he set in the IC4A's last year. I predict he might go 29:12 and set three and six mile time records in the process," Morse said.

Quinn — who finished as the number two cross country runner in the New Englands last fall will team with runnerup of last year's Yankee Conference three mile — Frank Carroll in the 5,000 meter run. Quinn was third in the race last year with a 13;39.6 time, establishing a freshman record while Carroll was one second faster finishing in second place.

"If the weather is good, I can see both Quinn and Carroll breaking the three mile school record of 13:35.4 set by Randy Thomas in 1974," Morse said.

Two freshmen, a junior, and a senior will constitute the two mile relay which last week established itself as the number one unit in New England in the BC Relays. MacDougall (1:54.3) and King (1:53.8) who established the freshman record in the half mile last week represent the first time two freshmen have gone down to the Penn Relays. Along with these two, junior John Richards (1:54.3) and senior co-captain Hunt (1:52.8) will be out to break the school record of 7:42.6.

Trackwomen host tri-meet

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's track team will get its severest test of the spring season so far when it takes on Vermont and the University of Rhode Island this afternoon at 3:00 at Derby Track.

The Minutewomen are 2-0 in dual meets, and have also unofficially defeated URI in a dual meet held at UConn earlier this season. Today's meet will be the final tuneup before the Eastern Championships, which will be held a week from today at East Stroudsberg (NY) State.

Rhode Island should be the weakest team in the meet, but the Rams do have a few good individual athletes. Patty Douglas is an adequate middle distance runner, but will be the only challenge for UMass on the track. In the field, long jumper Marilyn Hartley, javelin thrower Lisa Hartnett and shot putter Joyce Ajootian could place. In particular, they may take some points away from UVM which is strong in the field, while UMass is not.

UVM has two outstanding pentathletes in Janet Lynch and Janet Terp, but they may not be enough. Terp and Lynch should take first and second in the long jump, and with Sue Marinelli they should take the first three places in the high jump. The pair of Janets are also fine hurdlers, but they may not be fine enough to top UMass' pair of Perron and Cominoli.

Carol Degan in the 880 and Sandy Lacey in the discus give UVM two other good individuals, but Vermont's overall depth, or rather its lack of same should be the deciding factor.

Key events for UMass will be the distances, middle distances, and relays. The sprints and hurdles will also be counted on to provide a safe enough margin to overcome an expected UVM advantage in the field events.

The mile and two mile crew has a good chance of garnering two sweeps; with Barb Callanan, Maggie Crowley, Johara Chapman, and Debbie Farmer in the mile; and Jane Welzel, Sue Swartz, Anne Bradshaw, and Monica Scott in the two. Vermont's Kris Short may be able to challenge in either race.

In the 880, UMass mile record holder Julie Lafreniere will be ably backed by Bonnie Bukowski, Sue Mulligan, Laurie Wolf, and Karen Zimmerman. 440 record holder Diane Sealy will be shooting for a sub-58 second quarter. Cindi Martin and Carolyn Shea will also run the quarter.

UMass' consistent sprint-hurdle duo of Nancy Cominoli and Chris Perron are favored to cop first and second in both the 100 meter high hurdles and the 100 yard dash. Cathy Contini and Martin will be trying to pick up some points in the 220. Perron and Ginger Bulman provide a good scoring punch in the 440 intermediate hurdles.

UMass probably will be able to score some points in the field events. Sue Budzynkiewicz has the best chance in the discus and shot put. Gail Emond is the top javelin thrower,aand should also place well. The versatile Cominoli could crack the scoring column in the long jump.

Vermont and Rhode Island should provide good enough competition to result in some fast times, but the final outcome of the meet should be decidedly in UMass' favor. UMass' weak point, the field events, should not provide enough of a margin for Vermont to hold up on the track. Rhode Island, while not a strong team, may take some points away from Vermont, thus helping the UMass cause.

Batsmen bomb Bridgeport

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

BRIDGEPORT — The UMass baseball team combined a 15-hit attack with the over-powering right arm of Doug Welenc yesterday as it blasted Bridgeport, 9-4.

The Minutemen will attempt to go over the .500 mark for the first time in three weeks tomorrow afternoon as Jeff Reardon and Tom Nigro take the mound in a 1:00 doubleheader against Rhode Island.

UMass took advantage of a fierce ocean breeze at Bridgeport's sea-coast field yesterday to batter three pitchers. With the wind blowing out to left field, the outfielders had to play extremely deep. Some long shots were caught, but weaker line drives dropped in.

John Czerapowicz continued his hot hitting, as he banged three singles and knocked in three runs. The junior catcher also had three hits against SMU Wednesday.

The Minutemen, playing with only 13 men because of several exam conflicts, scored all the runs they needed in a big third inning. With Bridgeport ahead 3-0, Neil Lojek walked and Mike Stockley singled to lead off the five-run outburst.

Ed Skribiski, who has been one of the Minutemen's most consistent hitters this season, singled home Lojek. Paul Abramowicz then sacrificed the two runners over before Czerapowicz and Dale Stone delivered two-run singles.

Those five runs were plenty for Welenc as the Greenfield righty baffled Bridgeport for the remainder of the game. He was wild (nine walks), but he was also untouchable, not allowing any hits between the fourth and ninth innings.

Welenc barely survived the first two innings, however. Three hits and three walks brought three Bridgeport runners across the plate before the freshman settled down.

Welenc struck out eight in what coach Dick Bergquist called "the best he's thrown since we were in Florida." Now that he has recovered from a back injury which sidelined him for two weeks, Welenc can be a valuable asset to the UMass pitching staff for the remainder of the season.

The Minutemen provided more support for Welenc as they put together four single-run innings after the third. The clutch hitting which UMass has desperately needed in numerous one and two run losses came through yesterday.

Neil Lojek singled to lead off the fourth, advanced to second on a fielder's choice and scored on a Skribiski single. An inning later, Mike McEvilly reached on a bunt single, stole second and came home on Bobby Alves' single.

Alves singled in the seventh, raced to second as the left fielder booted the ball and scored on a Czerapowicz single. UMass scored once more in the ninth as Alves walked, went to third on a Stone single and crossed the plate on Bill Hendy's single.

"I was encouraged today," commented Bergquist. "Their pitcher (Mike Duffy) pitched very well against UConn last week, losing 2-1, yet we hit him pretty hard today."

UMass will face two more aces tomorrow afternoon as Rhode Island will throw Bob Bannon, who beat Maine earlier this season, and Rick Munday. This is a big doubleheader for what is one of the best Rhody teams in years. Of course, now every game is essential for the Minutemen if they expect to make the playoffs.

Gorillas meet NC, UNH in big games

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

UMass coach Dick Garber calls it 'lacrosse weekend.' Other coaches call it suicide.

Today at 3 p.m., the UMass men's lacrosse team will play North Carolina behind Boyden and face New Hampshire tomorrow at the same place at 2 p.m. What's suicidal about it is that it's a key weekend for all the teams involved.

North Carolina comes in with a five-game winning streak, a 7-3 record, and the tenth spot nationally — right behind UMass. New Hampshire visits tomorrow with a seven-game win streak, a 7-1 slate, and the second spot in the New England poll, behind UMass. Both the Tar Heels and Wildcats have only one game left after this weekend.

The game has a lot of meaning for both North Carolina and UMass because while the Minutemen are 19 points ahead of the Tar Heels, UMass is only six points out of seventh.

"This week, the sixth, seventh, and eighth teams play each other so that the nineth and tenth spots become important," Garber said.

The game with New Hampshire could decide the New England title as the Wildcats and the Minutemen are undefeated in New England plays.

The toughest game of the two will be today with North Carolina. A loss to UMass would lower its record to 7-4 with only Air Force remaining and pretty much remove it from the post season picture.

North Carolina is much like UMass, and began its season with two losses. The losses were to Maryland and Virginia, the second and fifth nationally ranked teams respectively. NC then won two and dropped a game to Washington and Lee. The Tar Heels then went on a tear, winning five in a row with the last two being a 13-5 win over Roanoke and a 12-7 win over Duke.

"They are on the a crest, the same way we are. They have excellent stick handling, good speed, and are a very flashy team. They force the ball on passes to the crease," Garber said.

The Tar Heels are an experienced team, making the national tournament for the last four years.

The visiting team uses three midfields and has three solid attackmen, Dan Cox (43), Tom Venier (40), and Joe Yavoli (42). Garber called Cox "an excellent crease man." He scored six goals in his team's win over Penn State earlier this season.

New Hampshire is another team with a strong attack. Lead by Ed Richardson, their leading scorer, the Wildcats have won seven straight after losing the opener at Adelphi. Richardson has scored 32 points in six games and is sixth nationally in goals scored and tenth in points (5.3 average). Roger Rydell and Jay Leech are the other two Wildcat attackmen.

The real problem is whether the team can get up Saturday morning and play a psyched team after a tough game today.

"The game with North Carolina should be just like the Rutgers game, two similar teams playing each other. It should be a real barn burner." Garber said.

"It could be tough getting up Saturday after the North Carolina and being physically and mentally ready for the game. We have good depth and if we have to, we'll spell them. We can do it, I know we can."

Mentally New Hampshire should be up for this game. "This is a pivotal game for them," Garber said. Their only other game is against Dartmouth Wednesday. Their whole season is on the line."

So far this season, the Wildcats biggest win has been a 16-8 dumping of traditional New England lacrosse power Brown.

Physically the Minutemen are better than usual. Rich Donovan has suited up this week and Garber said he is near "80 per cent." Attackman Jeff Spooner is over his muscle pull and is close to full speed.

While Richardson is tenth in the nation in scoring, Spooner is higher, being eighth in the country with 39 points (14 goals and 25 assists). Spooner also has help in that Kevin Patterson is 12th in the nation in goals with 20 (2.9 per game). Mickey Menna is tenth in the country in assists with 20 in seven games.

Don Goldstein is also a national leader at the other end of the field. Goldstein is fourth in saves percentage.

Though these positions are important and statistics are nice, the head Gorilla thinks the key to the game lies elsewhere.

"The midfielders will be the deciding factors. We have three good lines and a fourth if we need it," Garber said.

If the 6-2 Garber's Gorillas don't sustain it over this weekend, their playoff hopes could just disappear.

This scoring scene will hopefully be repeated this weekend, as Garber's Gorillas play a pair of key games which could decide their playoff future. (Staff photo by Jay Saret)

Netmen nix Albany, now await NE's

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team showed classic form yesterday as the Minutemen tuned up for today's opening round of the New England Championships with a 9-0 win over SUNY Albany on the Boyden courts.

"It was a nice finish," said UMass coach Bill Brown. "I just wish the season was another month longer."

The Minutemen are going into the New England's at Amherst College playing their best tennis of the season. Yesterday's win, their fourth straight, gives the Minutemen a 5-1 regular season record.

-The match of the day was a 3-6, 7-5, 7-5 win by Adam Rosen over Albany's Paul Feldman in the first singles. The fact that UMass clinched the match before Rosen and Feldman were halfway through the third set did not dilute the excitement their match produced.

Rosen was a more polished player than Feldman in every aspect of the game. However, Feldman's speed and quick reflexes allowed him to return almost everything Rosen hit over the net.

Rosen jumped to a 3-0 lead in the first set, and for a while it looked as if he would sweep the match in two sets. Feldman then came on to take six straight games for the first set. Feldman stunned Rosen with his ability to keep the ball in play, and hit the winner when the opportunity arose.

Rosen, mildly miffed by the first set, settled down and took another 3-0 lead in the second. Feldman copied his first set charge, but Rosen held on to win, 7-5.

History repeated itself again in the third set as Rosen took a commanding 4-1 lead only to be chased by Feldman, who knotted the score at 5-5. Rosen then exploited Feldman's mediocre backhand and won the set 7-5.

Alan Green's solid net play in the second singles match continually frustrated Albany's Dave Denny. Green was in control from the start and won, 6-2, 6-3.

Barnaby Kalan, UMass' third singles player, held off Phil Achermen's second set surge to win 6-3, 7-6 (5-3 tie breaker).

"I've been improving over the past few matches," Kalan said, "even if only mentally."

Despite pulling a muscle in the second set, Rickey Sharton overcame Albany's Matt Reich 5-3 second set lead in the fourth singles, winning the match 6-4, 7-5.

Jimmy Barnhart and Alan Staple, UMass' fifth and sixth singles players, dominated their matches and won in two sets. Barnhart outclassed Mike Fertig, 6-1, 6-3. Staple put down Andy Antoszyh, 6-1, 6-2

In doubles, Rosen and Green swept past Denny and Achermen, 6-3, 6-1. Kalan and Staple took three sets to beat Feldman and Fertig, 6-4, 4-6, 7-5. Barnhart and Steve Heyl defeated Reich and Antoszyh, 3-6, 6-4, 6-1.

UMass will compete with 39 schools in the New Englands today through Monday. Matches will be played today at all Five College campuses. Matches Saturday through Monday will be at Amherst College only.

SEABROOK, N.H. — "If the plant doesn't close now, we'll get 18,000 protesters to close it in the future," declared Harvey Wasserman, spokesperson for Clamshell Alliance, the anti-nuclear power group responsible for the weekend occupation of a site in Seabrook, N.H.

At ten o'clock last night, when Wasserman spoke to the Collegian in a telephone interview, about half of the 2,000 demonstrators had been arrested for criminally trespassing the property of Public Service Co., New Hampshire's public utility company.

The arrests began at 3:40 yesterday afternoon, a half hour after Col. Paul Doyon of the New Hampshire Police issued a warning to occupiers to leave voluntarily. A dozen school buses with ten police officers in each, were aided by some National Guard vehicles for transporting demonstrators from the plant site to Portsmouth Armory. At first, bail was set in a range of $100-$500, but at ten o'clock Wasserman said the bail situation was not clear.

Actual occupation began late Saturday afternoon. Roughly 2,500 marchers approached the site from four different directions. Close to 1,000 entered the 700 acre property from the west through the main access road, amidst hundreds of onlookers and reporters, some voicing support, others watching silently.

There was no attempt by police or company security to prevent entrance, an action which surprised protestors, who originally feared some kind of confrontation.

Two other groups walked into the controversial land from the north and south. The fourth segment, numbering 100, waited until low tide to cross muddy river beds north of the property. At nine that morning during high tide, these protesters were ferried by local lobster fishermen across Hampton River to nearby islands.

Tents were set up under Clamshell supervision while police standing inside a 40 acre fenced-off area watched.

Gov. Meldrin Thomson's Press Secretary, Buddy Jenkins, said the 300 police guarding the site came from local communities and all New England states except Massachusetts. Jenkins said he did not know why Massachusetts declined to send state police, but one N.H. officer on duty jokingly said Massachusetts announced it could not afford the expense.

Nine k-9 German Sheperds accompanied N.H. troopers, while private security employed several doberman pinschers.

Gov. Thomson occasionally flew over the area in a helicopter during the occupation. He landed, unannounced, three times to talk with Clamshell representatives and the press.

Before the arrests Thomson discussed the occupation with a six-member delegation from Clamshell. Noting May first is Law Day, Thomson urged the demonstrators to observe the occasion by peacefully leaving.

Elizabeth Boardman, a 60 year old delegate, responded that the group also had a law and principle to uphold. "We are ready to take the consequences for a highly principled stand," she said.

"I respectfully disagree with you," said Thomson. "You're taking the law into your own hands." He ended the talk saying the police "will use only that force necessary to preserve law and order — no more."

Col. Doyon repeated Thomson's suggestion for voluntary evacuation and also assured non-violent action by his police force.

"My wish is that you'd entertain the satisfaction of fulfilling your goal by occupation. You've gained attention," said Doyon. "In the best interest of everyone, I'd wish you'd call it a weekend."

Another delegate, Renny Cushing, is also a stock holder in Public Services. He told reporters he owns enough stock to run for a board of governors seat on a "responsibility" platform.

Cushing said he has filed an equity suit against Public Services, because it has refused to provide him with a list of other stockholders.

"They're afraid I'll start bugging other stockholders about the nuke plant," Cushing told reporters during a Saturday press conference on the Hampton Falls common.

'A beautiful experience'

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

SEABROOK, N.H. — While other protesters marched by stalled traffic on US Route 1 Saturday afternoon 300 anti-nuclear demonstrators from Western Massachusetts waded through the sea marshes of North Friendly, an island adjacent to the nuclear power site.

The island, owned by anti-nuclear people, served as the Friday night stopover for the Western Massachusetts protesters.

Sean Conley, a fencing instructor at UMass, said the island provided more comfortable sleeping than the rocky sand surface of the parking lot on the nuclear power site.

Conley was a member of a Global Survivor affinity group. He said about 70 other UMass students were participating in the occupation.

Robert Cook, of Haydenville, said he was an "ecologist deeply in love with the land I'm in — New England." Walking by huge pipes, Cook said radioactive wastes "can't be stored safely."

"This plant could just as easily use coal power," claimed Cook, pointing to nearby railroad tracks to support his argument.

Frances Crowe, who had trained anti-nuclear protesters at UMass, was also occupying the site.

"It's been a beautiful experience," she said. "Everyone is dedicated. The best people in New England are here," said Crowe.

She said she helped to train about 750 additional protesters Saturday morning at the Marigold Ballroom.

Wheeler freshman Eric Sandquist was one of my many support people for the occupiers. A support person, he said, is responsible for people in the respective affinity group. Water, food, and bail were among the several things a support person must arrange for occupiers.

Sandquist said he would have occupied if he felt dedicated enough. Since he only joined the anti-nuke movement recently, Sandquist said being a support person was a proper role.

However, he said he might become an occupier in the future, especially if construction at Montague advances.

A nuclear power plant, said Sandquist, could affect anyone. Even the construction workers, who depend on the plant now for income, could eventually be harmed by it, he said.

Neighbors to the plant carried their own signs during the march Saturday. Homeowners told stories about aggressive property buyers representing Public Services. One woman is now stuck with two homes, and she is unable to attract her own buyer until the fate of the nuclear power plant is decided.

While these people wholeheartedly supported the demonstrators, a few other local residents either questioned the effect of a sit-in, or vehemently criticized the protesters.

Mrs. David Augusta, a Hampton Falls woman who allowed anti-nuke protesters and support personnel to camp on her fields, said most of her neighbors on Exeter St. did not express dissatisfaction for the campers. But, she added, she was not able to contact everyone.

While her husband said he was "neutral" about the protesters, a woman living in a home directly across the street from the camp ground, called the protesters "dirty, raunchy, ratty."

"I'm willing to do anything Jimmy Carter says for energy," she declared, "but I will not cow-tow to them (the protesters). They aggravate me."

People, music, sun make beer fest fun

Unlimited quantities of sunshine, music, beer and people combined in perfect harmony Saturday to make the fourth Schlitz-a-rama the most successful party that the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity has ever put on.

Its success was due in large part to the efforts of all the brothers at Phi Sigma Kappa who worked throughout the day.

"We really owe a lot to the crowd," said Bill Pananos, a brother at Phi Sig who coordinated this year's party. "If the crowd wasn't as well behaved as it was" he added, "we might have had problems, but they were great." Pananos estimated the attendance to be about 3,000.

"Fate" was back again this year providing the music, along with the band "Windfall", who carried on the party until last call at 9 p.m. Lead singer for "Fate" summed up the weather saying, "I think the heat's doing strange things to the strings on our guitars, but we'll try to keep things going," and they did, until "Windfall" took over in the later part of the afternoon.

Along with the regular festivities, the Greek area was sponsoring the "Greek Royalty Contest" which is a beauty contest for the best looking "Greek" women. Kim Gower of Alpha Chi Omega won this years contest and she was presented a Schlitz plaque by a Schlitz representative. In addition, $1,000 was raised through the voting process in the contest and it was all donated to Muscuaar Dystrophy.

"Umies" past and present were on hand for this years rendition of Schlitzarama saying they wouldn't miss it for anything. "I've been to the three before this, and I couldn't miss this one" said Van Moeller who came all the way from Washington, D.C., where she is doing an internship program in conjunction with UMass.

Last year's celebration was marred due to the destruction caused to property, the reason for the trial basis of this year's event. "I can't believe how controlled this is" said Fred Winer, a resident in Brett House. The members of Phi Sig could be seen patrolling the area all day to insure that things remained calm and nine Amherst policemen were also helping out.

In addition to beer, soft drinks, hot dogs, and French fries were sold. There was even an Alka Seltzer booth for any dissatisfied customers. The lines to all this was sometimes backed up but generally they moved as smooth as the rest of the day.

The festival marks the end of Greek week which is full of Greek activities. "It's before finals and it's a good chance for everybody to enjoy themselves before it all starts," said Pananos. "The best part of the success," added Pananos "is that it proves the Greeks can provide something of this magnitude to the rest of the University."

There were other contests with free beer as the prize. "I'll give five free beers to the best build" said the M.C., and two men displayed their complete bodies to the audience. An offer went out immediately to any women who would match this feat but no amount of beer, or any other offers of prizes, could summon a volunteer.

At nine o'clock the band said goodnight and everybody began to make their way out. It ended as peacefully as it had began, ten hours and 200 plus kegs later.

OH, Central rock in May

By JIM KASSNER
Collegian Staff

The combined musical talents of five bands accompanied by nearly perfect Spring weather brought happiness to hundreds yesterday, as Orchard Hill and Central areas celebrated May Day On the Hill.

The all day music fest was held on Orchard Hill between Webster and Van Meter dormitories.

The music from two bands from the Pioneer Valley got things underway at about noon. The Pam Bricker Band led off with a set of soft rock, and was followed by the Bailey Brothers Band later in the afternoon. The Ellis Hall Band from Boston played next, followed by the Atlantics, also a Boston-based rock group, and Zachariah, a band from the South Shore area of Massachusetts finished up at about 10:00 p.m.

According to Spring Concert Coordinator Gary Shuster, the concert had been in the planning stages for nearly two months, and required a budget of $3,000. The Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) and the Central Area Council (CAC) each contributed $1500 toward the event.

"It was a perfect day, couldn't have asked for a better one," Shuster said. "The weather was golden."

The crowd, which numbered "several thousand" according to Shuster, consumed approximately 70 of the 125 kegs of beer on hand. Hamburgers and hot dogs were provided by Greenough House and several local craftsmen exhibited their works on the Hill at various times during the day.

Shuster offered special thanks to the Physical Plant crew, particularly those who aided in the delivery and set-up of the stage, and prepared the wiring for the lights and equipment.

According to the UMass Department of Public Safety, there were no incidents. One of four officers at the concert said there were some fights, however, and a few people had apparently attempted to climb the water towers which are located behind Van Meter dormitory.

Sylvan springs weekend

By JANIS FINSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Sylvan's Annual Spring weekend was a huge success this weekend. Although it was cold Friday night, many people from the Sylvan Area bundled up in sleeping bags and blankets and enjoyed the movie "Fantastic Planet." The bands, "Conflict," "Landslide" and "12 o'clock High" entertained over 1,000 people until 1:30 a.m.

Sunday's events were sponsored by Sylvan's Cultural Society and included music by "R.B.S.P." and the "Unity Jazz Ensemble."

The only low point of the weekend occurred when it was discovered that two kegs of beer and a grill were stolen. At the time, beer was given away free. If anyone has any information concerning them, please contact an area representative.

At last night's Area Government meeting, dormitory representatives appropriated the remaining treasury money to "The Subway" in McNamara, which will be used for improvements. Last night was Sylvan Area Government's last meeting. The next meeting will be held in the fall on September 5th.

She had taught courses concerned with the modern innovative novel and had been nominated for a university teaching award during the past year.

Outdoor cafe possibility for SU

By D.A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

The outdoor cafe, one of the trademarks of Parish, which may quite possibly become one of the features of UMass.

In a recent survey conducted by the Student Center for Education Research (SCER), the concept and design of an outdoor cafe, located on the south terrace of the Student Union Building was developed. Randomly selected, students, faculty, and campus visitors were given an opportunity to rate various alternative uses of this area.

James A. Scanlon, a senior in Environment Design and a member of the SCER student staff, developed the proposal and the preliminary plans for the outdoor cafe. Construction, he said, would take about five weeks. As of now, the financial details haven't been worked out. The main sources of funding are the Campus Center Board of Governors, (BOG), Saga Foods, RSO groups, and the campus co-ops, he said.

William F. Fields, dean of students, said last night in a telephone interview, "It's a great idea. I like the idea of developing the south side of the Student Union."

Field went on to say the preliminary plans will be presented to the BOG and financial matters will be discussed.

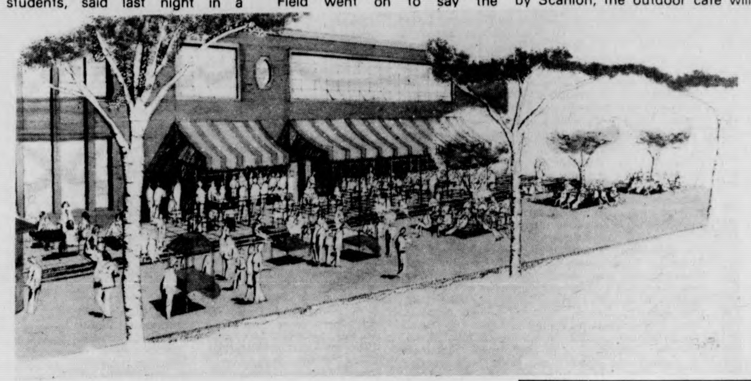
According to a report prepared by Scanlon, the outdoor cafe will provide a central campus focal point. It will also provide a place for students to eat, study, or congregate between classes.

The area would also be used for a variety of artistic and cultural purposes. It is hoped that local campus ethnic organizations would be involved in the preparation and sale of foods from various cultures, so that the cafe would feature an international menu.

Scanlon said the area would be used at least seven months of the year. Perhaps with more funding, he said, the area could be enclosed during the winter and continue its service to students.

The idea of the outdoor cafe is supported by the Campus Planning Department, the Physical Plant, and the Student Senate Coordinator for Economic Development. Other senate members are aware of the proposal and supportive of the idea.

Scanlon will publicly display his designs sometime next week.



Store presses theft charges

By SAMUEL P. HASSAN
Collegian Staff

Criminal complaints against seven UMass students and a Brockton, Mass. resident were sought Friday on behalf of the University Store in Northampton District Court for alleged shoplifting violations during the month of April, according to store manager Winthrop L. Cummings.

A courthouse spokesperson said the complaints would be issued today for arraignments on May 9.

In additional court action Friday, a UMass student was found guilty of a March 16 shoplifting violation, and had his case continued for one year pending payment of $100 in court costs.

Springfield resident and former part-time UMass student Harry Lee Johnson had his case continued until May 4 for disposition and restitution resulting from his March 29 conviction on three counts of larceny by check in the store.

Cummings said Johnson owes the store $220 of the initial $520 he received for bad checks.

A Courthouse spokesperson said last week that Johnson faces either additional larceny counts for allegedly passing bad checks in Stop and Shop, Finast, and the College Drug Store.

Cummings said Saturday, "We're cracking down hard in fairness to the total student body," while explaining that money lost to bad checks and shoplifting is reflected in the $79 Campus Center Student Fee.

"I really want to stress the bad check thing," Cummings said. "It could be really embarrassing for a graduating senior in the midst of job interviews to have to come back to Amherst for a bad check or even a court appearance," he said.

According to Ann Tsoumas, a business major and cashier in charge of bad checks for the Student Union-Campus Center complex, more than $16,000 in bad checks are outstanding as of July 1975.

Tsoumas said most of the outstanding checks are for less than $25 and were passed in the University Store, Textbook Annex, Top of the Campus, CC Hotel and Travel Center, or the old Student Union check cashing facility.

"You wouldn't believe how many people don't know how to run a checkbook," Tsoumas said.

While many people have inadvertantly overdrawn from their checking account, there have been concerted efforts to defraud the University, according to Cummings, who acts as complainant on behalf of the store in most court cases.

Cummings said that a registered letter is sent to any person whose account cannot cover a check written to the store. "In the case where a check has been written on a closed account," Cummings said, "we can seek a complaint immediately."

Frank Simmons, a resident of Springfield and former part-time UMass student is currently serving the first of two concurrent 30 day sentences at Northampton House of Correction for his conviction on two counts of larceny by check in the store.

Simmons had appealed his March 18 conviction, but withdrew the appeal and began serving time April 5, according to a courthouse spokesperson.

Cummings said Simmons cashed two bad checks last fall for $96 and $50 which led to his conviction.

A student security guard in the store said that most of the recent apprehensions for shoplifting have involved the theft of sunglasses.

According to store records, there have been 85 apprehensions for shoplifting thus far this semester. There were 142 apprehensions last semester.

Astronomy Club finally sees stars

By MARK RUBIN
Collegian Staff

For the first time in a year, the University Astronomy Club opened the observatory at Orchard Hill to the entire student population. The club got things started at 8:00 p.m. Friday when the observatory was officially opened with the big twenty inch reflector telescope readied for star observation. The opening had culminated nearly a semester of work which centered on attempting to fix or repair the dome drive mechanism. This is used to rotate the dome so that the telescope can be used.

The scope was aimed at the moon. People congregated around the observatory, taking advantage of some of the smaller telescopes and waited to enter the dome. The grounds were eventually turned into a small parking lot as cars converged on Orchard Hill. Club member Ken Cassel, a UMass student, adjusted the scope while a small crowd gathered within the dome. A hush fell over the crowd as the dome slowly rotated. The setting seemed as if one was part of a science fiction story; the telescope slowly locking into position as red light flooded out into the darkness, illuminating the nearby fields. For many students, it was first time for looking out of a telescope. Reactions varied from 'incredible and exciting' to an unforgettable experience'. "Imagine" said student Carla Rodasta, "Looking at a star and realizing that the light from that star took millions of years to reach us, and then thinking if we were on that star and looking towards the earth, we would have to try to envision the fact that it couldn't possibly exist because it hadn't been created yet."

In addition to viewing the moon, the night was spent observing such objects as the planet Saturn, star clusters, and spiral galaxies. To the crowds surprise, a satellite was spotted and tracked across the sky. This sparked conversations which ranged from rocket propulsion to the Big Bang Theory.

Speakers detail cult experience

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

Religious Cults and their effects upon their respective followers was the subject of a brunch sponsored by Hillel yesterday in the Commonwealth room of the Student Union.

The six speakers scheduled for the event have all had personal experiences with either Hare Krishnas and followers of Rev. Sun Yung Moon. The speakers were Steve Whitman, Mike Bowles, Richard Winer, Dave Needle, Allan MacRobert and a woman who wishes to be identified only as "Mrs. Smith".

Whitman, whose brother was involved with the Hare Krishna movement explained how and why someone joins a group. "It starts off with a kid at a big university. Not knowing anyone and the size of the university may make him depressed. He sees the Krishnas. They seem to be having a good time. They prey on soul searching and such depression. Just like a good con man, they play up the positive aspects but don't tell you they will erase your past loyalties," he said.

Whitman spoke of his perceptions of Krishna "recruiting" methods. "Young people are the most susceptible, they keep a young person confused by the fear of death which is constantly present. They also instill in their followers a fear of living so they have a fear of living and death," he said.

"They strip away your ego defense mechanisms and play upon individual phobias, such as fear of ghosts, being friendless and that your parents are not really your parents but Krishna is. They suppress the feelings of a person as an individual by giving each new member a new Indian name and telling you to keep chanting Krishna. The only worthwhile thing to talk about was Krishna," Whitman said.

Whitman said the Krishnas don't allow drugs, sex, booze or gambling because it is a form of speculation; and thinking to them is a form of speculation which must be suppressed.

The brainwashing continues he said, by depriving a new member of privacy, always being with a group member for reinforcement. "There is no toilet paper in the bathrooms to further demoralize and dehumanize converts and their minds become closed as the Krishnas train people to block out everything around them." he said.

Whitman said the Hare Krishna chant must be said each morning and every night a certain number of times which has a hypnotizing effect on the chanter.

"If you walk into a Krishna temple at any time, they have blaring tapes of their spiritual master praying followed by long study session where lessons are drilled into peoples heads repeatedly," Whitman said.

Brainwashing is then completed by only five hours sleep a night and a poor diet lacking in nutrients which produces exhaustion.

Women converts to the Krishnas are more restricted than male followers because they are taught they are the "lowest form of being as low as a dog or a cat" and cannot speak to a man until she is spoken to. "They are slaves," Whitman said.

Whitman said his family was able to get his brother out of the Krishnas by a judge who granted a restraining order. His brother was then deprogrammed. "Deprogramming is not some

Whereas, the Town has voted on numerous occasions in the past to petition its local, state, and national representatives, while expressing the belief that most such petitions ought more properly to be voted on by all of the Town's registered voters; and

Whereas, Article 54, "The Public Policy Question Act," submitted to the General Court by a vote of the May 21st Session of the Annual Town Meeting of 1975, was not approved of because of certain imperfections; and

Whereas, an Act "Clarifying the Procedure for Nonbinding Public Opinion Advisory Questions on Local Ballots" passed in 1976 by the General Court amending Chapter 53 by inserting Section 18A does not provide a sufficently viable ballot alternative to those who presently petition the Town to render its opinion on public policy questions;

Now, therefore, will the Town vote to instruct the Board of Selectpeopleto submit a petition to the General Court and thereafter to lobby for passage of an act in substantially the following form, to be entitled:

the Public Policy Question Act of 1977

a. Definition. The people of Amherst my exercise their right to have the Town vote to petition its local, state and or national representative(s) by placing public policy questions on the ballot of annual town elections and voting thereon. All such votes will be advisory and not binding.

b. Qualification. The people policy advisory question may be placed on the annual town election ballot by vote of the Board of Selectpeople, by vote of the annual or special town meeting, or by petition according to the following procedure.

A proposal to place a public policy advisory question on the annual town election ballot may be presented to the selectpeople by a petition signed by at least twenty-five (25) registered votes of the town. If the Board of Selectpeople shall not approve the petition the petitioner may place said public policy question on the annual town election ballot by submitting to the Board of Registrars a petition containing an additional one hundred (100) signatures of registered voters of the town not less than thirty (30) days before the annual town election. Upon certification of the necessary signatures the Board of Registrars shall submit the proposed queston to the Board of Selectpeople for preparation, and thereafter shall cause the question to be placed on ballot of next annual town election.

However, no proposal to place public policy question on the annual town election ballot shall be entertained by the Board of Selectpeople more than ninety (90) days before said annual town election nor shall any proposed public policy question properly submitted be acted on less than thirty-five (35) days before said annual town election.

c. Preparation. It shall be the responsibility of the Board of Selectpeople to provide the Board of Registrars with a fair, clear, and concise summary of each public policy question for inclusion of the ballot of the annual town election. Such a summary shall read, where appropriate, "Shall the Town of Amherst instruct its representative(s) to ... ".

d. Notification. It shall be the responsibility of the Board of Selectpeople to inform the petitioned representative(s) of the vote on a public policy question within ten days of the certification of the results of said vote.

Art. 24. (By petition of Christina Platt, et al) To see if the Town will request the SCARCE Committee to: (2) study the economics of Amherst's recycling center and make recommendations to the Fall, 1977 Town Meeting for increasing the revenues from this operation, (2) map out an education-publicity campaign aimed at increasing the use of the recycling center and (3) identify the appropriate Town employees to be responsible for implementing study recommendations and the education-publicity campaign.

Art. 25 (Board of Selectmen) To see if the Town will appropriate a sum of money for the development of new wellfields and wells in Lawrence Swamp in Amherst and Belchertown, the construction of water mains, standpipes, pumping stations and-or water treatment facilities, including the acquisition by purchase, eminent domain or otherwise, of land and easements in connection with the foregoing and necessary therefore and determine whether the appropriation shall be raised by borrowing or otherwise.

Art. 26 (Board of Selectmen) To see if the Town will appropriate a sum of money for the development of a water supply system in Amherst and Hadley (the Hadley portion subject to the approval of the Town of Hadley), the construction of water mains, standpipes, pumping stations and-or water treatment facilities, including the acquisition by purchase, eminent domain or otherwise of land and easements in connection with the foregoing and necessary therefore and determine whether the appropriation shall be raised by borrowing or otherwise.

Art. 27. (Board of Selectmen) To see if the Town will appropriate a sum of money for the development of a water supply system in Amherst and Belchertown as may be approved by the Metropolitan District Commission and the Town of Belchertown, to deliver water from the Quabbin Reservoir to Amherst, the construction of water mains, standpipes, pumping stations and-or water treatment facilities, including the acquisition by purchase, eminent domain or otherwise of land and easements in connection with the foregoing and necessary therefore and determine whether the appropriation shall be raised by borrowing or otherwise.

Art. 28. (By petition of Vincent J. O'Connor, et al) To see if the Town will vote:

Resolved: Whereas, the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has authorized the Boston Metropolitan District Commission to construct water supply diversion facilities from Northfield Mountain in Franklin County, Ma., to the Quabbin Reservoir for the express purpose of diverting out-of-basin three hundred seventy-five million gallons a day of Connecticut River spring freshet waters; and

Whereas, a report prepared by the United States Army Corps of Engineers entitled "Northeastern United States Water Supply Study" recommends not only the Connecticut River diversion via Northfield Mountain but also a diversion project of sixty-eight million gallons a day from the Millers River basin, a tributary of the Connecticut River; and

Whereas, the diversion of water from the Connecticut and Millers River in this manner will endanger (perhaps forever) a prime resource for present and future water supply, water pollution control, recreation, fish, and wildlife for Connecticut River Valley communities; and

Whereas, the use of such a resource without consent or agreement by said Valley communities sets a precedent detrimental to the interests of those communities; and

Whereas, the future diversionary water requirements of Valley communities have not been determined, nor have the ecological consequences of such requirements been satisfactorily assessed either separately or in light of the proposed diversions planned by the Boston Metropolitan district Commission; and

whereas, such diversions as the Commission has planned would foster continued growth of the receiving communities without concern for necessary water conservation measures on their part and at the expense of the Connecticut River communities, especially since no compensation is contemplated for the depletion of a resource that has economic value; and

Whereas, there now exists no adequate institutional mechanism for participation by Connecticut River Valley communities in decisions concerning the proposed diversions and allocations of the Valley's water resources;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that the Town go on record as being opposed to the diversion of the waters of the Connecticut River and the Millers River, or any other tributary of the Connecticut River, by the Metropolitan District Commission or any other agency, that it renounce thereby intention of accepting from the Quabbin waters thus diverted, and that it join together with other Connecticut River Valley communities in a common effort to prevent such diversions and for related goals;

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the Board of Selectpeople be instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to Governor Michael Dukakis, Senators Edward Brooke and Edward M. Kennedy, Congressman Silvio Conte, Frank Gregg, Chairman of the New England River Basic Commission, Evelyn Murphy, Secretary of Environmental Affairs for the Commonwealth, John McGlennon, Director, Regional Office of the Environmental Protection Agency, James L. Kelly, Division Engineer, U.S. Corps of Engineers, John N. Nassikas, Chairman, Federal Power Commission, State Senator John W. Olver and State Representative James Collins, and both the Massachusetts and Connecticut Steering Committees on the Connecticut River.

Art. 29. (By petition of Coalition for Environmental Quality) To see if the Town will pass the following resolutions:

2. Town of Amherst not seek the Quabbin Reservoir as a source of water, but continue to seek out other sources.

2. The Town of Amherst join with and support the other towns in the Connecticut River valley in their opposition to the proposed diversion of Connecticut River waters through the Northfield Mountain project to the Quabbin Reservoir.

3. The Town of Amherst initiate and enforce a water conservation program.

Art. 30. (Board of Selectmen) To see if the Town will appropriate and transfer the sum of $22,500 to reconstruct existing water mains on North Prospect Street.

Art. 31. (Board of Selectmen) To see if the Town will appropriate and transfer the sum of $65,000 to purchase and install replacement water meters at the University of Massachusetts.

Art. 32. (Board of Selectmen) To see if the Town will establish as town ways and accept the layouts as town ways each of the following streets:

a) Columbia Drive
b) Hunters Hill Circle
c) Trimwood Lane

or any of them, or portions thereof, as laid out by the Board of Selectmen on April 24, 1977, and authorize the Board of Selectmen to take by eminent domain, purchase or otherwise acquire any fee, easement or other interest in land necessary therefore, no appropriation being required.

Art. 33. (Board of Selectmen) To see if the Town will discontinue and convey by quit claim deed to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for the use of the Trustees of the University of Massachusetts that portion of Massachusetts Avenue, a Town Way, located on the campus of the University of Massachusetts, shown on Maps 10-B and 11-A of the Town Atlas and that the Board of Selectmen be authorized to execute the necessary notices and deeds.

Art. 34. (Board of Selectmen) To see if the Town will discontinue that portion of Canton Avenue that remains undeveloped, shown on Map 11-D of the Town Atlas and that the Board of Selectmen be authorized to execute the necessary notices and deeds therefore.

Art. 35. Art. 43. (Be petition of Amherst Tenants Association) To see if the Town will approve the filing of a petition by the Board of Selectpeople, in the General Court, for an act relating to the adoption of rent control for the Town of Amherst, in substantially the following form:

Summary of the Amherst Rent and Eviction Control Act

(The preamble and Sections 1. Declaration of Emergency, 2. Acceptance of this Act, and 13. Severability involve routine procedural matters and are not summarized.)

Section 3. Definitions. The terms rental unit, controlled rental unit, rent, and services are defined. Under the definition of controlled rental unit, certain types of housing are exempted (motels, hotels, certain subsidized housing, cooperatives, institutional quarters, "sabbatical rentals", 2- and 3-unit owner-occupied dwellings, etc.). Units constructed after January 1, 1977 are exempted.

Section 4. Rent Board. A five-member elected Board would administer the law. The Board would receive no compensation. The Board would have subpoena power. (Under the Town Manager Act, the Manager would be required to provide an adequate budget and staff for the operation of the rent control act; the budget would be subject to Town Meeting approval).

Section 5. Maximum Rent. Initially, the maximum rents would be those charged for May, 1977. The Rent Board is required to register all controlled units.

Section 6. Maximum Rent Adjustments. The Board is required to adjust maximum rents to assure that they yield to landlords a fair return on investment. The Board may classify units on the basis of age, size, location or other common characteristics.

In determining a fair rate of return on investment, the Board is required to consider changes in property taxes, operating and maintenance expenses, capital improvements, living space, services, furnishing, and the condition of the property. The Board must also consider the method of accounting used by the landlord. Other factors may also be considered.

The Board may set a standard schedule or rent increases and decreases for improvements or deterioration of facilities and services.

The Board may refuse to grant rent increases if the unit does not comply with the state sanitary code or other state or municipal codes. The Board may refuse to grant decreases if the tenant is more than 60 days in arrears in rental payment, except when the arrearage is due to withholding of rent under Chap. 239, Sec. 8 of the General Laws.

The Board may decontrol any class of units and way later re-establish controls.

A landlord and tenure may agree to a rent less than the maximum.

Section 7. Rent Adjustment Hearings. The Board must consider a request for a rental adjustment made by either a landlord or a tenant. A hearing must be held if either party requests one.

The Board may, on its own initiative, make general adjustments by percentage for any class of rental unit. In such cases, a hearing must always be held.

The Board may, without a hearing, refuse to make an adjustment, if a hearing for the unit has been held within 12 months.

Section 8. Evictions. To recover possession of a controlled rental unit, a landlord must show cause (nonpayment of rent, destruction of property, illegal acts, etc.) or seek the unit for personal use or use by a relative or seek to remove the property from housing use.

Sections 9, 10, and 11. Judicial Review, Civil Remedies, and Criminal Penalties. Decisions of the Rent Board are subject to review by the District Court.

Civil remedies and criminal penalties are specified.

Section 12. Revocation of this Act. The act may be revoked by a majority vote at an annual Town election. The question can be placed on the ballot only be petition of not less than 2 per cent of the registered voters of the Town.

(The complete text of the act is available for inspection at the office of the Amherst Town Clerk).

Art. 44. (Planning Board) To see if the Town will vote to amend the Official Zoning Map by changing the zoning district designation on the northerly portion of Parcel 63 shown on Town Atlas sheet number 14-A, which parcel is also known as Parcel B-1 of the Disposition Plan of the Boltwood Walk redevelopment project, from General Residence (R-G) to General Business (B-G), as indicated on a map on file in the Town Clerk's office.

Nixon chat leaked prior to broadcast

WASHINGTON [UPI] — An apparently well planned series of leaks but Richard Nixon's face on magazine covers and previously secret White House tapes in major newspapers yesterday three days before a television interview with him was to be aired.

After some reports indicated that David Frost's four televised interviews with Nixon contained little in the way of sensational news, and Business Week magazine reported much of the commercial time remained unsold, transcripts appeared in the Washington Post and New York Times of White House conversations implicating Nixon further in the Watergate cover-up.

Newsweek and Time magazines came out last evening with cover stories on Nixon — quoting portions of the Frost interviews which begin Wednesday night on stations across the country on a syndicated basis.

CBS' "60 Minutes program" also included a segment about the Frost-Nixon interviews.

ABC News quoted Robert Zelnick, editor-in-chief for Frost's production team as saying the British television star and enterproneur had access to the secret Oval Office transcripts seven months ago.

There was widespread speculation Frost or his agents made the transcripts available to the two newspapers. The transcripts were prepared for use in the Watergate cover-up trials but never admitted into evidence.

Only prosecutors and defense lawyers would normally have access to them.

Special Watergate Prosecutor Charles Ruff said yesterday no one on his staff leaked the transcripts. the transcripts.

Defense attorneys also denied passing the material to reporters.

Leftists clash in Turkey: Bloody skirmish

ISTANBUL, Turkey [UPI] — Rival leftists clashed during a huge May Day rally in Istanbul yesterday and police opened fire with automatic weapons to break up the fighting.

Police said at least 37 persons were killed and dozens more wounded.

Witnesses said an estimated 100,000 demonstrators carrying large portraits of Marx and Lenin and shouting antigovernment slogans had been marching through the city's Taksi Square all afternoon when the shooting broke out in the early evening near a group of Maoists.

"Within minutes the whole square erupted into a pitched gun battle," one witness said.

Rival groups of leftists armed with sticks ran toward the scene of the shootings. Others dived to the ground for cover or scrambled out of the square. Many were bruised or crushed in the panic.

Police used tear gas and water cannons to try to put down the rioting and later moved in with armored cars and fired at the demonstrators with automatic pistols. They arrested more than 100 persons.

Witnesses said they saw women crushed to death beneath the wheels of a blue armored car. One police officer was also killed. At least 66 persons were reported injured.

Windows of the nearby intercontinental Hotel were smashed. Guest rooms looked out over a battlefield of dead and injured, trampled placards and banners and scattered leaflets.

Istanbul Mayor Ahmet Isvan, who attended the rally, said "it was proceeding quite peacefully when the shooting began. I don't know who fired first."

He said he was punched in the back by a police officer and escorted from the square when he attempted to intervene.

The rally, only the second of its kind in traditionally conservative Turkey, was organized by the nation's second-largest labor movement, the Confederation of Progressive Labor Unions.

Turkey is only one month away from general elections in a campaign already marked by scattered fighting. Student riots and clashes between rival student groups have become common in recent months.

The country's two biggest political parties, Premier Suleiman Demirel's Justice party and opposition leader Bulent Ecevit's left-of-center Republican People's party, agreed recently to hold early elections in June in an effort to halt the fighting.

Demirel's coalition partner, Deputy Premier Necmeddin Erbakan, and members of his National Salvation party have protested the decision by boycotting the National Assembly.

Oil blow-out finally capped; environmentalists demand better safety standards

STAVANGER, Norway [AP] — Environmentalists and fishermen demanded yesterday that the Norwegian government shut down its lucrative North Sea oil fields until it improves protection against mid-sea disasters like the Ekofisk well blowout.

The Phillips Petroleum Co., meanwhile, pledged that cleanup operations in the Ekofisk field would continue regardless of cost until "every last possible drop of oil has been recovered."

Environmental and fishermen groups protested that the eight-day-long Ekofisk spill, finally stopped by Paul "Red" Adair's team of blowout specialists Saturday, proved that the Norwegian government was not enforcing its own safety standards in the North Sea.

They called for a temporary halt to all production and exploration until improved safety and cleanup equipment is stationed in the North Sea.

"Several myths about Norwegian oil policy have been killed in the last week," Helge Ole Bergsen of the conservation Society of Norwegian Youth told a news conference. Among these "myths," he said, were "that we have the best safety equipment and that the technical problems of oil production have been solved — as the minister of industry told parliament four weeks ago."

Bergsen and his colleagues claimed they now have the support of the majority of the Norwegian parliament for their demands for stricter safety standards.

A government spokesman here declined to comment immediately on the charges.

Fearing a huge fire in the offshore complex of wells and pipelines, about 170 miles west of this coastal oil center, the government had ordered production halted in the field until the Adair team capped the runaway well.

Phillips officials said the government gave them permission to resume production Saturday night.

Norwegian and American experts generally agreed Sunday that the gigantic spill — estimated as high as eight million gallons — had not severely damaged the sea's ecology.

"We have been very lucky," said Hans Christian Bugge of the government pollution control authority.

Two U.S. Coast Guard experts said most of the spill would be cleaned up or dispersed by the natural action of the water "within the next few days." Other specialists here agreed.

"Our latest tests show that biological activity in the area is normal," Bugge said. "Some dead fish eggs and larvae have been collected but no dead fish. And there have been surprisingly few reports of dead birds." Twenty dead birds were reported by Saturday.

Texas Rep. knocks doctors on 'preventive health care'

NEWPORT, R.I. [AP] — U.S. Rep. Barbara Jordan has taken the nation's doctors to task for what she calls their failure to encourage preventive health care.

Ms. Jordan also told a group of physicians here Saturday that she believes doctors are largely responsible for the absence of an effective police on nutrition in the United States.

"You have under-emphasized preventive health care," she told about 500 alumni of the Tufts University School of Medicine at their annual gathering.

Consequently, "Congress pays scant or secondary attention to those doctors who want Americans to eat nutritional meals," she said.

"If we are ever going to have a national food policy which goes beyond the threshold of near-adequacy, it is going to take professional advice, perseverance and a little common sense," the congresswoman said.

According to Ms. Jordan, the food industry now has far more influence over national legislation on food policy than "us, the people who eat."

She told the doctors that a concerted lobbying effort on their part would be needed to tip the balance of influence away from the industry and in favor of the consumer.

"If a national food policy is going to be developed at all, politicians will be the primary architects," she said.

Power co. requests water cooling system permit

PROVIDENCE [AP] — The New England Power Co. has asked for a federal permit for a cooling system using seawater at two proposed nuclear power plants in Charlestown.

The Environmental Protection Agency, however, said it will not act on the application until an environmental impact statement is completed on the utility's plan to build the complex.

The statement is being prepared by the Federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and completion is expected late this year.

New England wants to build the $2 billion facility at the former Charlestown Naval Landing Field.

EPA said the cooling system proposed by New England would draw 856,000 gallons of water a minute from Block Island Sound. The water would be 39 degrees hotter when dumped back into the sound, where the water temperature ranges from 70 degrees in the summer to 40 degrees in the winter.

The plant's water demand would be roughly equivalent to the flow of the Merrimack River in New Hampshire and Massachusetts, the EPA said.

The EPA has held up construction of nuclear plants in Seabrook, N.H. over questions about the damage their cooling systems would do to marine life.

HEW head affirms equal opportunity for the handicapped

WASHINGTON [AP] — After weeks of demonstrations by handicapped persons, HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. signed a far-reaching regulation that is designed to give equal educational and employment opportunities to the handicapped.

The regulation implements a section of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act that bars recipients of federal funds from discriminating against the estimated 35 million handicapped citizens in the United States.

It affects federally supported schools, colleges, health and welfare institutions. The Department of Health, Education and Welfare regulation will serve as a model for similar measures that now must be written by all other government agencies.

The regulation makes it clear that it is the responsibility of local public school systems to seek out and enroll handicapped children, regardless of whether they are physically disabled, mentally retarded or otherwise handicapped.

Except under the most unusual circumstances, handicapped persons must be permitted to go to the same schools and the same classrooms as nonhandicapped pupils. And in those cases where a special residential setting must be provided for some children, public authorities must pay tuition, room and board.

There are an estimated one million handicapped children of school age in the United States who are not receiving any education and millions more who are segregated into separate classrooms or institutions.

The regulation requires schools and colleges receiving federal aid to make all their programs, if not every classroom, accessible to the handicapped, which in many cases means classes will have to be moved to lower floors or barrier-free buildings.

Doctors who treat Medicare or Medicaid patients must make their offices accessible to the handicapped or go to accessible facilities to treat them, even if that means making house calls.

According to an opinion by Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell, the nation's 11 million alcoholics and drug addicts would be covered under the regulation's definition of handicapped.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland [UPI] — Britain sent 600 troops to Nortern Ireland yesterday and said another 600 would arrive today to bolster security forces preparing for possible violence in a general strike Tuesday.

The British Army said the two battalions were ordered in "as a sensible precaution" and would be held in reserve "to assist the Royal Ulster Constabulary in the maintenance of law and order if the situation should so demand."

Criminal code overhaul proposed

WASHINGTON [AP] -- After being stripped of most controversal provisions, a bill to modernize and simplify the federal criminal code will be introduced today in the Senate.

Sen. John L. McClellan, D-Ark., a conservative who has labored on the project for 10 years, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., a leading liberal, are co-sponsoring the legislation.

Mondale takes back Ford slur

WASHINGTON [AP] — Vice President Walter F. Mondale apologized Thursday for criticizing Gerald R. Ford last week, telling reporters his comment about the former President's criticism of the Carter administration "was inappropriate."

The Vice President also indicated the Carter administration is considering delaying the implementation of proposed voter registration legislation unless Congress passes the bill early enough to ensure that the changeover will not disrupt the 1978 elections.

Czech dissidents call for freedom

LONDON [UPI] — Czechoslovak dissidents have handed the Prague government a new document demanding religous freedom in the communist nation, the Observer newspaper said yesterday.

The newspaper reported in a copyright story that the text of the demand by the dissident group, known as Charter 77, was smuggled out of Czechoslovakia and given to the Observer last week.

Sadat threatens USSR over note

CAIRO, Egypt [UPI] — President Anwar Sadat threatened yesterday to "take a stand against the Soviet Union" unless the Kremlin retracts a memorandum sent to Arab nations that accuses Egypt of plotting to attack Libya.

magical thing it just starts getting you thinking for yourself again."

The Unification church, or the "Moonies" organization was exposed in a dissertation by Alan Macroberts.

He was invited to a free 'International Dinner' with transportation provided by the "Moonies." At the dinner he met "very sweet people. They might mention world problems or even God but they don't mention that they are "Moonies". After the dinner they try to get you to a weekend worship where seminars teach you to apply their philosophy into your own life. Next you are assigned a spiritual buddy who tries to get you to stay an extra day," MacRoberts said.

In that weekend there was still no talk of Rev. Moon but a lot of pressure to come back for a four day workshop which is really seven days, MacRoberts said.

"The Moonies are very insidious. Their goal is to pick the cream of the crop of American youth and you can't just do that with anybody. They want to rule the world," MacRoberts said.

Dave Needle an ex-Moonie said "you aren't aware of changing your attitudes. Meditation periods turn into individual prayer which turns into group prayer. The people they get are usually athiests which they turn into agnostics and then into Moonies."

Needle said 'Moonies' sleep only two hours a night and teach the converts answers for everything for re-enforcement including how to get money from people on the street.

Mike Bowles was in the Moonies for five months in California. He was introduced to the group the same way MacRoberts was.

"I liked having all this attention paid to me. I thought they were some kind of Jesus freaks but, I felt bad about leaving right after the meal so I gave them my name and address which was a mistake," Bowles said.

To be continued in tomorrow's Collegian.

FDA hearings to probe contested cancer 'cure'

KANSAS CITY (AP) — The legal and scientific status of Laetrile, the alleged anti-cancer drug, will be the subject this week at court-ordered public hearing to be held by the Food and Drug Administration.

The FDA already has more than 5,000 pieces of written testimony and rebuttal on file in a stack two feet in height. And 20 persons, for and against the use of Laetrile, have filed their intention of presenting oral arguments.

The FDA had intended to hold a one-day hearing on Monday, but the outpouring of interest has forced at least a second day to accommodate all those who wish to speak, a spokesman said.

Laetrile, also known as amygdalin and vitamin B-17, occurs naturally in the pits of apricots, peaches and bitter almonds. It has been promoted as a cancer "cure" for about 25 years and the FDA says that recently promoters are claiming it can also prevent cancer.

When the record is completed, it will be submitted to the U.S. District Court in Oklahoma City where a case involving a cancer patient seeking to obtain Laetrile is before the district and appeals courts.

There are efforts under way in a number of states to have Laetrile legalized by state legislatures. Alaska recently legalized the use of the substance. And the Indiana legislature voted Saturday to override Gov. Otis R. Bowen's veto of a bill that would legalize the use of Laetrile.

"Neither the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, the Canadian Food and Drug Directorate, the National Cancer Institute, the American Cancer Society, nor any other reputable organization has found any evidence to substantiate the use of Laetrile in the treatment or prevention of cancer," the FDA says.

"Laetrile may not be sold in the United States and Canada because both nations have laws requiring the drugs be proved effective before they can be marketed. It is available in some other countries because their laws do not prohibit the marketing of unproven drugs," the FDA added. One such country is Mexico.

The advocates of Laetrile argue that the medical profession, the American Cancer Society and the federal government have conspired to suppress the substance because they are bound to conventional treatment by profit or other motives.

A basic argument from the Laetrile supporters is "freedom of choice" in the cancer therapy for the individual.

Traces of pesticides discovered in many mother's nursing milk

WASHINGTON (AP) — Detectable levels of three pesticide compounds were found in the milk of a majority of nursing mothers tested by the Environmental Protection Agency. But health experts say the low levels pose no immediate health hazard to either mothers or their newborn children.

"However, the possible long term consequences of these minute amounts are uncertain," the EPA said in a statement accompanying the study released Sunday.

All of the six pesticides involved in the test have been curbed to some extent, "primarily because they are suspected to be human cancer agents," EPA said.

In the study, milk samples taken during 1975 from 1,436 nursing women in 150 hospitals across the country were tested for six pesticide compounds: dieldrin, heptachlor, a breakdown product of heptachlor called heptachlor epoxide, chlordane, a chlordane breakdown product called oxychlordane and Mirex.

The report said detectable levels of dieldrin, oxychlordane and heptachlor epoxide were found in the milk of a majority of nursing mothers.

Dieldrin was found in about 80 per cent of all milk samples, heptachlor epoxide in roughly 63 per cent and oxychlordane in 74 per cent of all samples. Heptachlor was found in less than 2 per cent of the sampled milk. No chlordane or Mirex was observed in any of the samples.

"The average detectable amounts of these pesticides found in the women's milk were extremely small," the EPA said.

The capitalist merry-go-round

By BRAD GOVERMAN

Profit makes the world go around in capitalist countries and exploitation is the basis for capitalist profit. While Jimmy Carter speaks out against the oppression of human rights in other lands, American owned industries institute apartheid policies in South Africa where labor is cheaper and profits and rate of return on investments are higher than anywhere else in the world.

But apartheid in South Africa is just one of many blatantly attrocious examples of the capitalist disease which pervades our chronically ill society. Racism, poverty, prostitution, widespread crime, and even venereal disease are other examples.

These society-degenerating by-products of capitalism continue to exist because of a general mode of apathy which inundates the society. But is society to blame for these apathetic attitudes? Certainly not.

The governability of capitalism depends on a certain degree of apathy and on that basis we are all programmed through our educational and religious experiences both at home and in school to eat, breathe, and shit capitalist thought.

How many times have you been told there will always be rich and always be poor? How many times have you been told or heard someone say people live in poverty because they want to? The stench of these attitudes permeates Washington where our illustrious leaders wallow in the comforts of a biased capitalist society and take for granted the 30 per cent that don't. Questions such as, "When will we get socialized medicine and education?" and "When will we clean up our cities?" go unanaswered or ignored while our 'ethical' congressmen (and University officials) try to figure out what South African corporations to invest in next.

"The truth is whole.", wrote Hegel, and as Baron and Sweezy point out in their book, Monopoly Capital, "just as the whole is always more than the sum of the parts, so the massing of small truths about the various aspects of society can never yield the big truths about the social order itself — how it got to be what it is, what it does to those who live under it, and the directions in which it is moving."

Most of our programmatic apathy is the result of a stagnant educational system. While our technology has advanced five hundred years or so our education is stuck in the middle ages. Ever since then we have been taught generation after generation there is only one truth, one way of looking at things, instead of searching for new and better truths. Consequently, we have become over-specialized with only one perspective in mind.

If our country and the rest of the world is ever to become a society based on the principles of equality, our attitudes must change. People must be given an equal opportunity for higher learning, something the present education system in capitalist societies does not allow for. We must also be willing to give where there is need. To the people of the ghetto and slum areas this means a good education and humane living conditions. But before any of this can take place people must learn to look at the a lworld a lot - differently.

What people must learn to understand is that society will be whatever we make it to be. A utopian society is within our realm if our minds are open and we are willing to make sacrifices for it. But it's up to us, the educated, to break the bonds of apathy which grow stronger every day and continue to close our minds to new and better thought.

Disagreement with Hite's governance

To the Editor:

Although it comes as no big surprise to be misrepresented in the Collegian, I nevertheless feel it necessary to correct the impression left in your article on the Faculty Senate meeting (April 29, 1977).

It is true that I supported the background which Jon Hite had laid out, concerning the inefficiency and frustration of a so-called "governance system" which does little but divide each campus group from the others and lets the Administration in effect veto anything we come up with anyway.

However, I did disagree with Jon in that I did not think it was advisable to make this motion a 2-star governance item. Certainly, I think he has a valid point concerning the possible appropriateness of this action. (If the Faculty Senate, after this spring, isn't at least seriously questioning the governance system, then perhaps it is fitting that they should watch an important motion ground to nothing under the system, as Jon and I have many times.)

Nevertheless, it was with the strong hope that the Faculty Senate was moving beyond this, and wanted to be effective, that I opposed the starring of the motion. In such an important time, with the Administration turning hard-line in so many areas at once, it seemed possibly counter-productive to use a combersome process that would not permit even the requested face-to-face meeting until the end of October. (If Whitmore decided to allow the motion to go through!) I thought this tactical consideration was most important.

Law of supply and demand

By LAWRENCE J. MAGID

The administration's "five year plan" as written by Provost Puryear paints a dim future for higher education. The provost begins with a number of assumptions, including the statement that the "birth rate" is declining and thus the University will receive a lesser number of "traditional" students from the 18-22 year old age bracket.

It is true that the birth rate has gone down considerably and will continue to do so. But the "rate" of birth is the number of live births per one thousand women in the population. It does not measure the actual number of children that are born each year. According to recent figures from the National Center for Health Statistics, the actual number of live births is again on the rise and will continue on a small incline until 1980. When looking at the number of live births over the past 10 years, we see up and down fluctuations, but no rapid decline.

Population figures are even more revealing as are government projections for higher education enrollment. The Massachusetts Bureau of Regional Planning released a report in 1975 which indicted that the population of the bay state is likely to double between 1970 and 2020. Each year, Massachusetts can expect to be the home for at least a million additional people.

When looking at higher education figures, published by the National Center for Educational Statistics, we see that the number of students enrolled in degree granting programs in public higher education rose 224 per cent from the fall of 1973. The NCES has also tabulated projected enrollments through 1981. According to their data, higher education will experience a continued enrollment increase. By 1981, there will be almost a million more college students, than in 1977 with the largest gains in publical in the public institutions. Private education is expected to experience a small decline in enrollment.

The demand for higher education is clearly increasing. While it may be true that there will be a smaller supply of "18-22" year old students who enter the University directly from high school, the total number of students will grow as older people seek educational experiences. This is a trend that is nationally recognized and encouraged by many in higher education. Surprisingly, the UMass campus, according to figures released by the Non-Traditional Students Assembly, is composed of a majority of students above the age of 25 (51 per cent). This trend is growing.

Despite three years of shrinking resources, the student enrollments on the Amherst campus have increased slightly. And the Boston campus has experienced an even higher rate of growth. According to figures released by President Wood's office, the campus is not expected to experience a decline in the near future. Applications to the Amherst campus have remained steady, and the campus presently enrolls only 27 per cent of those who apply as undergraduates. Graduate enrollment accounts was only 13 per cent of those who apply. While some of these figures come from students rejecting UMass, others result from the University failing to accept all who apply.

The problems facing UMass were not created by Provost Puryear, President Wood, or even Michael Dukakis. They are facing public universities and colleges throughout the United States. The demand is high, the supply is low and the economic factor works against the students — especially those who can least afford it. What's tragic is that this economic "law" is not a natural law but one created by people in order to force up the cost of higher education and divert resources from the public sector to the private sector. Money interests are attempting to resolve the nation's economic crisis at the expense of people needing human services. And to the extent that Universities remain intact, their emphasis is being shifted towards vocational education. On the surface, it appears that this is in response to a student need. But historically these shifts have occurred periodically within public education as the State's way to adjust to the changing demands of business and industry. The rapid growth of higher education in the sixties, was determined in the fifties as government and business saw a need for increased numbers of engineers, trained technicians and social scientists. Now that the market has been saturated with these educated human resources, the trend is to lower the supply of educated personnel while maintaining a steady supply of trained technical people.

Concern for a lack of educational programming in the arts and humanities has been echoed in the conservative and business oriented U.S. News and World Report. In May 2, 1977 issue carries a full page article asserting that U.S. Colleges "have been turning out cultural barbarians". The article quotes administrators and faculty from eight colleges that are working to reverse the trend. What the article doesn't mention is that each institution quoted is a private elite college. Are arts and humanities to be reserved for those able to afford what may soon be double digit tuition bills? Unless there is a change in the trend of public education, the answer maybe a shameful yes.

Ahora's right to fight

To the Editor:

"People have different ways of responding to things that do not please them." In the case of Jan Van Tol, anyone not a white male was verbally assaulted by his so-called commentary of April 28. (The writer of this letter is a white male). Racial slurs were made against Japanese and Puerto Rican people. And Mr. Van Tol's personal insecurities led him to attack all organizations working to correct the sexual oppression capitalist America schools us into.

Organizing to fight for one's rights does not turn people into 'simpering wimps' as Van Tol states. Collective action against oppression is and always will be the correct way forward. Successful liberation struggles in Asia, southern Africa and Latin America are the positive proof of this.

Physical and cultural violence have always been the tools of a ruling class bent on maintaining its power and enlarging its profits. Ahora, an organization representing Latin American students on campus, works to educate all of us about the history of United States inviflicted poverty and racism in Latin America. The Student Senate decision to fund Ahora was indeed the correct one.

John Van Tol's ignorance of history is obvious. He should study and become aware of where physical violence comes from, which historical class originates it and profits from it. For an oppressed people to fight back against this violence is a right — a duty. And all progressive people here in the US should support that right. "El pueblo unido jamas sera vencido." "Independencia para Puerto Rico."

Only at UMass

Last Wednesday several thousand students lined the campus pond to watch a crazy person ride a bicycle up a ramp and into the water. The work of art evoked a round of applause from the appreciative audience, which soon thereafter dispersed so as to avoid having to involve itself in any of the dull Earth Day activities that were also going on.

The day before, several hundred students, faculty and staff gathered in front of the Student Union to hear rabble-rousing campus leaders speak, or in some cases shout, about the university's funding situation. One observer of the rally noted that most of the faces there were familiar ones — rally addicts who are definitely the ones who least need more rallying.

Saturday will be memorable (or un-memorable...?) to all Umies as it marked the passing of yet another Schlitz-a-rama. I like Schlitz best because it makes me think of Siglinda Steinfuller, the Dean of Beers, every time I drink it. There was also an occupation at Seabrook, New Hampshire, on Saturday, although I doubt it was attended by as many UMass students as was the 'Rama'. But that's an unfair comparison, since Seabrook is certainly farther away than a local frat. I think the true test would be to have Fate play in New Hampshire and serve beer there, and hold an occupation at Phi Sigma Kappa. No doubt the rally addicts would show up at PSK and the partying majority would lend their support to the anti-nuke movement.

Sunday was May day, which is billed by some as International Workers' Day — but we aren't workers so instead we get "May Day on the Hill", which is a preferable event anyway since you don't have to be a left-winger to get a good buzz on and listen to ten hours of local talent.

Friday was a good day too. Most students spent the day getting psyched for Schlitz-a-rama, and rightfully so, since it is a physically and mentally demanding day that requires a tolerant liver and a stoical bladder. Some students protested Union Carbide recruiters who came to campus because the corporation operates in South Africa. That's fine with me, but I hope they were ready for Schlitz-a-rama.

Speaking of South Africa... I was recently reminded of how overworked students are this time of year. The Committee for the Liberation of South Africa brought before my economics class a petition opposing the university's investments in corporations down there. I watched poor students, pitifully fatigued by paper-writing, read the petition and then regretfully pass it on, unable to sign with their cramped hands. Such a shame that sadistic professors can so easily stifle political expression.

I attended the Student Senate meeting Wednesday night, which is a good time everybody should check out before they graduate. These are the leaders we have armed with a copy of Robert's Rules of Order and sent into battle with the administrative powers that be. If you want to be a senator one day, get your own copy of Rules of Order and study up on 'points of information'. They are the Speaker's favorite and I'm sure they'll be yours too.

Last week I also noticed a new addition to the "In Poor Taste" collection — the Idi Amin tee-shirt. I guess Gary Gilmore tee-shirts are dead, so to speak.

I missed Schlitz-a-rama this year, but I reckon that will leave me in much better shape for Miller-a-rama when it rolls around. I also missed Seabrook, although I am attempting to organize an occupation of the UMass power plant — and considering the crap I saw pouring from its stack on Friday, that might not be an unpopular plot.

Actually, I spent my weekend trying to decide which event of the previous week was most entertaining — the Senate meeting, pond jump, or rally. One thing's for sure: Governor Dukakis would have had no trouble picking his two favorites.

L.I. Press loses freedom

By PAUL LOGUE JR.

"Freedom of religion, speech and press; and the right to assemble and petition for redress of grievances," so reads the Constitution of the United States of America, first Amendment of the "Bill of Rights".

Freedom of speech and press cannot function in the true sense if the owners of the production machines are tyrants. The factor of availability to the media by the common folk is quickly becoming an important issue in our country. Multi-national corporations and financial tycoons are fast becoming the sole owners of some major news media.

The Long Island Press, recently bankrupted, may be purchased by Mobil Oil. This company, which is moving its corporate offices from New York to Falls Church, a suburb of Washington, D.C., will be able to exercise their freedom of expression very explicitly. Not only will they have control over a major daily in the largest U.S. city, they have just a short hop to lobby to the Halls of Congress and a swing from the new Energy Office proposed by the Carter administration.

What significance does this have on the people of this valley and the readers of the Collegian and the Valley Advocate?

It certainly puts more pressure on the management and editors to sustain their autonomy and keep financially solvent, in order to insure the maximum amount of expression from the people in the community.

Advertisement is crucial to the production of the paper. Is it more important to sustain the life of the paper and be prostituted by large sexist advertisement by major corporations, or should the availability be curtailed so that operations can continue without subjecting its readers with blatant advertising entrapment?

It is a troubling question.

Civil Liberties are threatened when chains or conglomerates dominate the media available to the public.

Thomas Jefferson said, "If it were a question of having a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I would choose the latter-for newspapers are the guardians of all other liberties; without free reporting of events and free discussion of policies, democracy cannot endure."

When access to the public via newspaper editorial letters and commentary and freedom to report unbiased news, is denied — tyranny begins and the rest will fall with a thunderous jolt.

So it is something to ponder and question, since we have a lot of influence of the policy of our community through a unified voice.

What do you say?

Celtics eliminated

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Lloyd Free came off the bench to ignite a third quarter spurt yesterday that carried the Philadelphia 76ers to an 83-77 victory over Boston and eliminated the defending champion Celtics from the NBA playoffs.

The win gave the 76ers a 4-3 victory in the best of seven Eastern Conference Semifinals, enabling them to advance to the finals against the Houston Rockets.

Free, who missed his first six shots of the game, re-entered midway through the third period after the Celtics had rallied from a 50-45 halftime deficit to a 56-56 tie with 4:46 remaining. He finished the game with 27 points.

After another tie at 61, Darryl Dawkins hit two free throws and a basket and Free went to work. The 22-year-old guard hit a layup, a dunk, and a tap-in to complete a 10-2 tear to make the score 71-63 at the end of the quarter.

Free hit two more jumpers and Dawkins one as the 76ers stretched their lead to 12, 79-67 with 9:17 to play.

The Celtics had a number of opportunities to cut the lead but, in untypical fashion, they committed a number of turnovers and missed some easy shots.

Boston, which lost a seventh playoff game for only the second time in its history, was led by Jo Jo White with 17 points, all in the first half.

Both teams came out tight in the first half but White found the range in the second quarter, hitting 12 points to give the Celtics a 36-34 lead with 4:24 left in the half

Free then came to life, scoring eight of Philadelphia's points in the final 2:31 to give the 76ers their 50-45 halftime lead.

B's wipe 'em out

BOSTON (UPI) — Slick center Jean Ratelle scored the first goal and assisted on the second and Gerry Cheevers notched his seventh career playoff shutout last night to help the Boston Bruins win a spot in the Stanley Cup finals by eliminating Philadelphia 3-0.

Cheevers was outstanding, making 21 saves as the Bruins banished the Flyers in four straight games of their NHL semifinal series. Philadelphia's goalie Wayne Stephenson stopped 35 shots.

In the finals, the Bruins will meet the winner of the Montreal—New York Islanders series, which the Canadiens lead three games to one.

The Bruins, eliminated by the Flyers in five games during last year's semifinal series, got two third period goals from Don Marcotte

Oarsmen place second

By BILL CARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

The men's varsity crew team suffered its second straight loss Saturday on Lake Wickaboag in Ware, as it took second in a three boat race in which Coast Guard Academy won, and Williams College finished last.

Coast Guard, last year's defending Division II champion, was heavily favored for this race, as it had won the championship with ease last year and has had no trouble with Division II competition since.

A repeat of last year's victory at the Dad Vail Championships will exclude Coast Guard from any more Division II regattas and force it to compete at the Eastern Sprints with other EARC (Eastern Association of Rowing Colleges) like Harvard, MIT and BU.

In the varsity race, UMass took an early lead, as it came off the start at 40 strokes per minute. Within five strokes, both Coast Guard and Williams were trailing by one-half of a boat length.

After 20 strokes, UMass settled to a 36 for the body of the race. Coast Guard began moving ahead of Williams in the first 500 meters of the 2000 meter race, and caught UMass somewhere before the 500 meter mark. At 500 meters, it was Coast Guard over UMass by one-half of a length and UMass over Williams by one-half of a length.

Through the remainder of the body of the race, Coast Guard continued to open up distance on UMass and Williams fell off the pace even further.

With less than 500 meters to go, UMass raised the cadence to almost forty in an effort to catch Coast Guard, but it was to no avail. Coast Guard went on to finish 10 seconds ahead of UMass. Williams finished a length behind UMass.

Both junior varsity and the freshmen had a rough time with Coast Guard and Williams as they fell off the pace and trailed in last place in their respective races.

This evens the UMass record at 2-2. Next Saturday, both the men's and the women's crews travel to Worcester for the Worcester Invitational Regatta.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Monday, May 2 — Born today, you are one of those thoroughly practical persons whose ability to set aside all sentiment in favor of doing what is best under the circumstances should take him far in the bu thoroughly practical persons whose ability to set aside all sentiment in favor of doing what is best under the cirlow emotional issues to enter into your intellectual considerations, even though you realize that friendships cannot thrive on intellectualism alone. You have a broad creative streak in your nature, but you may well allow it to go, if not unnoticed, at least untapped -- which, in the long run, would leave you with a considerable part of your makeup unexplored, and thus unsatisfied.

Though you may lack intimate associates, you should never lack for companionship. You have a gift for lively conversation; more important, you have a knack for appearing to listen raptly to others as they speak, even when you really may not be listening at all. Clever, even to the point of shrewdness, you know how to please others without actually giving very much of yourself. On the other hand, there are times when your calculated "closeness" does not manage to fool the other fellow; at such times you may well find yourself looked down upon, perhaps even shunned.

You always have both feet on the ground. You can be counted upon to put to rout any flights of fancy that might threaten logic, good sense and practicality. You are never one to take refuge in dreams and, in fact, you have little patience with those who do. You believe in facing things as they are, regardless of how you would wish them to be; further, you believe in "making do" rather than risking loss for advancement or change.

Tuesday, May 3

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Disadvantages become advantages -- if you are wise enough to discover the key to turning the tables on defeat.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Lay your plans well early in the day. You should be able to outguess the competition and take the lead in a new project in the evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Take care that in making fun of another you don't set yourself up for being the subject of mockery later on. Look ahead to self-defense.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You can enjoy a few hours of personal experimenting on an intellectual level today. Don't allow another to discourage a search for truth.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Your stamp of approval is avidly sought today by one who admires you, yet who may have despaired of pleasing you. Be forgiving.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — There is much to be gained of a material nature by the Libra who is able to persuade another to surrender his ideas to someone else.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — This is a fruitful day, but also one during which great pains must be taken not to offend those who can make or break your future.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — The leisurely approach may gain you some peace of mind; however, it will hardly increase your profits. Strike a happy medium.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Leave the details of the present project to one who has worked along these lines before. Reconsider your overall goals for the immediate future.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) — The better able you are to express your thoughts, the more quickly you will be able to share material gains. Make demands tactfully.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The business at hand must not be allowed to get out of control. Otherwise, you will find yourself with more problems than you bargained for.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Try for originality when answering questions concerning your own future. If you echo others, you will be treated like others.

Trackwomen destroy records

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass woman's track team used Vermont and Rhode Island as an excuse, and a rather poor one at that to make an assault on the record book Friday, as the Minutewomen set three records and tied another en route to a 91-36-34 thrashing of UVM and URI, respectively.

UMass took the lead after the fourth event of the day, the 100 meter high hurdles, and never looked back. As expected, UVM and URI scored well in a couple of events each, but had no overall depth to make a contest of a meet which matched the three best teams in New England. The final outcome did a lot to heighten the Minutewomen's position as undisputed queens of NE track and field.

The women wasted no time as they raced to a win in the first event on the track, the 4 x 110 relay, in the record time of 50.1 seconds. It was the first of 11 firsts the women would take, out of a possible 15. Collaborating on the record breaking run were Nancy Cominoli, Cathy Contini, Cindi Martin, and Diane "the jet" Sealy.

Sealy was also involved in the next broken record, and a lot more directly, as she broke the record she set last week in the 440 with a 57.4 second clocking. Martin was just off the old mark in second at 58.9, and Carolyn Shea took fourth at 60.9.

The records continued to fall as Chris Perron loped over the 440 intermediate hurdles and was the first UMass woman ever to go under 68 seconds in that race. Ginger Bulman was second.

The record-tying performance came in the 100 yard dash, as the effervescent Cominoli streaked down the track to an 11.6 second time. Perron was fourth at 12.4 seconds.

Perron was the top individual point scorer for UMass, as she also won the 100 meter high hurdles in 15.2 seconds. Cominoli wasn't far behind in point production, as she was second in the high hurdles and fourth in the long jump to go along with her relay and 100 performances.

In the 880, Julie Lafreniere cruised through a quick 65 second first lap, then held that margin to the tape to win in 2:16.6. Sue Mulligan kicked off the last turn into second and held on at 2:20.5. Both times put them at an Eastern level of competitiveness.

In the 220, Martin, who was in on two relay wins, ran the curve hard and came home in front. in 26.9 seconds. Contini (27.5) and Shea were third and fourth, respectively.

The distance events offered a surprise, as Rhody freshwoman Patty Douglas held off Barb Callanan (5:17.6) to win in 5:15.8. Jo Chapman and Maggie Crowley finished third and fourth. The two milers ran uncontested, and Jane Welzel ran 11:23.1 to take first. Sue Swartz, Anne Bradshaw, and Monica Scott finished second-fourth.

The field events turned out to be nowhere near the liability they were expected to be. The Minutewomen took first in two of three weight events. Nancy O'Neal heaved the discus 107'3" to cop first, with Sue Budzynkiewicz (fourth in the shot put) second. Gail Emond (third in the shot) won the javelin with throw of 115'5".

The mile relay, often a meet deciding event, was anticlimatic in this one. The Minutewomen didn't treat it as such, though, as they ran a good time of 4:08. Shea, Contini, Martin, and Lafreniere teamed up for the win, with URI second.

Yawn, yawn... there oughta be a law. If it's evident the game is lost, the losing team should consent to forfeit the remainder of the game, and start another in the time left.

The UMass junior varsity lacrosse team dismantled Dean Jr. College, 14-2, Friday afternoon. Realistically, it was a victory for the Chimps while it had to be a moral victory for the Dean-men as they did get two goals.

Dean was only in the game in the early going, say, through the first quarter of play. But by halftime there were only two questions remaining: 1.) How much would the Chimps win by, and 2.) would Dean be shutout?

The Chimps passing has improved considerably since their season began. Passes have made it easier for them to move the ball up field quicker and get it to an open man faster for a good shot on goal.

Carl Leone put UMass on the scoreboard on a pass from Jim Draper at the 1:35 mark of the opening period. One minute later, an unassisted goal by Pat Grant (Dean goalie Steve Goodyear should've had it, but that's the breaks) made it 2-zip.

Brad Mitchel made it 3-0 with his shot into an empty net (no, Dean didn't pull its goalie for an extra skater or anything like that — Goodyear had just stepped out of his crease for a minute). Fifteen seconds later Mitchel scored again on a fast break pass from Bob Munro, making the score 4-0. And for all intents and purposes, that was the game.

In the second period the Chimps tossed in six more goals (two by Jeff Davis and Brad Mitchel each, one each by Leone and Munro) to race to a 10-0 score.

the fourth. Dale Stone's double scored Czerapowicz, who had opened the inning by walking and stealing second.

Two more runs came home in the fifth when Cullen blasted his second triple of the game to score Skribiski and scored on McEvilly's single. Stockley drove in the final run in the sixth with a base hit that sent Neal Lojek home.

Chadwick's home run in the top of the sixth spoiled Nigro's chances of a shutout.

"This week (four wins) revitalizes our hopes for post-season play," said Bergquist. "It all depends on how we do against UConn on Wednesday and Providence on Saturday."

Batswomen sweep Warriors

By MEL WEBSTER
Collegian Staff

The UMass softball team ran its winning streak to four Saturday, as it defeated Boston State in a doubleheader at NOPE Field bv scores of 2-0 and 6-3.

The Minutewomen, now 11-1, mustered only three hits in the first game against Boston's speedballer Patty Haas. Haas was practically untouchable, striking out six UMass batters in the contest.

With one out in the third inning Carol Bruce walked. She was sacrificed to second by Sue Peters and scored on a triple to center by Sue DiRocco. Rhonda McManus then singled to drive in DiRocco with the final run of the game.

Winning pitcher Gail Carter had (4-0) to work out of several jams, including a no-out bases loaded situation in the third inning. Two Warrior batters reached on errors and a third walked. The defense then tightened, and Chris Verdini made two good stops at third to force two runners at the plate.

"I was disappointed at the errors we made in the first game (five,) but the defense came through in the tight situations," UMass coach Dianne Thompson said.

Peters made the defensive play of the game in the sixth inning. Jean Goodwin led off with a single for Boston. Beth Sullivan then lined a shot to left centerfield that appeared headed for the gap. Peters came out of nowhere to make a great diving grab to save at least one run for the Minutewomen, possibly two.

Carter struck out four in the game and walked two. She allowed the Warriors only five hits, but Boston stranded 11 runners on base as it was aided by the Minutewomen errors.

Thompson was "very disappointed" at the bats in the first game, but they came alive in the second game. The Minutewomen rapped out ten hits, but left eight runners on base.

The second game started as if it was going to be a romp for UMass. The Minutewomen scored one in the first on a bunt single, a sacrifice, and a passed ball. They scored three more in the second on a run-scoring single by Bruce and a two-run triple by Peters.

Boston State came back in the top of the third with two runs as Pat Scorza and Jan Saulnier had run scoring singles. They added another in the fifth to make the score 4-3.

The Minutewomen had a great chance in the bottom of the fifth, but they left the bases loaded. They added two insurance runs in the sixth with only one hit, a single by Cheryl Meliones. Meliones showed good hustle on the bases as she beat the throw on an attempted forceout at second and then scored from third on a ground ball. Bruce scored the other run on a Warrior error.

Winning pitcher Gail Matthews (5-1) allowed seven Warrior hits while striking out four and walking four. "I wasn't satisfied with my pitching, but I was glad to get the 11th win," Matthews said.

Thompson said that the win was important for Matthews because she had been having a tough time lately and she needed a win to regain her confidence. Thompson singled out shortstop Sandy Lunt for her fine defensive play in the second game.

Penn State—frisbee champ

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

The Penn State University Ultimate Frisbee Team came from three goals behind in the last twelve minutes of play, after having lost a three goal halftime lead, to defeat Hampshire College 24-22 in the championship game of the Eastern Ultimate Frisbee Championships.

Penn State had upset Bucknell, the top seeded team in the 16 team tournament, in the semifinals Saturday night to gain a berth in the championship game. They will send their top twelve players to the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, California to meet a still to be determined Western champion in the World Frisbee Championships, August 24-29.

Hampshire had upset Glassboro 11-10 in the quarterfinals and Cornell 28-21 in the semifinals to get into the championship game. Glassboro was seeded third and Cornell was seeded second in the sixteen team field invited by the Ultimate Frisbee Players' Committee.

It was the second year in a row that Hampshire has lost a Championship game in a tournament it co-hosts with Amherst College and UMass. Hampshire lost to Rutgers in the National Championship's final game held here last year.

Penn State, a very physical, argumentative and competitive team, faced Hampshire, a less physical, easygoing and loose team, in what was billed as "a battle of philosophies" by Hampshire poet laureate Dave Baum. Baum had written short ballads prior to each of Hampshire's games to help psyche the team.

Andy MacGruer, Big Tall Rob, Walter White, and the myriad other Hampshire players responded with inspired Frisbee but could not stop the run and gun offense of Penn State.

Though Ultimate, a fast-paced Frisbee team game, has become much more competitive and less of an alternative sport in the last year of play, Hampshire had hoped to win while maintaining its "original Ultimate philosophy." The Hampshire fans were just as adament in their play for fun approach as the players were, and they frequently cheered, "Kill 'em with kindness."

While this year's sunny and warm weather was a vast improvement over last year's cold and rain, the debates about the nature of the game continue.

Many teams firmly oppose the playing of Ultimate for the sake of winning rather than for fun, which all maintain is the original philosophy of the game. The game has not progressed out of its "schizoid state" which Dan Roddick, the International Frisbee Associaton's director, first brought to the forefront during last year's championship.

There remain, however, a large number of Frisbee players who throw the disc for pure enjoyment as evidenced by the increased number of freestylers and the pick-up games where there were no arguments over rules or questionable catches.

Many Ultimate players spoke wistfully of the pickup games spectators had begun on fields adjacent to official games and when people freestyled, there were nothing but kind words for the throwers.

Gridders end camp; Dent, Fallon shine

If this game was a preview for anything to come in the fall, it promises to be an intensity-packed season for the UMass football team.

Coach Dick MacPherson's men did all they could to create some interest for the sun-seeking fans Saturday as they set forth a mixture of intensity, hard hits, picturesque jaunts, and balanced scoring. The result: a 22-21 victory for UMass over UMass...er, Red over White that is, as the gridders concluded three weeks of spring workouts with the annual intrasquad game.

Offense was the word of the day for UMass, and since scoring points was no easy task with last year's squad, the offenses — Dennis Dent and Mike Fallon in particular — provided some satisfying smiles.

Dent, who finds himself in the ominous role of replacing halfback Rich Jessamy, showed he can produce the breaker as he ran away for two 65-yard gains and a touchdown.

Dent was in White through Saturday, and thus his effort was in a losing cause as Red quarterback Mike Fallon, who figures to take over the quarterback position with Brian McNally's graduation, tossed two touchdown passes and threw for 106 yards.

"Considering all the hard hitting, I'm tremendously pleased with the overall performance of both squads," MacPherson said. "No one apparently was hurt, and that makes everything that much better."

MacPherson noted satisfaction with his running game as John Romboli (54-yards-14 carries), Chuck Balboni (48-6) and Hank Sareault (39-8) aided Dent with fine efforts.

Two of MacPherson's top receivers, co-captain John Gladcuhk and Kevin Cummings, both vital in last year's passing game, sat out the contest with injuries.

September 10 seems a long way off, but UMass proved that it is anxious and waiting for that opening date with Army. March on, men. March on.

Gorillas split weekend pair

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team used six third-period goals to break open what had been a close game and defeat the University of New Hampshire, 19-9, Saturday at Boyden Field.

With the score 9-7 in favor of UMass midway through the third, Garber's Gorillas ran in five straight markers before the period could mercifully come to an end.

Attackman Kevin Patterson (three goals, one assist) began the festivities for UMass when a series of three quick passes found him staring into the yawning mouth of an empty net. Seven minutes, 43 seconds and three goals later, attacker John Reardon cut across in front of UNH goalie Dave Daniels and zipped home the Gorillas' 14th goal just before the period ended. Although Reardon's tally gave UMass an insurmountable seven goal lead, the contest had really ended two goals previously.

With UMass two men down, clinging to an 11-7 plurality, it looked as if the Wildcats of New Hampshire would once again claw their way back into the game. But thanks to some tenacious defense sprinkled generously amoungst a bit of outstanding netminding by Don "Duck" Goldstein, the UNH man-up crew came up empty.

But Vin LoBello didn't.

Less than half a minute later the Gorilla midfielder took a pass from linemate Steve Pappas and issued the back-breaker off a fast clear-out.

UMass got off to a slow start as Ed Richardson, New Hampshire's leading scorer, and midfielder John Bryan staked the Wildcats to a quick 2-0 lead, thanks to some sloppy play by the Gorillas.

"It was tough getting out of the locker room," lamented UMass coach Dick Garber. "The team was physically and emotionally spent after that loss to North Carolina (12-10) on Friday."

The Gorillas slipped on a few less banana peels as the first quarter came to an end, scoring twice in the last 30 seconds to even the count at 4-4.

UMass took the lead for the first time in the game when defenseman Ken Michaud rushed the full length of the field and fired a high longshot past a surprised Daniels.

"Ken played a super game," praised coach Garber. "He was all over the field — like Bobby Orr used to move in hockey."

Jeff Spooner scored to give the Gorillas a two-goal cushion, but UNH attackman Roger Rydell got both of them back before the period was half over. Still, UMass managed to take an 8-6 lead to the looker room.

"At halftime, I thought we had a real good chance to win, said UNH's Daniels. "Our defense never came upon an attack like UMass'."

On Friday, however, North Carolina's defense was equal to the task as UNC defeated the Gorillas, 12-10. Though it was outplayed in the first half, the Tarheels played opportunistically and held a 6-5 edge at the second checkpoint. They scored three more times before UMass could find the ned once in the third quarter, and forced the Gorillas to play catch-up the rest of the game.

UMass almost did catch the Tarheels, though, tallying three unanswered times during the final stanza to close the gap to one at 10-9.

"When we were rallying in the fourth quarter, I really thought we were gonna win the game," said Garber. "In fact, if you came up to me, I would' put money on it." Luckily, Jimmy the Greek wasn't at the game.

the loss to UNC will put a serious crimp intthe Gorillas' playoff hopes, but UMass will, as the old saying goes, never say die.

"If we win the rest of our games, we're the New England champs," prognosticated Garber. And if we're New England champs, the pollsters gotta think of us.

Trackmen set marks

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Sophomore and senior All-American cross country runners Mike Quinn and John McGrail smashed UMass distance records at the Penn Relays this weekend as they scored a fourth and fifth place respectively in the 5,000 meter and 10,000 meter races.

Quinn battled with another All-American, John Flora of Northeastern, before settling for a fourth place time of 13:59. In the event held Thursday night, Penn State's Paul Stemmer set a meet record with a time of 13:52.4, snapping the mark set last year by more than seven seconds. Quinn was an estimated 30 yards behind Stemmer as the event was run in rainy weather.

McGrail broke the 1975 UMass record formerly set by former graduate Randy Thomas with a third place time of 28:32 in the event equivalent to six miles and 380 yards. Strangely enough, Thomas, representing the Greater Boston Track Club finished just ahead of McGrail as he battled Curt Alits of Army before succumbing to second place.

UMass' other five participants did not fare as well as junior Frank Carroll fell during the first half mile and did not re-enter the race. The two-mile relay team of co-captain Jim Hunt, freshman Jeff King, Steve MacDougall, and junior John Richards finished fifth in their heat and did not advance in the semifinals.

Hunt, leading off, sprinted into the lead with a 1:52 opening half, giving the baton to Richards. Richards (1:58) held the lead for the first quarter-mile before falling behind three positions. MacDougall (1:58) held the position for his leg and freshman King finished off the relay with a 1:52 split. King re-establishes his own freshman half-mile record with his performance.

Batmen go .500 mark

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

Don't count the UMass baseball team out yet.

The Minutemen kept their hopes for post-season play alive on Saturday by sweeping a double-header from Rhode Island, 8-3, 6-1, at Earl Lorden Field, behind the strong pitching of Jeff Reardon and Tom Nigro. The batsmen are finally over the .500 mark with a record of 15-14.

"It's been a long struggle, but we're glad to be over the .500 mark," said an elated Dick Bergquist after the game. "This is the best we've played all year. Our pitching and defense were especially sharp."

The Minutemen took advantage of two four-run innings and some sloppy fielding by URI in the first game.

The Rams took an early 1-0 lead in the second inning when right fielder Keith Perron opened the frame with a single. Perron then stole second and scored on Bob Messier's single up the middle.

But the Minutemen came up with four unearned runs in their half of the second. John Czerapowicz reached on an error by shortstop Steve Galuska and later raced to third when pitcher Jack Bannon threw the ball in the outfield when he attempted to pick him off. After a walk to Paul Abramowicz, Neal Lojek laced a double to score Czerapowicz. Mike Stockley then singled home two runs and scored on Ed Skiribiski's base hit.

URI made it a 4-3 ballgame with two runs in the third but the Minutemen sent nine men up to the plate in the fifth inning and came up with four insurance runs.

Stockley lead off the inning with a double and ended up on third base on a Skribiski single. Jim Cullen drove in a run with a double. Mike McEvilly then blasted a triple off the right field wall to score Skribiski and Cullen, and came home with the fourth run of the inning on a wild pitch by Bannon.

Reardon had got himself into a jam in the top half of the fifth when he gave up a single to John Avento and walked Bob Messier with one out. But the senior right hander got out of it when he got Steve Chadwick to bounce into a 6-4-3 double play to end the inning.

In the second game, URI errors again helped the Minutemen jump out to an early lead.

With two out in the third, Stockley reached when third basemen Mike Chadwick bobbled his grounder and went to third when pitcher Rick Mundy overthrew first on a pickoff play. Stockley came on to score when Skribiski hit a grounder to Chadwick, who threw the ball away for his second error of the inning. Cullen, (3-3 in the game), tripled to center to score Skribiski.

The Minutemen added a run in Tarheel win throws playoff hopes akilter

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

What was billed as "lacrosse weekend" instead threw the UMass lacrosse team's chances for post-season competition into the twilight.

The split over the weekend made the Gorilla's record 7-3, but the important game was the 12-10 loss to North Carolina, which was the tenth ranked team nationally. Before the game, UMass was ninth nationally and only six points out of seventh place. The loss to NC will cost UMass points in the poll even though the win over New Hampshire Saturday (19-9) will dull the effect slightly.

What hurts more than the loss is that when the vote does come out, it will not take into consideration how close the game was.

"If we played each other ten times," coach Dick Garber said after the game, "they'd win five and we'd win five."

Garber said that two main reasons why the Minutemen lost was in poor shooting and in aggressive manner with which Ta heels played.

We were trying to bounce shots, but they weren't going low enough," Garber said. "We were shooting at the stick side and about waist high."

For the game, UMass was only outshot by three, 48-45.

"They beat us to the ball and on a couple of hard runs," the coach said. "They controlled the face-offs (18-7) and even when we got the ball, they took it away from us."

This showed up in a 17 minute span, from the end of the second period until the end of the third, where UMass went without a score. During that time, the tally went from 5-3 Minutement to 9-5 Tar Heels.

Part of the problem was Jeff Spooner, who aggravated a muscle pull in his leg during the contest. The team's leading scorer could only manage two assists on the day.

Taking up the scoring slack were attackmen Kevin Patterson and Micky Menna. Patterson had four goals and Menna had two goals and two assists. Attackman-midfielder Norm Smith (2 goals, 1 assist), midfielders Steve Pappas (1 goal, 1 assist), Mike Lettera (1 goal), and Randy Krutzler (1 assist) rounded out the scoring.

The Savage of the Provost:

Ritual Murder Among the Humanists

UMass Amherst Provost Paul L. Puryear

Mike Thelwell Afro-American Studies

It was indeed a very sorry exercise, as sorry as gully dirt and just about as worthless. The meeting at which members of the faculty of Arts and Sciences, of which I have great good fortune to be a member, voted "to express no confidence in Provost Paul Puryear and to ask for his removal from office forthwith", was a great deal less than has been reported in the press. And a great deal more.

It was less than the significant political event suggested by headlines which read "Cas asks Puryear to quit" since the College of Arts Sciences (CAS) did no such thing. There are some 800 members of the CAS faculty, only 224 of them voted for that motion. Which is not to suggest that had the full faculty been present the vote would necessarily have been different.

Indeed, in the atmosphere that prevailed in Hasbrook 20 — converted for the evenings · entertainment from a university classroom to a bull-ring, or more aptly a bear-baiting pit — a vote to draw and quarter the provost, burn the remains and scatter, the ashes on the wind would not have seemed excessive. It was a symbolic gesture, a minority vote of no binding effect which is real political terms was worth something less than LBJ's proverbial "bucket of warm spit".

But, this is not to suggest that there was no significance to what took place. No indeedy, that would be to ignore the importance of primitive passions and the blood rituals through which they are expressed. What we witnessed was ritual murder, an exorcism in academic robes, as though by the sheer weight and volume of insult and abjuration they would drive out the devil and purge the kingdom. And beneath the veneer of process, the ritual or Robert's Rules there throbbed a current of mindless frenzy like a gang of apes flailing away with clubs at a snake.

Being without the politial power — and I would argue the legal or moral basis — for removing the provost from office — they apparently sought to insult him there from.

And in pursuit of this novel and brutal strategy they staged an ordeal by insult and public himiliation. This aspect was not at all symbolic. It was a real and as ugly as a mugging in a dark alley. A coldly deliberate, purposeful assault on a man's spirit, it was made no less shameful, no less vicious, by the earnest unctuousness of the oratory that accompanied much of it. But only the leaders bothered with the pretense, the pack yelping in their wake was more direct. They made short shrift of any illusion of process or fairness by cutting off any discussion they didn't like and generally bogarting the procedings with a most transparent and indecent haste.

Like so much else in the world of the bourgeois intellectual it was mostly playacting, language, form and style for its own sake. And even that was less than impressive. It was opened with a rhetoric that was as ponderous and mock-heroic as it was earnest. The speaker, visage at once stern and sad, voice grim and trembling with lofty purpose, was every inch the reluctant warrior driven once again to painful and unpleasant service, striding manfully once more into the breach with duty like a great vulture sitting heavily on his right shoulder and righteousness on his left. it was hard to say which booth one was listening to, David of the faculty senate or William the Shakespearean.

It would all have been infinitely more moving had there really been barbarian hordes at the doors threatening to rape "the life of the mind", pillage "the spirit of a great university" and worse burn the articles of governance. Or if one did not know tha the most self-righteous, smug and unctuous of the lot was himself a failed candidate for the position of provost. I am talking about Robert Paul Wollf of the philosophy department, lest there be any doubt.

What did it mean, this spiteful little paroxysm of petty sadism? For what fearsome spectar was the provost made surrogate, the shadow of which summoned as though to holy war the ageing heroes wheezing and creaking under their rusty armor and ponderous rhetoric?

It was nothing as simple and domestic as racism. As an explanation that is much too facile and probably not accurate for most of them. Which is to their credit although there is about good old-fashioned, up-front, down-home racism, something that is in comparision almost refreshing. The pressures, which one fears were not dissipated by the little tantrum on Tuesday come from something more exotic, the curious world-view and more importantly the strange self image of a certain type of bourgois intellectual. The provost was the representative, in their thinking, of forces which threaten certain deeply held, but fanciful and elitist notions of what constitutes a "distinguished" university, and particularly their place in it.

In their view they are an elect, "an aristocracy not of birth but of spirit," the brilliant and crowning product of cumulature centuries of western civilization and intellectual evolution. As the custodians of the sacred vaults in which repose the wonders of pure science; the mysteries of Art; the total creative achievement of the human spirit, they are the very soul of the university. Any "distinction" or "greatness" that accrue to the university is a function of their presence here.

From them, the professional schools are crude imposters reeking of base materialism and "vocationalism". They are necessary concessions to the vulgar spirit of the times which are at best to be tolerated and patronized like bumptuous poor relations who invite themselves to dinner, one of life's little embarassments to be endured with as good grace as is possible.

Similarly, the administration is the class enemy, a collection of bureacratic managers and technological zombies who see the world not as a lyric poem but a computer print out wrapped in red tape. They do not ponder eternal verities but think about cost effectiveness. The servants and agents of the technological juggernaut flattening everything in its path, the administration must be zealously watched lest they flatten the fragile edifices of reason and high culture under the leveling heel of mindless technology.

In this view they (the faculty) are nothing less than the very guardians of the cultural, aesthetic and moral traditions of western civilization. A distinguished university is one in which this view of their role and worth predominates and is given the appropriate respect. I am not too sure that such a view is at the center of any serious modern institution of higher education, but to our colleagues Harvard is thought to represent such a presence in the world. If only the society were more civilized, that is to say more perfect in its values and priorities, (or if they were at Harvard) they would enjoy the wealth, prestige and proximity to power that is their due. It would be heresy to suggest, as I am here doing, that a major part of Harvard's luster is its record as the most successful vocational training center in the country. In any event one speaker at the meeting was talking, and in dead earnest of "the Harvard of Western Massachusetts," as a legitimate identity to which the university should aspire. It is hardly necessary, nor do we have space, to explore the levels of confusion and niavete, not to say snobbery and false consciousness, that is implicit in that kind of statement.

Over the last six or so years this fatuous selfimage has been bat-

Organizing Mass Movement

"Black Community Control of Schools" as a realizable goal to begin rectifying the attacks against our people in the educational sphere and as necessary to upgrade our education.

Hopefully this slogan would be raised not simply because we do not like white people, an attitude which, for all its justification has never solved a problem. Hopefully this slogan would be in recognition of the real purpose of education, and the fact that, to the degree possible, Black education should serve our own purposes, the purposes of liberation, independence, and development but more importantly, we would also, hopefully, see such a slogan as being in correspondence with our colonial analysis and therefore contributing to the actual process of decolonization.

Therefore, we would never initiated a march against "racism" as we saw occur right here in Boston on several occasions, but we would march for control of our schools, a march which would be based on the same obvious contradictions which led to the march against "racism."

When we march against "racism" we inadvertantly march against all the white people in Boston, thereby liquidating the primary role of the U.S. North American ruling class and state, and we also obscure an important contradiction of imperialism, one which is at the heart of the antagonistic attitude held by North Americans against African people around the question of education.

That contradiction is the necessary concentration of capital and power with the increasing development of imperialism, with the power generally located in the executive branch of the government. This concentration of power moves to assume control of virtually every state-related institution in the country, including educational. As the government moves to assume more control of these institutions it causes for great alienation of the U.S. North American people from the institutions which used to serve them. More than anything, the anti-busing movement is an expression of that alienation.

Once we understand this it seems logical that we do not unite with our colonialist masters, either of the right or left, by striking out at the U.S. North American working people, whose actual power is revealed by their inability to determine which schools their children will go to or whether they will go to school with African students.

For the North American Left this error has grave consequences for the development of the struggle for socialist revolution in this country. When they identify the hatred, anguish, and social upheaval of the North American people around the education question as simply "racism," they liquidate the contradictions of imperialism. When they then march against "racism," although they call themselves supporting Black people, they actually align themselves with a sector of the U.S. North American ruling class against the interests of North American workers.

Were they true socialists, they would unite with our call for Black community control of schools, and raise the slogan themselves for worker-control of schools in the North American community.

The Black Community Control slogan would clearly show the North American workers that it is not African people who are taking their schools from them, thereby helping them to recognize their own class enemy, while the workers' control slogan would isolate the right-wing anti-busing forces like Louise Day Hicks, who are also opposed to worker control of schools.

A struggle against "racism," or for integration is a struggle for admittance into the system, and therefore leaves the system generally unattacked as it must necessarily presuppose the system to be worthy of our desire for admittance. Such a struggle is actually a vindication, and therefore, an inadvertant perpetrator of the system, while a successful struggle against colonialism will mean the certain death of this system.

Having the strategical objective of winning support for the Independence position within current U.S. borders will help to make a distinction between the North American people and the ruling class sering state. It will obviously serve to place our politics in objective alignment with the situation as it is in the real world.

I believe we will have less difficulty in recognizing the tactical advantage of including within this strategic objective the necessity of winning the support of other subject, oppressed, and colonized nationalities. For it is within this sector within current U.S. borders where the contradictions are always sharpest, and where the cutting edge of the internal struggle against U.S. imperialism lies.

But there are other strategical objectives our movement must keep in mind while doing political work, including building mass movements. One of these objectives must be the creation of dual, or competing, or contending, governmental powers. That is to say, to the degree possible our movement must assume the real and actual responsibilities of government for our people. This cannot be done by proclamation, but must be done, over a period of time as the people gain confidence in us, through actual practice.

If we can do this in practice we will have plunged a wooden stake into the heart of the imperialist blood-sucking vampire of the world. For it is not only true that U.S. bourgeoise democracy, which is capable of being so defined, because of its ability to obscure its class and colonial dictatorship, cannot exist in the face of such mass rejection, but to the degree we can effectively build competing state power, we actually negate the power of the U.S. North American state.

Such a strategy is not new. The power of the Soviets leading to the Russian revolution, and the creation of liberated territory in China, Cambodia, Viet Nam, and various places in Africa, served the same purpose I am now advocating as a strategical objective for our movement.

Another strategical objective must be to expose the oppressive nature of the U.S. government, thereby constantly undermining it within and without the current U.S. borders. The U.S. government must be exposed as an imperialist danger to the entire world which practices colonialism within its own borders and Puerto Rico, and which is ever-engaged in unremitting, though generally unrecognized, class war against the U.S. North American people, and all workers.

We must also have as a strategical objective the winning of international support for the Independence position, thereby contributing to international diplomatic encirclement of the U.S. All the progressive peoples and countries of the world are in unity with the aspirations of colonized peoples to win our liberation. This fact makes it necessary for even the U.S., which is the chief prop for the reactionary and colonial powers in the world, to pay lip services to the aspirations of peoples for independence.

Today the forces of anti-colonialism and liberation are the true makers of history as we deliver the sharpest, most devastating blows to imperialism hourly, throughout Africa, in the Middle East, Asia and Latin America. Although the struggle for African liberation and political independence has always been an integral part of the worldwide anti-imperialist, anti-colonial struggle, it has often, and especially most recently, not been recognized as such.

Therefore, in attempting to realize the strategical objective of winning international support for the Independence position we will meet many initial roadblocks. Some of these difficulties will result from genuine ideological differences within the international community with our Independence position. But many, and perhaps most, will stem from an opportunist interests by some international forces to establish and maintain hegemony over our movement through U.S.-based proxy organizations for their own narrow nationalist interests.

Whatever the reasons for the initial resistance of international support for our Independence position, it must be overcome, and it will be overcome to the extent we realize the strategical objective of winning our people here, in this country, to the position of Independence. No matter how ideologically committed to another definition of our struggle, or how opportunistic some international forces may be, they will be unable to deny the obvious political conclusions demonstrated by the masses of U.S. domestically colonized Africans.

International support for our Independence position will provide other bonuses for us, not the least of them being world acceptance of our right and need to have an African People's Liberation Army.

Today Assata Shakur and Sundiata Acoli, two revolutionaries who represent the best of our movement, languish in North American prisons, serving life sentences. In all of the progressive news articles we have seen concerning their cases it has been necessary to write that Shakur and Acoli are "allegedly" members of the Black Liberation Army.

In all their court struggle it has been necessary to attempt to prove them "not guilty" of killing North American policemen who act as a colonial army in our community. A victory in winning international support for the Independence movement will end this. A victory here will show why it may be sometimes, politically necessary and quite proper to shoot and kill policemen and others who stand in

On the Black Student Movement

NUMMO NEWS SERVICE

Brother Don Freeman, in his article "Black Youth and Afro-American Liberation" in the fall, 1964 edition of Black America describes the conference: "May 1-3, 1964, the Afro-American Student Movement representing young Nationalist groups and tendencies throughout the North and South, convened in Nashville, Tennessee, to form a Black Nationalist Youth Movement. The impotence of traditional or "bourgeois" nationalism was examined. The delegates agreed that the traditional nationalist approach of rhetoric rather than action was ineffectual because it posed no progmatic alternative to "bourgeois reformist" civil rights activities... Nationalist demands for an autonomous Black American economy were termed bourgeois due to failure to differentiate such an economy from capitalism and unfeasible because of the white and Jewish capitalists' intention to perpetuate "suburban colonialism" their exploitation of Black Ghettos. The consensus was that Afro-Americans must control their neighborhoods, but the realization of aim necessitates, in Rev. Albert Cleage's terms, a "strategy of chaos" involving more devastating civil disobedience that the kind undertaken by the established reformist groups."

The participants supported Minister Malcolm (X) Shabazz's contention that it is erroneous to define Afro-America's fight as "civil rights" and protest exclusively in Congress; instead, we should utilize the UN Declaration on Human Rights and petition in the United Nations for "human rights."

"The young nationalist insisted that prerequisite to a genuine Black revolution is a fundamental "Cultural Revolution" — "Re-Africanization" repudiates decadent bourgeois, materialistic values and the "Rat Race" or "pathological" egoism and individualism inherent in American society. It embraces a humanism derivative to the African heritage which exalts authentic, intellectual, and spiritual development and "Communalism" or cooperation rather than exploitation. "Re-Africanization" is preferable to American materialism as a source of cultural values. Afro-Americans must know their authentic history in Africa and America in order to demolish the "psychological rape" or inferiority instilled by American "indoctrination." The Afro-American's self-image and the conception must be revolutionized to foster a collective ethnic identity" as a unique Black People before Black Nationalism can emerge triumphant... The assembled nationalists asserted that young nationalists are the vanguard of a Black Revolution in America, but they must create 1) an organizational apparatus to "translate" Nationalist ideology into effective action; this requires Black financing to insure Black control; 2) dedicated, disciplined, and decisive youth cadres willing to make the supreme sacrifices to build and sustain a dynamic Nationalist Movement." 5

The conference stimulated nationalist cells in the North and polarized the contradictions between white and Black field workers within SNCC. The conference sent organizers into Mississippi to work with SNCC and to begin to build self-defense units. Greenwood, Miss. became a base for revolutionary Black nationalist activity as the organizers worked with the Black field workers bringing them over to the casue of Black nationalism, rather than the goal of integration. A showdown occurred in Greenville, Miss., in May at the Mississippi SNCC staff meeting. The brothers from the field staff revolted against the SNCC hierarchy then represented by Bob Moses and the white radicals.

SNCC began to involve large numbers of white students in the movement in the summer of 1964. Their involvement led to their radicalization which later they developed into the anti-war student movement.

"The crucial milestone of SNCC's road to radicalism was the Freedom Summer of 1964. Freedom Summer grew out of a remarkable mock election sponsored by SNCC in the autumn of 1963. Because the mass of Mississippi's black population could not legally participate in choosing the state's governor that year. Robert Moses conceived a freedom election to protest mass disfranchisement and to educate Mississippi's blacks to the mechanics of the political process. COFO organized a new party called the Mississippi Freedom Democrats, printed its own ballots, and in October conducted its own poll. Overwhelming the regular party candidates, Aaron Henry, head of the state NAACP and Freedom Democratic nominee for governor, received 70,000 votes, a tremendous protest against the denial of equal political rights. One reason for the success of the project was the presence in the state of 100 Yale and Stanford students, who worked for two weeks with SNCC on the election. SNCC was sufficiently impressed by the student contribution to consider inviting hundreds more to spend an entire summer in Mississippi. Sponsors of this plan hoped not only for workers but for publicity that might at last focus national attention on Mississippi.

Toward Tenants Power

by Queen Mother Moore

I am deeply honored to be extended this invitation to be with you on the occasion of this historic conference of the National Tenants Organization. It was here in the city of New Orleans where I spent my childhood and received my consciousness at an early age.

Many have asked me exactly how and when I started out in the struggle. At a very tender age, I was told by my grandmother how my grandfather was lynched in Jeanerette, La., leaving her with five little children who had to flee for their lives, leaving their farm with only the clothing they had on their backs, never to see their home again. Also, I can remember the terror which struck our neighborhood one night when I was around six years old. Looking through shutters, I saw a barbarous lynch mob in New Iberia dragging the body of a black man, tied behind a wagon, with his head bumping up and down on a crusty road.

Therefore, seeing you here at this Conference is heartwarming and gives us the assurance that our little children shall not be forced to endure such gruesome horrors!!

As we are gathered here, we are meeting in one of the most critical periods in history, both nationally and internationally. Throughout the world people are struggling to throw off the shackles of their oppression in Asia, Africa, Central and South America.

Freedom is the cry and the common denomination which is binding the people in a common cause and in sympathy with each other. It is that common bond among tenants that has brought this Conference together and which manifests itself into tenant power. The struggle is between the haves and have nots, the exploiters and exploited. Those who rule and those who are ruled. Those who govern and those who are governed. The landlords and the tenants!

As the economic crisis continues and the unemployed roles increase, as recent U.S. census figures show an increase of 2.5 million since 1975. Add to that the eight or nine per cent who have been unemployed prior to 1975.

However, all of us realize that this does not include the chronic or hard core unemployed who are no longer able to look for work due to a lack of clothing and car fare.

We must decide on what side shall the scales of justice balance. While millions are jobless and those that are underprivileged are filling the prisons to the brim. Where schools, hospitals, and day care centers are closing as prices and taxes are far above the means of the people. We must decide how long will we allow the destiny of our lives to be in the hands of corrupt politicians and greedy landlords who are fattening their bank accounts at the expense of the people.

Imagine if you please, a so called advanced country like the U.S.A., who claims it's mission on earth is to civilize the rest of the world, but cannot provide adequate housing and jobs for its own people.

They have allowed the inner cities to become ravished and in New York City, where they are taking over boarded up houses; repairing them for the people. That must become the new order of the day. Now that they have instituted their political genocidal plan, copied from South Africa's system of apartheid, we have no other choice. It's either us or them. You must awake to the reality of your potential political power as leaders in the tenants movement. The mantle of leadership falls heavily upon your shoulders. No longer can you remain simply a leader for tenant's problems alone, you must now give total political leadership in your communities. We must establish tenant training classes and send every potential leader to school for at least one month, for intensive study. We must be taught how to study, how to analyze, how to scrutinize, how to mobilize, how to develop strategy, the art and science of people's struggle, and how to alleviate the problems, how to defeat their inept corrupt candidates and elect yourselves to represent the people's interest.

The people are at the mercy of the wolves. Only you stand between them and total annihilation. I repeat, you must become the community politicians and elected officials.

You must set up captains in every house and block. You must have meetings of captains on how to improve their work and to discuss problems and current events. Then every captain is duty bound to call tenant house meetings to report what the captains' directives are, and to discuss current events. Only by becoming knowledgeable and intelligent can we master our destiny. A true leader commands respect by the manner, integrity, and dependability eminating from him or her. It is not enough to know every one in your house, but also every one in your block.

In your districts, you have people of every political persuasion, every religion, union and fraternal order — your influence could be tremendous. The landlords know it; they know that you are a sleeping giant, and if awakened to the knowledge of your full potential, it would spell their doom. As leaders, you must also know how many are working or unemployed; who are hungry; how many youth, what's happening to them; what is being taught in the schools to your children. What about the elderly? Who protects the women and elderly when they want to go out at night? Do we have committees interested in the plight of our youth who now suffer benign neglect. Who are those in prison in your district? What about their families? Make that your business.

Our youth must know that we care about them. They must be organized and taught to lead struggles for their demands.

Although tenants have come a long way from the days when landlords could set the furniture in the street without due notice, we're still meeting in one of the most crucial periods of history for tenants. We've suspected all along that the hue and cry for urban renewal; now it has been made abundantly clear. The Master Plan was revealed in Washington, as reported in the New York Times, September 28, 1976 which headlined "Shift of Poor Urged Out of Center Cities." Paul R. Porter, a retired industrialist, proposed to transform the decayed and obsolete inner cities into attractive neighborhoods to attract the suburbanites back from their white flight and remove the blacks and poor. The New York Times — "The hearings on the future of the cities were convened by Representative Henry S. Reuss, Chairman of House Committee on Banking Currency and Housing.

"But what about the city political base built up by minorities, particularly Blacks?" asked Representative Farran G. Mitchell, of Maryland.

You, the delegates to this Tenants Conference, must supply the answer to that question. You who have built up a power base in your communities, represent a political force that can repel any effort to remove tenants away from their power base. We must not continue to allow the landlords to let the houses deteriorate, while the people suffer for lack of housing. If the landlord refuses to fix them, follow the example of "Fightback" desolate. As I see it, only power in the hands of the people can help us now!

We have tried everything from sit-ins, pray-ins, talk-ins, and mass demonstrations that have fallen on deaf and insensitive ears. The powerful landlords know that their interests are not threatened as long as we can be pacified with the crumbs from their fancy tables. While we have tried all these other means of voicing our discontent, there is still another powerful weapon that we have not used; that is the power of the ballot. Tenants Power. With the power of the ballot property utilized in our hands, no longer could we be overcrowded into slums.

The time for rhetoric is over. We have spent ten years of rhetoricalizing and marching. It is time now to organize for action. Jobs and job training in skills; electronics; sanitation, renovation, health care and food production. With the ballot in our hands, we would no longer tolerate the likes of a Jerry Ford, the prodigy of Richard Nixon, who spent twenty seven years in Congress without initiating one bill in behalf of the people. And two years as President, where he not only pardoned the criminal Richard Nixon, but he used his veto power 58 times to stop the enactment of any social legislation. Under Ford's administration, we have lost all the gains made during the Civil Rights struggle. Now he (Ford) is pleading for our votes unashamedly. Even crying crocidile tears around FHA, pleding so called reforms, while at the same time, introducing fraudulent section 8.

Under the Ford—Nixon Administration, the elderly and disabled face a rise of 19 per cent in medicare payments. And they will have to pay $124.00 before entering the hospital.

I have not yet talked to Mr. Carter, nor have I heard his program to put power in the hands of the poor. Mrs. Carter asked me one day while campaigning in Harlem if, "I was supporting her husband." I asked her, "If her husband was supporting us." We must know and not take anything for granted, ever.

The burdens of the rich belong on the shoulders of the rich. While they're complaining about the high cost of welfare for the poor spent in deprived communities, Ford's Henry has found 250,000 white exploiters in Zambique so called (Rhodesia) to add to the relief rolls. All the minority usurpers who have lived by sucking the blood of the Africans (as all vampires do) will now receive Reparations from this government just as they gave the slave holders Reparations in the South.

History repeats itself, and once again the brutal slavers will be paid to the tune of about twenty thousand dollars each, to allow the African six million majority to rule their own country. On the other hand, we have not heard of how much was offered the six million Africans in Reparations for their labor and wealth spent enriching the 250,000 scavenger blood sucking whites. And come to think about it, what about the free labor extracted from the 40 million blacks in the U.S.A.? The lives lost; the cruelties suffered; eyes and teeth knocked out; limbs severed, men burned at the stake; women raped; families sold one from the other. What about us, Jerry Ford. And let's hear from you Jimmy Carter. What about Reparations. No longer do we intend to scramble like dogs over your crumbs. We want our just due. Upon our backs this economy was built. While no amount of money can ever adequately repay us, Reparations would bring the real crime before the people and place the guilt where it belongs. They know that Reparations is past due us. That is why they come up with their peace meal schemes of feeding white superior ideology to the middle class and poor whites to cover their crime, and make them forget their plights.

The nerve of them executing black men for framed up charges of rape, while millions of our people carry their disease ridden, polluted blood as evidence of their rape upon our young girls and women.

We say defeat Ford at all cost. We must at the same time understand that only when political power is in the hands of the people will we be able to enjoy the fruits of our labor.

Mr. Carter must be made to understand that tenants must run the Department of Housing. His pledge must be forthcoming now. Not only HUD, but every agency that concerns the people's welfare must be controlled by the representatives of the masses. This is their Bicentennial year. We must understand what they are supposed to be celebrating.

As the U.S.A is celebrating a revolution (the overthrow of British Power) where they set themselves up in power, today we find the descendants of those revolutionist are the big banks such as Chase National, National City, Bank of America, Bell Telephone, General Motors, Exxon Oil, Gulf and Mobil to name a few. These are the present day Red Coats who are running the government and running rough shod over the lives of the people. These are the "Blood Suckers" and the present day Vampires, the True Villians.

The issue before us is clear. Who controls the power? We or they? They or we? It is time we had a government of the people, by the people and for the people.

Think about it!

Power to the Tenants!!

One of the most disheartening sights I've ever seen, was hundreds of youth turned away from a youth agency who advertised that they had jobs and filled the jobs the day before the publicized time. We must not allow them to demoralize our youth.

Jerry Ford's declared position regarding the plight of our youth is bigger jails and tougher judges — not one word was said about their education or jobs. Even government estimates show 45 per cent of our youth are unemployed, which means at least 75 per cent are, according to our understanding of their double talk. Therefore, youth problems must be our major task. We cannot allow, as the only course for them, "a life of crime." Youth needs home and inspiration to strive for achievement. We must leave no stone unturned to quickly develop youth leaders. Jerry Ford is Nixon's heir to the throne. He is apeing Nixon's law and order anti-busing scarecrow to divert the people from the economic problems. Ford's ranting is a racist call to middle class whites whom he hopes to scare, by arousing their deep-seated white chauvinism.

According to the Wall Street Journal, October 5, 1976, "Federal taxes are taking a bigger bite from your pocketbook." The article goes on to say, "According to Labor Department figures, the average worker in private industry supporting a family of four is currently paying 23.4 per cent more in Federal taxes than he paid a year ago."

Ford knows there's bound to be discontent among the white middle class. That is why he is whipping up his "black boogie men" to distract them away from the real cause of their problem.

That is why the racist attacks are eminating not only from Ford, but also his cabinet.

The real issue was not only the racist slur from Butz. Oh no. The real issue before us is the whole racist Agricultural Policy against poor farmers, especially black farmers. Butz gave millions to rich farmers in subsidies, while refusing assistance to poor farmers. You must call for an investigation of that whole department. It reeks with racism from top to bottom. They'd rather throw food away, then give it to the poor.

Too long have we tolerated their chicanery and fraud and misuse of public funds, and too long have we the people allowed this country to be run solely in the interest of big business at the expense of the

By the winter of 1963-64, however, rising militancy in SNCC had begun to take on overtones of black nationalism, and some of the membership resisted the summer project on the grounds that most of the volunteers would be white." 6

During the Freedom Summer sponsored by COFO in Mississippi, six people were killed, eighty beaten, thirty-five churches burned and thirty other buildings bombed. Student volunteers taught in Freedom Schools where 3,000 children attended.

"They organized the disfranchised to march on county courthouses to face unyielding registrars. Most importantly, they walked the roads of Mississippi for the Freedom Democratic Party (FDP). Denying the legitimacy of the segregated Democratic party, COFO opened the FDP to members of all races and declared the party's loyalty to Lyndon Johnson. The goal of the FDP in the summer of 1964 was to send a delegation to the Democratic convention in Atlantic City to challenge the credentials of the regular Democrats and cast the state's vote for the party's nominees. To mount this challenge against the racist Democrats of Mississippi, enrolled 60,000 members in the FDP and then organized precident, county, and state conventions to choose 68 integrated delegates to go North. The FDP, in which tens of thousands of black Mississippi citizens invested tremendous hopes, was a true grassroots political movement and the greatest achievement of Freedom Summer." 7

The FDP went to Atlantic City to challenge the Mississippi regulars. Northern liberals tried to work out a compromise that would appease the FDP and at the same time keep the bulk of the Southern delegations in the convention. President Johnson's proposal was to seat all the Mississippi regulars who pledged loyalty to the party and not to grant the FDP voting rights but to let them sit on the floor of the convention.

The FDP refused this proposal and Johnson sent Senator Hubert Humphrey to draw a compromise. Humphrey offered to permit two FDP delegates to sit in the convention with full voting rights if he could choose the delegates. The Mississippi white regulars walked out and the FDP led by Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer decided not to accept the compromise.

The failure of the FDP to be seated led SNCC to attempt organizing an all black independent political party a year later.

In the summer of 1964, members of the SNCC staff were invited to visit the Republic of Guinea by Sekou Toure. While traveling in Africa they met Malcolm X who had left the Nation of Islam and had formed the OAAU (Organization of Afro-American Unity). SNCC personal were deeply impressed by Malcolm and SNCC soon became influenced by him. In the fall of 1964, SNCC under went internal debate over direction. 1965 began with Dr. King going to prison and holding demonstrations in Selma, Alabama. Malcolm X came to Selma while Dr. King was in jail, spoke and offered an alternative to non-violence.

Dr. King announced he would lead a march from Selma to Montgomery. His assistants convinced him not to lead the march in the beginning. Instead.

Dr. Cheddi Jagan

helped organize strikes in British Guiana in 1962 and 1963 against Dr. Cheddi Jagan, a Marxist who was Prime Minister there." The Union referred to was the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Union (AFSCME) which operated in Guyana through the London-based Public Service International (PSI). "The Union used agency (CIA) funds for four and a half years from 1959 until May, 1964 — to finance its overseas activities, mainly in Latin America," said Sheehan.

On April 16, 1967, the Sunday Times (London) Insight Team, in a story under the headline "HOW THE CIA GOT RID OF JAGAN", wrote:

"As coups go, it was not expensive: over five years the CIA paid out something over $250,000. For the colony, British Guiana, the result was about 170 dead, untold hundreds wounded, roughly 10 million-worth of damage to the economy and a legacy of racial bitterness."

A week later, the Insight Team in another Sunday Times Story, "MACMILLAN, SANDYS BACKED CIA'S ANTI-JAGAN PLOT" implicated Harold Macmillan, former Prime Minister; Duncan Sandys, former Commonwealth and Colonial Secretary; two top security men in Britain and a number of British officials in Guyana. The Insight Team said that "not all the British officials on the spot were happy with what the Americans were doing. . . (with) such massive manipulation of the local political scene. This feeling was strengthened by the fact that the CIA's efforts were worsening and the colony's already severe racial difficulties: the Africans supported Burnham and the Indian supported Jagan, and tension between the two racial groups grew as the CIA Levered the two sides further apart. (Eventually, this broke out in bloodshed)." The story also asserted that the "CIA were also operating under consular cover in Guyana."

In addition to the AFSCME and the PSI, a number of other American organizations and citizens are named by Philip Agee, himself a former CIA operator in the Latin American region, in his book "INSIDE THE COMPANY — THE CIA" as being CIA "fronts" and agents. Among these are the American Institute for Free Labor Development (AIFLD), the Inter-American Regional Labor Organization (ORIT), George Meany, Serafino Romualdi, J. Peter Grace, Gerald O'Keefe, William McCabe and others.

In reference to CIA activities in Guyana, datelined Quito, July 8, 1963, Agee states —

"Operations at the Georgetown Station (British Guiana) have just brought a big victory against the Marxist Prime Minister, Cheddi Jagan. Jagan has led that colony down a leftist-nationalist path since coming to power in the 1950's on the strength of Indian (Asian) predominance over blacks there. The Georgetown station operations for several years have concentrated on building up the local anti-Jagan trade-union movement, mainly through the Public Service International (PSI) which is the International Trade Secretariat for public employees. Cover is through the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, the US affiliate of the PSI.

Last year through the PSI the Georgetown station financed an anti-Jagan campaign over the Budget that included riots and a general strike and precipitated British intervention to restore order. This past April, with station financing and direction, another crippling strike began, this one led by the Guiana civil servants union which is the local PSI affiliate, and it has taken until just now to force Jagan again to capitulate. Visitors here who have also been to the Georgetown station say eventually the Agency hopes to move the leader of the black community into power though blacks are outnumbered by Jagan and the Indians."

Speaking of ORIT, the staff report of the US Senate Committee on Foreign Relations (July 15, 1968) said that it " . . . was orginally founded for the specific purpose of combatting communist infiltration of the Latin American labor movement. ORIT has never quite solved the problem of emphasis as between fighting communism and strengthening democratic anti-communism; Latin Americans have emphasized democratic trade unionism.

This is one reason for what seems to be a decline in ORIT prestige in Latin America. More fundamental, perhaps, has been the tendency of ORIT to support US government policy in Latin America. ORIT endorses the overthrow of the Arbenz regime in Guatemala and of the Goulart regime in Brazil. It supported the Burnham over Cheddi Jagan in Guyana, and it approved the US intervention in the Doinican Republic. To many Latin Americans, this looks like ORIT is an instrument of the US State Department."

"The American Institute for Free Labour Development (AIFLD) was set up in 1962 to save the ORIT unions. George Meany became President and J. Peter Grace was appointed Chairman of the Board of Trustees, with extensive interests in the Caribbean and Latin American. About 95 per cent of its annual six million dollar budget comes from the US Treasury.

The main aim of the AIFLD is to create a docile subservient trade unions movement. At its school in Front-Royal, training was given to 1,092 trade unionists from the Caribbean and Latin America. The rest of the 188,795 trained by 1972 received their training at Labor Institutes set up in 11 territories in Hemisphere. 'Graduates' from these schools have helped to subvert several progressive, anti-imperialist trade unions and governments. In an address given in September 1965, J. Peter Grace said:

'. . . AIFLD trains Latin Americans in techniques of combatting communist infiltration. This training has paid off handsomely in many situations. for instance, AIFLD trainees have driven communists from port unions which were harassing shipping in Latin America. After several years of effort AIFLD men were ablt to take over control of the port union in Uruguay which had long been dominated by communists. AIFLD men also helped drive communists from control of British Guiana. They prevented the communists from taking over powerful unions in Honduras and helped to drive the communists from strong "jugular" unions in Brazil."

In a statement about these trainees made after his visit to Guiana in April, 1962, Romualdi said, ". . . it appeared to me that young democratic trade union leaders would need intensive training to combat Dr. Jagan's efforts. Subsequently, eight Guianese came to Washington in June 1962, as participants in the Institute's first course. In September of that year, six of these men returned to British Guiana, supported by AIFLD internships, enabling them to put into practice, on a full-time basis, what they had learned at our school . . . When the BGTUC decided to call a general strike in an attempt to put the Institute's six interns, who were working with various local unions, at the disposal of the council's strike committee . . . in agreement with the Institute's Secretary-Treasurer, Joseph A. Beirne, I instructed the interns to fully devote their efforts to supporting the strike, and extended their internships which were scheduled to end on June 15, to August 15 . . . I would like to say that I am proud of our graduates in British Guiana. In spite of sacrifices and hardships they kept their places in the front line of a difficult and, unfortunately, sometimes bloody battle."

In an article "Unionists trained to harry Jagan's government", Victor Riesel wrote that among "the six courageous men" who received the AIFLD training was "a rather fearless chap by the name of Richard Ishmael, President of the Anit-communist Sugar Workers' Union known as the Man-Power Citizens' Association. "Mr. Riesel continued: "Jagan has organized opposition groups in an effort to take over British Guiana's organized labor. If he succeeds there will be nothing to stop him from going internally Cuban. Realizing this, the American Institute for Free Labor Development — supported by US labor and industry — rushed the training of six Guianese in Washington. This institute is directed by Serafino Romualdi, a veteran anti-Communist Labor Specialist. Each of the six trainees has specific tasks inside B.G. Labor . . . It was in Panama City on March 9th that Ishmael met with Joe Curran's colleagues, Shannon Wall, NMU told them that British Guiana's anti-communist unions would try to stop Soviet gunrunning. Ishmael said they would picket the Soviet and Cuban ships at the docks . . . Ishmael made good his promise last week. There was intense fighting in the dock areas. It soon spread through the city."

This was a reference to the rioting in Georgetown on April 5, 1963. Shamelessly, Riesel continued: "It's a pleasure to report we're giving the Communists a run for their money and guns."

Actually, the 80-days strike came about because the PPP government was attempting to make into law the National Labor Relations Bill, patterned after the US Wagner Act, to foster democratic trade unionism and to bring an end to company unions.

The CIA agents operating inside Guyana were Gerald O'Keefe, posing as an official of the Retail Clerks Association and William McCabe, posing as a representative of the American Federation of State, Country and Municipal Employees (AFSCME).

O'Keefe was one of the 50 persons named in the Guyana police secret report A Research Paper on the PNC Terrorist Organization, which gave gory details on arson and dynamiting of government buildings.

The AFSCME, according to The New York Times, was "actually run by two (CIA) aides who operated out of the union's former headquarters in Washington with the knowledge of the union leadership" and CIA Fund were channelled for the Guyana operation through the dummy Gotham Foundation.

Events in Guyana in the 1962-64 period were a prelude to developments a decade later in Chile. The 80-days strike in British Guiana was of the same character as the crippling strike of truck owners which caused chaos, cost the Chilean economy about $60 million per month and provided the excuse for military intervention and the overthrow of the Popular Unity government led by Salvador Allende.

In Chile, the armed forces and the Carabinieri revolted, bombarded the Palace and murdered the President. The only difference in the case of British Guiana was that with the country being a British colony, the British armed forces and the British Guiana police under the command of a British Governor and Commissioner of Police respectively, could not overthrow the PPP government. They did the next best thing: they stood by and permitted the counter-revolutionary forces to run riot. The resultant disorder and racial strike was then used by the British government to amend the Constitution and to change the voting system, through which the PPP was ousted from the government.

TRADE UNION AND THE CIA

. . . Referring to the disbanding and reconstruction of the TUC, William Knowles in his book, Trades Union Movement and Industrial Relations in the BWI, wrote:

"In a move of questionable, legality, the anti-Jagan non-Communist elements of the Trades Union Council voted, while supporters of the People's Progressive Party were out of the country, to dissolve the B.G. Trades Union Council.

Later, after Burnham had split the PPP in 1955, even some of the militant unions and leaders under his influence joined the new right-wing, anti-communist TUC, Andrew Jackson and Brentnol Blackman, who had been attacked by the British government became pillars of the new TUC.

How reactionary the TUC had become and what role the U.S. trade union movement was playing in the British Guiana could be gleaned from a special report, Facts on Cheddi Jagan and his Communist controlled PPP of British Guiana. Free Labor's 10-Year Struggle to Preserve Independence by Serafino Romualdi. He reported inter alia:

'In order to eliminate, to all intents and purposes, the usefulness of the Union (MPCA), Mrs. Jagan in her role of Minister of Labour, Health and Housing, suggested the establishment of a Wages Council in the sugar industry with statutory powers to fix wages and working conditions.'

Romualdi continued:

'The free labor movement bitterly opposed this measure because, once introduced in the sugar industry (with the consequent elimination of the union), it would have eventually been extended to the bauxite mines, the waterfront and other industries (sic). Tupert Tello termed this Jagan proposal 'especially a weapon to destroy the free trade union movement'."

U.S. trade union interference was not only "one-way" traffic. Leading Guyanese trade unionists were taken under the wings of the American Institute for Free Labor Development sited in Washington under the direction of Serafino Romualdi, who had previously remarked that there would be no U.S. aid for British Guiana so long as he had any say in the matter.

In an article, Victor Reisel left little room for doubt about U.S. subversive intentions. Under the caption, "Unionists trained in U.S. to harry Jagan's Government", it went on to contend that "six courageous men" — all trade unionists — had been recently trained by the American Institute for Free Labor Development in the technique of anti-Communist campaigning. Amongst these men was "a rather fearless chap by the name of Richard Ishmael, President of the anti-Communist Sugar Workers' Union known as the Man-Power Citizens' Association". Mr. Riesel continued: "Jagan has organized opposition groups in an effor to take over British Guiana's organized labor. If he succeeds there will be nothing to stop him from going internally Cuban. Realizing this, the American Institute for Free Labor Development — supported by U.S. labor and industry — rushed the training of six Guianese in Washington. This institute is directed by Serafino Romualdi, a veteran anti-Communist Labor Specialist. Each of the six trainees has specific tasks inside B.G. labor . . . It was in Panama City on March 9th that Ishmael met with Joe Curran's colleagues, Shannon Wall, NMU President, and Rene Lioeanjie, NMU Co-ordinator of organizing for Latin America. He told them that British Guiana's anti-Communist unions would try to stop Soviet gun-running. Ishmael said they would picket the Soviet and Cuban ships at the docks . . . Ishmael made good his promise last week. There was intense fighting in the dock areas. It soon spread through the city."

This was a reference to the rioting in Georgetown on April 5, 1963. Shamelessly, Riesel concluded: "It's a pleasure to report we're giving the Communists a run for their money and guns."

Acutally, there were more than six who were trained in the United States at a cost of about US$60,000. Many of these "subversive" trainees were conracted to serve in the trade union movement on their return to British Guiana at a salary of $250 per month, paid by the Institute itself.

The Party and Mass Line

by Muhammad Ahmad

It is important, during the process of transforming our movement from a crisis oriented struggle into a political nation building revolution led by the African People's Party, to reassess our experience over the last eleven years. We must deal with our contradictions, in order that we develop a party style of work that relates to the needs of our people.

The party style of work and program must correspond with the objective, concrete realities of our people. This is the only way the African People's Party will truly become a mass party and Revolutionary Nationalism become the living philosophy of our people.

Revolutionaries learn from trial and error. We have learned from our past mistakes and failures, that we must develop a multi-level organization that has mass support and a working day to day program, as well as a long range program. The 1960's provides us with a wealth of revolutionary experience. There are several things that should have become very clear to us. One is our struggle is of a protracted nature and will take many years to fully develop into a national democratic revolution. Two is, politics must command the gun. We saw too many of our brothers die fruitlessly, having little or no mass support, because they got carried away with the gun and isms our people knew nothing about. Any serious African People's Party, must have sound based leadership that sees itself responsible to the people and not above them.

First, we must realize we are involved in a national democratic revolution. A national democratic revolution is when an oppressed nation struggles against the colonializer nation (oppressor) for national political independence and self-relianco.

It is important to understand this because many brothers and sisters confuse this point. Many think we're in the phase of a Orthodox class or socialist revolution, and therefore, apply the wrong tactics to organizing our nation. They leap over a complete historical phase, and therefore, isolate themselves from the community over emphasizing class divisions among our people. While a national democratic liberation revolution can make a historical leap into the primary stage of a socialist revolution, this can only be done the eve of seizing power.

While the working class leads national democratic revolutions, it unites with all classes of the oppressed nation who oppose oppression by the colonial country. Therefore, the broad term "the people" becomes all who support the revolution. Class antagonism, though present, is played down in an effort to unite the whole nation

Press Statement by

Dr. Cheddi Jagan

In this era of the transition from capitalism to socialism, Guyana is in the grip of a grave crisis — fall in production, balance of payments and budgetary deficits, no foreign exchange, cuts in development expenditure, cuts in imports and subsidies.

This is a continuation of the crisis of 1974 when the economy was saved from collapse by the unprecedented increase in the world price of sugar.

In 1974, the blame was placed on the oil crisis. No, it is the weather (excessive rainfall in 1976), "destabilisation", economic recession and inflation in the capitalist world, rising prices for imports and fall in the world price of sugar.

Actually, long before the "oil crisis" of 1973-74, the economy was already showing signs of stagnation.

As early as 1971, Dr. Wilfred David, the then Economic Adviser of the PNC government stated that "we have had growth without development. The problem has been exemplified by a high level of unemployment and foreign dependency."

Reports of the Central Bank of Guyana for 1971 to 1973 showed signs of stagnation in production. What was growing were services not industry and agriculture. Over the 1969-73 period of output of Government services had risen from 13 per cent of the GDP to 20 per cent while that of Agriculture and Industry had together declined from 60 per cent to 53 per cent.

Structure

The crisis is largely structural. As in colonial times, the economy is still based on three primary commodities — bauxite, sugar and rice — which today account for 38 per cent of the gross value of output and 87 per cent of the value of all exports.

At the financial level, a huge state apparatus and increasing debt payments swallow up a greater share of revenues, resulting in budgetary deficits, additional taxation and-or cuts in social services.

The cost for the administrative-bureaucratic police-military elitist apparatus has jumped from G$27 million in 1964 to nearly $128 million at the end of 1976. And because foreign aid was tied to infrastructural, rather than to agricultural and industrial, development, debt payments are not being financed from increased production but from increased taxation.

Income tax increased from G$22 million in 1964 to G$104 million in 1975, an increase by 366 per cent; import duty, excise duty and other forms of revenue jumped from G$40 million in 1964 to $352 million in 1975, an increase by 774 per cent.

The allocation for social services, including contribution for economic development, declined from 45 per cent of current budget expenditure in 1964 to 35 per cent in 1974; in 1977 a sum of G$26 million in subsidies to consumers was withdrawn.

Reduction and stagnation in production have their roots in pro-imperialist domestic and foreign policies. In the period of December 1964 to early 1971, both the economic base and the political, institutional, ideological and cultural super-structure were geared to serve imperialism and the ruling elite.

During the past five years, and more particularly in 1975-76, primarily as a result of intense political and ideological struggles, there have been positive changes in foreign policy and at the economic base through the nationalisation of the foreign-owned sugar and bauxite companies and some sectors of foreign trade. But at the super-structural level, there has been no corresponding positive change.

There is cultural suppression. And at the ideological level, there is still talk about cooperative socialism, despite the fact that the PNC sometimes claims that its ideas are based on Marx, Engels and Lenin.

At the political level, democracy and people's involvement do not prevail. There is a semi-dictatorship with minority rule and bureaucratic-police methods at the central and local government levels.

Senator Daniel P. Moynihan is claimed, according to the New York Times (March 23, 1976), to have listed Guyana among six countries (India, Sri Lanka, Guyana, Barbados, Jamaica and Gambia), which have been able to change their governments through free elections.

What Senator Moynihan failed to observe was the the so-called free election referred to in Guyana was that on 1964, when the electoral system was manipulated (what Harold Wilson in 1964 referred to as "a fiddled constitutional arrangement") by Anglo-American imperialism after the People's Progressive Party had won 3 consecutive elections in 1953, 1957 and 1961.

Since 1964, when the ruling PNC came to power on a minority vote of 40 per cent (PPP had then secured 46 per cent), it has maintained power through fraud and force. Extensive rigging of elections documented by Granada Television films, "The Trail of the Vanishing Voters", "The Making of a Prime Minister" (1968) and "Mr. Burnham Has Done It Again" (1973) took place through padded voters lists, proxy and postal voting, overseas voting, and tampering of ballot boxes. In 1973, the army intervened and seized ballot boxes, which were taken not to counting centers but first to army headquarters where they were tampered with. Local government elections were rigged in 1970. Since then they have been postponed successively in 1972, 1974 and 1976.

With nationalisation has not come workers' participation and control in management and decision-making. Many genuine mass organizations are not recognized. Those which the regime cannot control, it tries to destroy by withholding recognition and creating parallel, bureaucratically-run bodies. For instance, the democratically-elected District Committees (13) and the Rice Producers Association (RPA) established by law, have not been accorded recognition and have been replaced by appointed Rice Action Committees which are bureaucratically managed.

Denial of democratic freedoms and human rights adversely affect production.

Discrimination

At the institutional level, state bodies like the police, army, judiciary and the Public Service Commission, Police Service Commission, Teachers Service Commission which are supposed to function independently under the Constitution have been subverted and controlled, and under the doctrine of "paramountcy of the party" made to serve not national but narrow party interests. A PNC party card is necessary for jobs, promotion, training, scholarships, land, loans and houses.

As a result of politics of patronage and political and racial discrimination, there has been a high percentage of failures at examinations, and an exodus of skilled and semi-skilled personnel particularly to North America. Between 1968-1972, from 1,147 students admitted to be trained as nurses, only 267 graduated. Net migration increased from 3,198 persons in 1960 to 8,301 in 1970, and averaged 8,000 between 1970 and 1975. In 1970, 296 professional and technical, and 448 administrative, managerial and clerical emigrants left Guyana.

About half of the 226 persons trained by Bookers Bros. McConnell & Co. under their apprentice training scheme at Pln. Port Mourant between 1957-64 (PPP 2nd term in government) have left the country.

Progress

For anti-imperialist unity and social progress, the PPP had proposed the following:

1. Completion of the anti-imperialist process by the nationalization of foreign banks, insurance companies and other monopolies;
2. Ending semi-feudalism by a revolutionary land reform;
3. Centrally-controlled planned proportional development of the economy with emphasis on industry and agriculture;
4. Embarking on a non-capitalist road to socialism through the expansion of the state and co-operative sectors;
5. Massive education campaign at all levels for imbueing the people with revolutionary, scientific, socialist (Marxist-Leninist) ideological consciousness;
6. Training of administrative, scientific, technical and diplomatic personnel in the socialist states;
7. Respect for, and observance of, the Fundamental Rights laid down in the Constitution;
8. Substitution of peaceful, democratic methods in place of bureaucratic-administrative, police-military coercive methods of political struggle;
9. Separation of party, state and mass organizations; maintenance of a multi-party system in place of a de facto and-or de jure authoritarian one-party state;
10. Cessation of harassment and victimisation of members and supporters of the PPP, and the removal of all obstacles to its normal democratic functioning;
11. Recognition of truly representative mass organizations (workers, farmers, social, cultural, religious, professional, sports, etc.); industrial democracy; workers and farmers control;
12. Implementation of legal and institutional measures to provide for equality of opportunity for all Guyanese — enactment of equal opportunity legislation and establishment of a Commission to administer the Act; substantial representation for the Opposition in service commissions (Public Service Commission; Police Service Commissions, etc.) and Employment Exchanges;
13. Special treatment for Amerindians to permit accelerated development;
14. Democratisation of local governments; more power (devolution and decentralization) to district and regional councils;
15. The creation of a democratically-run and people-managed national People's Militia with branches in every city block, village and settlement;
16. Enactment of INTEGRITY LEGISLATION and a Commission with "Watchdog Committees" to probe corruption and theft of public property.
17. Development of the closest relations in all aspects with the world socialist community, headed by the Soviet Union.

With the sharpening of the national liberation and class struggles, certain positive developments have taken place. Workers, particularly sugar and bauxite, and peasants are forging closer links and becoming more militant. Four unions representing the urban and rural workers are collaborating in the Guyana Trades Union Congress in defense of the working class interests. And at the political level, there is increasing cooperation between the People's Progressive Party and the Working People's Alliance.

Because of the intensification of the political and ideological struggle, and the change from a pro-imperialist to an anti-imperialist direction, Guyana needs solidarity. To the reactionary forces, the PPP says "hands off". At the same time, the Guyanese people, whose democratic freedoms and human rights are denied, curtailed and threatened, need the support of all freedom-loving peoples everywhere.

CIA INTERVENTION IN GUYANA

Documentation of news reports and official views concerning the activities of the CIA prior to and during the last term of office of the P.P.P. governemnt.

Political Background to CIA's Intervention

On March 12, 1963, William R. Tyler, Assistant Secretary for European Affairs, gave evidence before a Sub-Committee of the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives. When asked whether the United States government favored Dr. Jagan continuing as head of the Guyana (British Guiana) government, he replied: "No, the U.S. Government does not."

When pressed further that B.G. would soon achieve independence under the P.P.P. government, Mr. Tyler stated: "May I remind you, Mr. Congressman, as of now, this country is under control of the parent government."

Mr. Cederberg: "But they can let it go any time desired. Is that right?"

Mr. Tyler: "They can, but if I may go off the record on this?"

No doubt, Mr. Tyler was requesting permission to relate in private what was later disclosed during President John Kennedy's visit to London in May 1963. Dean Rusk, U.S. Secretary of State, was reported by the London Times on June 29, 1963, to have urged Lord Home, the British Foreign Secretary, to suspend the Constitution or hold of referendum on a new system of voting.

Commenting of these matters, the Conservative M.P. and Colonial Secretary Iain Macleod said in a debate on British Guiana in June 1964 in the House of Commons that: "There is an irony we all recognize is the fact of America urging us all over the world towards colonial freedom except where it approaches their own doorstep. When I was last in America . . . I discussed with many people, including President Kennedy, this particular question which weighs anxiously on their minds. I myself think their fears (about Dr. Jagan) are exaggerated. The American attitude seems dangerous because in my experience if you put off independence because you fear you may get left-wing government, the most likely thing to happen is that you will get a government even further to the left."

On October 31, 1964, the New York Times reported that the British Government, "bowing to United States wishes, had ruled out early independence for British Guiana," and was going ahead with the PR election fixed for December. "This development, reported by senior officials tonight," said the newspaper, "came after high-level British-American exchanges on how to check the spread of Castroism in the Western Hemisphere . . . Foreign Secretary Patrick Gordon Walker and Secretary of State Dean Rusk examined the situation in their talks in Washington this week. Informants said that Mr. Rusk had left Mr. Gordon Walker in no doubt that the United States would resist a rise of British Guiana as an independent Castro-type state."

The suggestion made by Mr. Dean Rusk in June, 1963 for a new system of voting bore fruit: the system of proportional representation (PR) was introduced in Guyana for the December, 1964 elections. The New York Daily News comment on this read:

"Britain's government cagily fixed up a system of voting by proportional representation with a view of butchering the Jagans out of power, and their pro-Western political opponents in, before Guiana is granted full independence by Britain. The plan seems to have worked."

In a debate in the House of Commons (London), in June 1964, the Rt. Hon. Harold Wilson, then Leader of the Opposition, called the change of the electoral system from the conventional first-past-the-post, constituency system to the list system of proportional representation "a fiddled constitutional arrangement" and urged a review by a Commonwealth team. Arthur Bottomley, shadow Commonwealth and Colonial Secretary, described the electoral formula as one "riddled with disadvantages and which is quite unknown in any other Commonwealth country . . . Those who support him (sadly have done so not because they think this will reduce racialism but because they think it will put someone in power whom they prefer to Dr. Jagan."

This is the background against which CIA intervention in the internal affairs of Guyana must be viewed, bearing in mind also that it was the period of the aftermath of the McCarthy communist witch-burning era. At the same time, it should be recorded that President John Kennedy had declared in late 1961 that:

". . . the United States supports the idea that every people should have the right to make a free choice of the kind of government they want. Mr. Jagan who was recently elected Prime Minister in British Guiana is a Marxist, but the United States doesn't object because that choice was made by honest elections, which he won."

CIA Intervention in Guyana

Perhaps the first confirmation from overseas sources of CIA intervention in Guyana to come to notice, referring specifically to its efforts at removing the P.P.P. government from office, was contained in a syndicated article by the U.S. columnist, the late Drew Pearson, published on March 22, 1964. The article was headed "CASTRO AND JAGAN" and in a reference to an engineered 80-days strike against the government, Drew Pearson said:

". . . The strike was secretly inspired by a combination of U.S. Central Intelligence Agency money and British intelligence. It gave London the excuse it wanted. British Guiana has not yet received its independence and another Communist government at the bottom of the one-time American lake has been temporarily stopped."

Neil Sheehan, writing in the New York Times on February 21, 1967, in a special article headed "CIA IS LINKED TO STRIKES THAT HELPED OUST JAGAN" said that "Operatives of the Central Intelligence Agency working under cover of an American Labor Union,

Black Student Movement Con't. II

Hosea Williams and John Lewis of SNCC lead the march of about 525 people. After the marchers crossed Pettus Bridge going to U.S. highway 80 they were confronted by a battalion of state troopers. After an exchange of words the troopers attacked.

After the attack, Dr. King announced he would continue the march. Suffering setbacks at the beginning the march was finally successful. SNCC began to re-evaluate its integrationalist approach in 1965. The Watts rebellion occurred in August.

During 1965, SNCC began discussing how to form a black student movement. NSM (Northern Student Movement) began to organize Afro-American student groups of black students on white campuses in the North while SNCC again began to focus on black students in the South. Another development was the Deacons for Defense, a black armed self defense group in the South. A group of black students working in Atlanta polarized the contradictions within SNCC between white and black workers; confrontation sometimes came close to gun battles. These students served as a catalyst of pushing SNCC towards the black power position. These students were from the now infamous Atlanta project which led demonstrations against the draft in 1966 and developed the black consciousness movement within SNCC.

After a serious fight, Stokely Carmichael became chairman of SNCC in 1966. James Meridith began his "Memphis to Jackson March" on Sunday, June 5, 1966. His march was to dramatize fear among blacks in Mississippi and encourage them to exercise the right to vote. On Monday, June 6, Meridith was shot in the back by a white man with a shotgun. Taken to the hospital, major civil rights leaders pledged to continue the march. During the march an ideological split occurred between Dr. King and SNCC and CORE. At a rally, Stokely began to shout, "We want Black Power," and the audience began chanting Black Power. Soon across the nation the Black Power movement was born.

Stokely Carmichael became the new black mass spokesman for a while. Resulting from his efforts in Loundes County, Alabama to build an all black political party, the Black Panther party formed in northern areas.

1967 was the turning point for the black liberation movement in America. It was the year of mass rebellions, two-hundred and ten across the country. SNCC agitated the masses to rebell and RAM organized cells and issued a call for a national uprising. Both SNCC and RAM which had started as students organizations were now professional revolutionary groups. RAM issued its version of the communist manifesto called World Black Revolution and called for a black cultural revolution; while SNCC began organizing black student groups at southern black college campuses. RAM began to organize black high school youth in the Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, New York area to demand black history courses in their high schools, the right to wear their hair natural (Afro), wear African clothes and the right to saluate the nationalist flag, red, black and green.

Many were shocked when on November 17, 1967 in Philadelphia, seven-thousand black students demonstrated at the board of education to make their demands met.

The emergence of the slogan Black Power was the turning point for the black student community. The concept of black power challenged the whole value structure of the Negro community. In essence it forced black people to think about black people in the United States as powerless. Black Power challenged the pseudo-class structure of the middle class Negro society and black became the new and fashionable thing; it was now hip to be black.

Faced with growing contradictions of fighting for a system that enslaves us, fighting in a racist war in Vietnam and for democratic rights in America, black students began to develop an anti-imperialist, anti-colonialist attitude. The turning point in this attitude and the black student movement came on March 21, 1967 at Howard University when a group of black students chased selective service director Hershey of Howard's Crampton Auditorium stage chanting "America's the black man's battleground."

As the year continued, these students engaged in what they called a cultural revolution at Howard, a re-channeling of the student body's values toward changing Howard from a "Negro" college with white standards to a black university relevant to the black community and its struggle.

Black students at other colleges slowly began to pick up on what was going on at Howard, and by 1968, the black studies rebellion had swept across the country. The rebellions hit black as well as white campuses. High schools by the hundreds in '68 and '69 began to explode. In Detroit, the Black Student Union was the student wing of the League of Revolutionary Black Workers. By 1969 the black studies revolt had hit over fifty black colleges.

"In March 1967 students of the Black Power committee at Howard University demonstrated against General Lewis B. Hershey, Director of the Selective Service System. As he attempted to deliver a speech, they jumped onto the stage shouting, "America is the black man's battleground!" When the university attempted to hold administrative hearings to discipline students for the incident, the proceedings were disrupted. When it went ahead with disciplinary action against four of the Hershey demonstrators, several thousand undergraduates boycotted classes for a day. Meanwhile, student rallies and faculty forums took up the questions of due process in discipline, authoritarianism in administration, and the possibilities for a "militant black university." Finally, at the end of the spring term and the commencement of the summer bread, the Howard administration summarily expelled sixteen students and dismissed without customary notice five faculty members closely identified with the faculty forums, student protests, and the Black Power Committee. The reason given for the expulsions and dismissals was that the offenders' "general conduct" was detrimental to the university's "fundamental mission."

The 1967 Howard protest was the first major black student rebellion of the decade directed specifically against a university administration. It inaugurated a series of black student protests against the administrations of both black white institution of higher education, protests which gathered increasing momentum in 1968-69 and were generally built around the demand for "black studies" programs." 8

"...As an organization which identified itself with the evolving black movement, the Black Power Committee endorsed the radical doctrines in advance of any direct engagement with university authorities. In this case, its most important commitment was to the creation of a "militant black university." 9

"...Except for minor incidents, the Howard campus was relatively quiet in the fall of 1967. In March 1968, however, one year after the Hershey demonstrations, students seized the Administration Building and occupied it for several days. Students were able to negotiate an agreement with the trustees on various "student power" and "black university" issues. In this extended occupation, the first of its kind among the student rebellions in the United States, student leftists were also able to extract an "amnesty" agreement from the administration." 10

Black student rebellions began to spread...Also in 1968, five-hundred students from South Carolina State, a state instituion and Claflin College, a private college, began a campaign to desegregate the bowling alleys in Orangeburg. This led to fifteen arrests and twenty hospitalizations. Ten days later, police and National Guardsmen responded to a report of arsons on the South Carolina State campus, where they fired on unarmed students, killing three and wounding 'fifteen', primarily with shots in the back. In this case, the college administration did not intervene. Students began a boycott against downtown business, and eventually the bowling lanes were desegregated...

...Besides the confrontations at Howard, Fisk, and Tennessee A & I, 1967 was student demonstrations at Southern University, Allen College, South Carolina State, and Jackson State. In 1968 there were again incidents at Howard, South Carolina State, and Tennessee A & I, and also at Virginia State and even at Tuskegee Institute. At Tuskegee, students held the trustees hostage in support of their demands for African studies and the abolition of compulsory ROTC, until the National Guard arrived. Fifty-four students were expelled, but after they obtained a federal court injunction ordering a hearing, they were readmitted on probation..." 11

Both the Baton Rouge and New Orleans campuses of Southern University had a series of violent confrontations between demonstrators, the state police and the National Guard.

In March 1968, students boycotted classes in support of wage demands of striking cafeteria workers. Black students at Duke University seized a building and demanded an Afro-American studies program. Later black students and community people created Malcolm X Liberation University.

Protests broke out at white universities when in 1968, the Black Student Union and the Third World Liberation Front got into a struggle with San Francisco State's administration over black studies. The Black Panther Party played a role in the demonstrations. A class boycott was touched off in the fall of 1968 when George Murray, a black instructor, who was also Minister of Culture of the Black Panther Party, was suspended. The Third World Liberation Front demanded open admissions for minority students and the establishment of an automous and degree granting black studies department, as well as an autonomous school of ethnic studies. There was continuous struggle for four months with the San Francisco police making the rebellion the longest in American history.

"The student strike at San Francisco State College, led by the Black Students Union and the Third World Liberation Front, has vaulted over the narrowness of its physical setting. It has linked up with significant sectors of the Third World community, encouraged similar actions on other campuses in California and around the country, and produced an impact even on the labor movement by creating an atmosphere in which the college teachers, organized into the American Federation of Teachers, decided to strike for union rights.

The students are striking for fifteen demands. The first en demands were drawn up by the Black Students Union, and five more added by the Third World Liberation Front." 12

As student strikes spread, the Black Panther Party (Oakland) grew into a national organization with thirty-five chapters and about 30,000 members at its peak.

As the Black Panther Party grew, so did internal tensions and war occur inside the black community. Being a young and immature party, the BPP was bound to make some mistakes. While most of its membership was sincere, courageous and dedicated, its leadership made some wild and adventurist mistakes which led the party to be set up for infiltration and destruction. The Party entered into alliance with SNCC in early 1968. After Cleaver and some Panthers kidnapped James Foreman of SNCC and terrorized him the alliance was broken. The BPP soon became engaged in an ideological and physical war with Ron Karanga's Los Angeles based cultural nationalist organization called US. The black community as well as the black student movement soon was torn into two factions; revolutionary nationalists — Marxist-Leninists vs. cultural nationalists.

A fight between the two factions broke out at UCLA in January 1969.

"Beginning in the fall semester of 1968, control of the BSU at UCLA was split between two factions, Ron Karenga's US and the Black Panthers. Karenga's people included Donald Hawkins, Claude Hubert, Harold Jones, and the brothers George and Larry Stiner. Panther members were Captain John Huggins and Deputy Minister of Defense Alprentic "Bunchy" Carter. Trouble began when the university established an Afro-American Studies Center and asked the BSU for its advice in naming a director. The position paid $20,000 a year. The Karenga group nominated Charles Thomas, then Education Director of the Watts Health Center. The Panthers did not have a candidate of their own, but they, nevertheless, opposed the appointment of Thomas. The impasse continued until January 17 when the PSU convened a meeting to settle the matter once and for all. After lengthy and acrimonious debates the meeting ended with the question still unresolved, but during the postmorten discussions outside of the meeting hall, Huggins and Carter were shot to death." 13

Karenga's US men had done the assassinations. The Southern California area became known as the war zone as the FBI aided Karenga's US with information on the whereabouts of the Panthers as they picked them off. The FBI used smear campaigns, inflirtation with agent provocatours and overkill tactics against the Panthers. Some 356 Panthers were imprisoned in 1969 alone, 30 assassinated and some 30 raids took place as a national coordinated campaign by police. Similar tactics were used against other black revolutionary organizations. In 1971, the FBI raided the RNA (Republic of New Africa) in Jackson, Mississippi. Also in 1971 police shot up Jackson State College campus and Kent State occurred. The movement was under constant attack by the state. Due to internal division and confusion, the movement began to fall apart.

In 1970, SOBU, Student Organization for Black Unity which later became YOUB, Youth Organization for Black Unity, formed. Also Malcolm X Liberation University began to form a broad black united front called ALD (African Liberation Day) which mobilized some 50,000 people in Washington, D.C. in 1972 to support African Liberation struggles in Southern Africa. ALD eventually became the ALSC (African Liberation Support Committee) but split by 1974. In 1971, the BLA (Black Liberation Army) formed and since has been fighting a war of liberation against racist — facist pigs.

While seriously weakened, the struggle is not dead.

The struggle continues.........

masses whose toil created the wealth they so lavishly squander.

The plight of the elderly is a disgrace. We hear reports of the aged eating dog food. These are the people whose sweat and labor built this country. They are now forced to crowd in slum dwellings, unable to meet their most elementary needs. They must stand in long lines to get Food Stamps. Inflationary food prices are beyond their means; they suffer for lack of adequate medical care. They also need recreation, fresh air and unpolluted spring water.

Jerry Ford's answer to the aged is the same as his answer to the unemployed, the youth, and the tenants. Now if Mr. Carter wants the support of tenants, we must hear from him loud and clear on every issue we face. This is a life and death struggle for our survival. There can be no compromise on our daily needs.

the way of liberty and who murder, maim, and commit other atrocious and barbaric acts against our people while carrying out their colonialist responsibilities.

Because of their revolutionary commitment to independence for our people, and because they do represent the best of us, I have much love for Shakur and Acoli, and personally feel one way this love I have for them and what they represent, can best be demonstrated is by my efforts to build international support for our Independence position, which gives legitmacy to what they represent and vindicate them from what the U.S. North American state has changed them with.

Our primary effort for international support should be directed at the international African community, including Africa, Australia, Canada, South America, the Carribean, etc. This effort should include building, strengthening, and supporting legitimate Pan African organizations, associations, etc. It should also include winning the support of the Organization of African unity.

Beyond the international African community we should also direct our efforts at "Third World" countries and peoples, socialist countries and peoples, and the peoples of Western capitalist countries.

It is my firm belief that if, when doing political work, we are guided by these tactical and strategical objectives, along with the necessary strategical objective of building an African People's Liberation Army, all our work will begin to take on the political aspects necessary for successful efforts in any particular situation, relating to any particular objective.

It seems necessary to say at this point that while I mainly addressed myself to the questions of our strategical objectives to guide us in building a mass movement, we should also be looking to build mass movements which themselves adopt the tactical and strategical objectives I have just laid out. Such a movement would be a powerful mass movement, and would represent the highest mass expression of the aspirations of our people for freedom, peace, dignity, and advancement in the material condition of our lives.

I realize that this presentation may prove unsatisfactory to those who anticipated a discussion providing for a blueprint we might use to determine the political aspects of building a mass movement. However, I have attempted here to present a general political foundation for all our work within which I truly believe lies the conditions for determining the political aspects of building a mass movement which must necessarily be circumscribed by concrete time, place, and the political aspirations of the political formations responsible for building the mass movement.

While I did not attempt to provide any blueprint determining the political aspects for building a mass movement I did attempt to use some examples of mass movements which might provide insight to political aspects of mass movement-building under certain specific conditions and within a particular context. On the other hand, by initiating the discussion of tactical and strategical objectives for liberation, I attempted to address myself to the most important mass movement we may see within our lifetime, and that is the mass movement for Black independence through self-liberation.

I thank you for your patience and I invite you to strike a thousand blows for liberation as we struggle for Independence In Our Lifetime!

Party Line Con't.

into a broad National United Front against domestic colonialism and repression.

So, the main objectives of the African People's Party must be to unite our nation around sound principles which will advance our struggle. But understanding that other forces in our community have less commitment for real unity, the party must build the front primarily from below. Organizing the front from below means that the party concentrates its efforts in organizing Black workers, unemployed, street force, students, and youth. Only when having soldified a strong base among the people would the party actively push for the front. It realizes that unless "the people" are fully mobilized and organized, a national front will not be able to be strong and consistent. So, the party's tactics in organizing in the community would be the 'broad front' or mass line. In applying these tactics to reality, party organizers will have to be flexible. At the same time of applying flexibility, the organizer never compromises principle. The object is to mobilize as many people as possible.

"A revolution is not a coup d'etat; it is not the upshot of plots. It is the work of the masses. Hence, to mobilize and rally the forces of the masses, to set up and expand the political army of the revolution, is a fundamental, decisive problem. This task must be attended to in an unflagging and sustained way throughout all periods, both when no revolutionary situation has arisen and grown mature. To this end, one must mingle with the masses in everyday life and be active wherever the masses are, even within enemy organizations: one must keep abreast of the situation both in the enemy's camp and ours, correctly appraise all schemes, moves, and capabilities of the enemy, accurately assess all changes happening in his ranks, and, at the same time, be fully aware of the state of mind, wishes, and potential power of the masses." (1)

The Party must, therefore, have close relations with Black workers in their locales. The party must more than ever increase its activity among Black workers because the Black workers movement has been seriously set back by the split within and between the League of Revolution-ry Black Workers and the Black Workers Congress.

"... Revolution is creation; without imagination and inventiveness, a revolution cannot succeed. There has never been and will never be a unique formula, one that is suited to all circumstances and all times for making a revolution. One given method may be adapted to a certain country, but unfit for another; a correct one in certain times and under certain circumstances. All depends on concrete historical conditions...

A method, a form of struggle, can only be considered the best and most judicious one when it fully satisfies the requirements of a given concrete situation; when it is wholly suited to the conditions in which it is applied; when it makes it possible to put on their mettle the revolutionary and progressive forces and rouse them to action. If one has mastered the concrete historical point of view and takes the peculiar traits of one's country into full account, then the more one knows about the revolutionary inventiveness in one's own country." (2)

So, in order that the majority of Black workers can function in a Black workers movement, Revolutionary Nationalists must develop a nationalist Black Workers Union that speaks to the basic needs of the Black workers in a way they can understand what we're talking about.

From our experiences in the 60's, we learned the need for a multi-level organization built on democratic centralism with a constitution and by-laws that every member understands. This way, every party member knows the party is just as much his as the leadership's and that he is just as important as the leadership. From the Black Guards organizing in Chicago, New York, Detroit and Philadelphia, where sections of the city became Black Guard areas, we learned the importance of developing community (area) cells, and from the November 17, 1967 mass demonstration in Philly, where 5,000 Black students demonstrated, led by the Black Guards, we learned the importance of developing political cells. The policy of the party is to bore in or be well entrenched in the community. First, every party cadre must know who's in his immediate area. He must know who's the appointed leaders, by the power structure, the real grass roots local leaders, the street culture leaders, etc. The party cadre must make an indepth study of his area, acquiring knowledge of its history and the people. The cadre must be good at making friends and making people answer questions for themselves in general conversation.

Once a person is accepted in a community cell, his role is to:

1) Create another party cell in the area.

2) Develop a party cell on his job.

3) Join a community organization and develop a party cell inside the organization.

4) Build a party cell among his friends (social).

Mass organizations of the people will depend upon how the party organizes parallel economic institutions, African people's cooperatives. This is very important because being in a protracted struggle and a nation building revolution, we must realize that it's independent institutions and not rhetoric that keeps continuity in the struggle.

"Revolutionary Black Nationalism must unite Black people, must arouse the collective consciousness of the Black nation, and pose an alternative to the moribund, decadent culture of the oppressor, challenging every move it makes on Black terrain. And perhaps most important of all, re-oppression must be brought to an end. Otherwise, the question would no longer remain one of culture, but of pure and simple mystification." (3)

This is very important because some cultural nationalists have really tripped out with the mystification bit. And what makes it so bad, some of our people believe it and need it.

As a developing cultural nation, our people are culturally messianic prone and will be so for some time, but it is important in our cultural revolution that we destroy the counter revolutionary divine saviour complex. This alone destroys the concept; the people make history.

It is important for the party to always do investigation among the people. Sometimes, in order to do this, brothers and sisters must change their lifestyle, stop hanging out with one another (nationalist), take off that cultural garb, cut or fry that bush, and melt back into the people. This way, you can find out what all segments of the people are thinking about and what level of development they are, what's agitating their minds.

For years, the party leadership has circulated through different elements of the people to see how the majority of us are thinking. While many nationalists are talking pride in their new African suits and name and playing "Black" games of who's going to be the first to come to fame, to the vast majority of our people, the movement still seems unreal or confused. This means we have much work to do.

Brother Owusu Saduaki (Howard Fuller) recently said; "Too many of us who call ourselves revolutionaries are carbon copies of our oppressor. Those of us who are Black revolutionaries must reappraise ourselves and that does not only mean we should wear dashikis, but we must do whatever is necessary for revolution. It might mean that you will have to straighten your hair or dress like the man, but if you must straighten your hair so that you can eventually wear a natural, then you would straighten your hair.

Revolutionary struggle is designed to change the system and not just the clothes we are wearing. If we do not see this reality, we will change our clothes and still be oppressed. Without practice, revolutionary analysis is invalid." (4)

The healthiest development in this direction is the developments in the South. The struggles for mass Black or voter registration being led by Julian Bond and John Lewis have tremendous potential for our national democratic revolution, and all party cadre should give them a helping hand in their drive. The running for Governor of Mississippi by Mayor Evers and the statewide campaign of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party showed us the method of consolidating on the county level. The struggle in North Carolina has reached a new stage with the formation of the statewide Black Peoples Union Party. All these developments are dialectical struggles which inevitably from practice will lead to making the APP demand of reparations and independence a reality. All Revolutionary Nationalists must work in the people's present movement in order to show them the road to national independence and self reliance.

"... The possibility of reparations and land are infinitely greater than the probability of white people ever fully accepting Black people. History offers not a single example of a people ever accepting another group that it regards as its inferior. Many of us have yet to learn, despite so much rhetoric that you simply cannot educate a man to act in a manner that he believes would be contrary to his self-interest." (5)

It is important that the demand for reparations and national independence can only become a mass demand by waging struggle around issues our people presently understand and linking reparations with it. The base of this will be an economic struggle as well as political. It is only by having a strong Black workers movement that is willing to call a national Black Strike for independence will our national democratic revolution be successful.

"We believe that the burning question confronting the Afro-American people is whether or not we want to be integrated into the United States of America or liberated into a sovereign nation of our own, with full status and rights with other nations of the world, including United Nations membership and diplomatic recognition by the other nations of the world." (6)

By organizing and educating Black workers, our call for an African Peoples Plebiscite will have a mass base. This will make the program of the late El Hajj Malik Shabazz a reality.

By correctly applying the mass line and having the support of the people of the world, we know, without a doubt, we will win.

tered by reality. This is not Harvard, was never meant to be, and I for one prefer it that way since I want no association with that citadel of wealth, and privelege. The establishment of the central office made the illusion that the faculty really ran the university more difficult to sustain. The decline of the economy exploded their vision of perpetual growth, and eroded certain class priveleges that they had come to expect as though by right. This was particularly traumatic since it came right after a period of growth when my people had worked very hard to build a firstrate institution here, and one that would serve the education needs to the people of the commonwealth. This has been done, and will continue, the only difference being that a certain grim economic reality had dissipated the ego-serving illustions of antiquated grandeur held by some of my colleagues.

When the faculty voted to unionize that was the final admission that reality had really and finally shattered the illusion. The final trauma was the tacit admission represented by the union vote that whatever our intellectual, professional and class delusions, we basically were just a bunch of employees of the state like anyone else and not some kind of elite closed guild in which everyone was both management and labor at the same time. Though I did not vote for the union, for reasons not important here, I thought that it was a very poor move and a bad mistake for the administration to refuse to recognize it.

In any event the faculty's self-esteem was reeling from these accumulated slings and arrows when the Provost came up with his suggestion that given the pattern of student enrollment and interest, some positions — between six and ten a year — over the next five years might have to be moved from the Arts and Sciences over to the professional schools. The fact is that CAS, being over two thirds of the faculty, was the only place these positions could come from. This can hardly be called — not honestly anyway — a proposal to dismantle CAS. The hysteria occassioned by it has to be understood in terms of the self-image and the general violence so it has to be understood in terms of the self-image and the general violence to it, that is represented by the developments just outlined. But now the vague threatening forces that had been building had a face and presence. The Provost was it, and his ritual murder on Tuesday night was the pitiful response of my colleagues.

It was a shabby and pitiful performance being both cruel as well as futile. The irony is that it is now left to the "peasants and rustics" from the professional schools to give the humanists instruction in restraint, civility and common decency, which I am sure will happen at the meeting of the general faculty tomorrow afternoon.

The Herter Gallery is pleased to announce the lectures of two black artists Valery Maynard and Sam Gilliam.

Valery Maynard will be speaking on Monday May 2nd at 3:00 p.m. in Herter Hall 227. She will be showing a film and slides of her work during the lecture. Ms. Maynard's powerful graphics and sculpture address the Afro-American experience. She combines political and cultural awareness with a moving aesthetic. Ms. Maynard is currently a professor of art at Jersey City State University. In the past month she has completed a successful exhibition at the Janet Carter Gallery and will be opening one in May at the Just Above Midtown Gallery at 50 West 57th Street in New York City.

Sam Gilliam the well known Washington based artist will be speaking and showing slides on Tuesday May 10th at 8:00 p.m. in Herter Hall 227. Gilliam has shown all over the United States and in Europe. His Abstract Expressionist paintings and innovative use of the draped canvas have influenced many contemporary painters.

Angela Davis and Rev. Ben Chavis march in protect of Wilmington 10.

"I am appalled that these young people are still languishing in the North Carolina jails, given the incontrovertible proof we now have of their innocence."

Allen Hall was the only witness to say that he actually saw Chavis and the others carrying out the firebombing and ambush.

Stroud based the prosecution heavily around this testimony.

In the same light, Mitchell's testimony evolved around Chavis' ordering young people to make firebombs.

Hall admitted that presecutors promised him an early release for his testimony.

Promise of a reduced prison sentence for a murder conviction was Mitchell's indicated reason for lying.

Junious' statement, "I testified. . . to these things because I knew what . . Stroud wanted me to say by the way he and Wilmington police detective W.C. Brown asked me questions. They never asked me to tell them exactly what I saw and heard at the church.

"They would always ask me questions like, Did you see so and so at the church,' and 'Did you hear Ben Chavis say 'Let's burn down Mike's Grocery and shoot at police and firemen.'" Junious continued, "This is the way all questions were asked and I knew what answers they wanted. I gave them the answers that they wanted when I testified because I knew that Stroud was going to give me a mini bike. He had already asked me before the trial what I wanted for Christmas and I told him a mini bike."

Junious indicated that Stroud and his assistant went over marked pictures of the defendants before the trial.

Stroud denies charges that he coerced either of the three key-witnesses.

Stroud, now assistant district attorney for Gaston County, said, "There was no threat of any kind. They were never encouraged to do anything but tell the truth."

Stroud indicated that a mini bike was first mentioned to Junious sometime in December 1972.

Stroud said that the bike was offered to ease the burden of testifying and contending with harrassment and threats.

With the help of others Stroud was able to pull together the amount required to purchase a mini bike.

He said he gave Junious the mini bike because he realized that the young man's grandmother could not afford to get the bike for him and that he had a "strong feeling of affection" for him.

Dr. Cobb also has indicated that he is unhappy with the U.S. Justice Department's "soft stance" on the case.

Disappointment also was expressed over the fact that a federal habeas corpus petition filed by the defense has not been ruled on for 16 months.

Seabrook marchers protest arrest treatment

PORTSMOUTH, N.H. [AP] — Hundreds of anti-nuclear power demonstrators remained confined yesterday in four armories across the state and some who were released complained bitterly about their treatment.

Several of the men and women who were carted off the construction site of a nuclear power plant in Seabrook on Sunday said many of the demonstrators were forced into the back of National Guard trucks and stayed there for up to 15 hours without food or drinking water.

The demonstrators, who put an estimated 2,000 men and women onto the plant site Saturday for the 24-hour "occupation", said further sit-ins would take place even in greater numbers.

The excavation work continued Monday when more than 250 construction workers returned to the site.

Authorities funneled the arrested through the Portsmouth armory 16 miles north of Seabrook where four judges worked through the night and into late Monday to arraign them on trespass charges.

Reporters were barred from areas where the demonstrators were held. Roland Jenkins, Gov. Meldrim Thomson's press secretary, said about 1,200 had been arraigned by mid-afternoon.

The Clamshell said the figures were low and as many as 1,800 may have been arrested.

About half of those arrested were confined at the armory in Manchester, the rest in armories in Portsmouth, Somersworth and Dover.

A leader of the sit-in on the site of the proposed nuclear plant on New Hampshire's seacoast accused Thomson of intervening in the legal process and claimed that many demonstrators did not have their constitutional rights protected.

"Occupiers have been held on buses and virtual cattle cars... some have been ...denied adequate food and toilet facilities and are being confined in unhealthy and overcrowded conditions," the group said in a news statement.

Read said most of those arrested were declining bail because authorities "have been very arbitrary in the way they've treated people."

Bail has ranged from personal recognizance to $500 cash. A Clamshell spokesman said that "only a handful" of demonstrators put up bail or were released, that most were determined to stay jailed until court hearings had been completed.

No figures on the number released were available. Neither Jenkins, nor state police, nor the state attorney general's office, nor the county prosecutor's office, nor court officials had figures on the number of demonstrators released.

Court authorities said hearings will be held for those arrested as soon as they can be arranged.

Raymond Laporte, 25, who spoke with reporters after leaving the Portsmouth armory on bail, said he was taken from the construction site at 8:30 p.m. Sunday in the back of a military truck and left there with about 20 other protesters until arraigned at 11:30 a.m. Monday.

He said he received no food nor drinking water and when he asked to make a phone call was told there were no phones in the armory.

Neither Thomson nor state Atty. Gen. David Souter nor county prosecutors were available to reporters to speak about the charges.

Laporte said he was not read his rights when arrested.

Several reporters who were among journalists arrested said they also were not read their rights under the U.S. Supreme Court's Miranda ruling.

SGA ponders deficit budget

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association (SGA) co-Presidents Pinky Batiste and Jon Hite met with members of the Student Senate yesterday afternoon to discuss a deficit of $63,500 in the senate budget.

Senate Co-ordinating Committee members voted on a budget of $1,173,000 for fiscal year (FY) 1977-1978 beginning July 1. Total revenue expected from the Student Activities Tax Fee was set at $1,109,500.

"We are basing the total expected revenue on the figures of student enrollment for next year given by Whitmore," Batiste said.

Projected enrollment of 18,000 students for fall semester and 17,500 enrollees for spring semester are "conservative figures by senate estimates", according to Batiste.

The committee decided upon three sources from which to meet the deficit. The finance committee fund will be cut from $33,000 to $25,000, returning $8,000 to the budget.

The committee also anticipates a $40,000 return from the Recognized Student Organization (RSO) groups who failed to use their total senate allocated funds for fiscal year '77.

A proposed 2 per cent increase over the existing 6 per cent cut to RSO group allocations was approved to bring in $15,500 to the budget. The RSO office and area governments will be exempt from the 8 per cent cut across the board.

The deficit will also affect proposals of new jobs offered by members of the committee. Former Director of Communications Brian Harvey criticized the funding of job requests for the fiscal year '78.

"I've never been in an organization where an attempt to economize is looked upon as heresy," said Harvey.

Faculty could vote no confidence

Puryear topic of meeting

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

Faculty Senate Secretary Terence Burke has called a general faculty meeting for 3:30 this afternoon at Mahar Auditorium.

The agenda includes motions relating to the controversial long range faculty reallocation plan of Provost and Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Paul L. Puryear.

Burke said last night in a telephone interview, he believes "there's a fair probability the motion to express no confidence in the provost will pass."

The other motions concern governance procedures for academic and personnel decisions on campus.

Puryear said last night he is waiting until this morning to decide if he will attend the meeting.

Burke said the vote will probably be divided "from the people of all the schools" on campus. "My understanding of the faculty's concern," said Burke, "is not so much about substance (of the provost's plan), but rather governance." He added he heard some faculty from the School of Business Administration (SBA), which would receive additional faculty under the plan, are "also concerned."

Afro-American Studies Associate Professor Michael M. Thelwell, who has been defending Puryear, said last night he has "no idea" of the vote's outcome, but hopes the faculty would behave "rationally".

"I hope the faculty would behave reasonably and examine the issues fairly," said Thelwell, "rather than seek to make the provost a scapegoat for conditions which began long before he ever came here."

He also said he hopes the faculty community will be "seeking solutions rather than looking to make judgements."

"Efforts to stack the meeting and influence the voting would only contribute to a lynch mob atmosphere not conducive to rational judgement," said Thelwell.

Scientists to keep open mind on UFOs

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

Most scientists are skeptical, but open minded, about unidentified flying objects (UFO's) according to UMass Astronomy Professor David Van Blerkom, yesterday.

"I think most people associate skepticism with closed-mindedness. It's dangerous to be dogmatic about anything if you're a scientist," said Van Blerkom.

Van Blerkom also said he is skeptical of the reports of intelligent aliens visiting Earth. "It seems to me that if any race took the trouble to cross the vast distance, they would make themselves known. They wouldn't sneak around the remote areas of the U.S. and kidnap semi-illiterate people."

Hayden Hewes, head of the International UFO Bureau, announced recently that President Carter reported seeing a UFO while he was governor of Georgia in 1969. Hewes said he sent Carter a questionnaire and that Carter filled out the form and returned it.

According to Hewes, Carter said the UFO was "luminous and did not appear solid." Carter also said the UFO changed color while he watched it.

A recent survey by the American Astronomical Society showed that about one fourth of its members feel UFO's warrant further study. About a thousand members (45 per cent) said they would like to receive further documentation.

Van Blerkom said that the study asked several questions ranging from "Do you think UFOs are ridiculous?" to "Do you think they should be studied intensely?" Thomas Arny, also an Astronomy professor at UMass, said he feels that UFOs would be interesting to study, but he doesn't think that UMass or the government should spend money on such a project.

Arny said he feels that the most UFO reports are caused by people misinterpreting what they see.

"A friend of mine was on a destroyer in World War II. He was below decks when all of a sudden the guns started firing. He ran up on deck and asked what was happening. The crew pointed to a light in the sky and said that the ship was under attack. It turned out that they were trying to shoot down the planet Venus."

Both scientists said they felt that there was good chance for life to exist elsewhere in the universe. "I'd be willing to guess that we'll probably detect intelligent life within the next hundred years," said Arny. "Some scientists feel that there is an intelligent civilization within a hundred light years of us."

"The radio telescopes that we have now, such as the one in Puerto Rico, could be used to send or listen for messages. Perhaps one of them might be used for this purpose," Van Blerkom said.

Some scientists have suggested building a large array of radio telescopes that could be used to search for life in the universe. "The cost of a project like that would be enormous. I think most scientists feel that it would be a nice thing to have but that the money could be better spent," Van Blerkom said.

According to Arny, Dr. J. Allen Hynek of Northwestern University is one of the more "balanced" UFO researchers. "I read his book and found it to be an open minded, well reasoned book. He has put his name on the line with many of his colleagues."

"I'm not inclined to think that all UFO reports are made by nuts. I had a friend who worked on the Condon Report. He investigated two sightings in detail. One of them turned out to be a smoke ring from some secret nuclear tests. But the other one he couldn't find any explanation for."

The Condon Report was a study that was done for the U.S. government in 1969. The report concluded that there was no evidence to link any UFO sighting to a visit by intelligent beings.

The treasurer of Central Area Council (CAC), recently elected, was unable to attend last night's CAC meeting.

Gary Anderson, the area treasurer, was arrested over the weekend for his role in the Seabrook demonstration, said Mark Zinan, area president.

In other matters, Jay Flyn, a Central Area resident and a member of the Spring Concert stage crew, suggested the possibility of a Fall concert.

"The basic stages of the idea are being planned. We would like to have it finalized within the next two and a half weeks," said Flyn.

Flyn is asking the council for $700. He believes if a liquor license is granted, beer and refreshments will cover additional expenses. Flyn plans to ask the UMass Department of Public Safety to allow them to block off the street in front of Wheeler House "so that the concert may be held in a place other than the hill." If this is denied there are two alternative locations: between Franklin and Wheeler; and between Brooks and the New Africa House.

The date has been set at Sept. 10, the Saturday after Labor Day. Further plans for the concert will be discussed at next week's meeting.

In othe action, the council is looking for a new activities coordinator who will be paid $10 a week. This will be voted on at next week's meeting.

Brooks house asked the council for $200 to aid them in paying a bill of $400 for the police needed at the May Day concert. As a result of this concert, Van Meter North requested between $110-$175 to pay for damages to the dormitory.

Goessman reports over $50,000 in theft losses

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

Equipment estimated at $50-$3,000 was stolen from Goessman Lab over the past year, but wasn't reported until April 28, according to the UMass Department of Public Safety.

Chief Robert Joyce reported that a power control unit, a vacuum gauge, an air bearing table, a high frequency heater, a strain gauge, and an audio-frequency generator were all stolen over the past year but went unnoticed at Goessman until recently. Joyce added that the equipment had been transferred to UMass from the federal government last year but was evidently spare material because of the long delay in reporting the theft.

Michael C. Donnelly, a 19-year-old UMass student from 9 Chestnut Street, Amherst, was arrested on April 29 for breaking and entering in the night time at the Tilson Farm with intent to commit a misdemeanor (maiming a horse), according to the Department of Public Safety.

Chief Joyce explained that Donnelly, while on the Tilson farm, ran a horse through a barbed wire fence and injured the animal. Reports are still coming into the Department concerning the Donnelly incident.

Bomb Threats

The Department received two reports of bomb threats at Washington Tower on April 28 and Cashin Dormitory on April 30. In both incidents, the dorms were evacuated and searched for a possible bomb. Both searches found nothing, but the State Police in Northampton, who received the Cashin call, were able to identify the voice of the caller who was arrested in connection with a rash of suspicious origin fires in Sylvan area (Brown on April 2 and McNamara on April 7 and 26).

PUBLIC APPEAL

On Sunday, May 1 between 1:20 a.m. - 1:30 a.m., a UMass student was assaulted in the courtyard between the infirmary and Durfee Conservatory. Chief Robert Joyce said he is "soliciting the community for help" in regard to this incident. Joyce reported that the victim says another person might have seen the incident or heard screams. If you have any information concerning the incident, contact the Department of Public Safety. Joyce emphasized that callers may remain anonymous and that all calls will be kept in the strictest confidence.

The caller was labelled a suspicious person on April 29 because he was hanging around McNamara. He left McNamara but was later apprehended on Route 9 by the State Police. The caller fit the description of the Sylvan fire bug, as well as the voice of the bomb threat. The name of the caller was not given.

An eight inch round hole with powder burns was discovered on the tenth floor window of John Adams by a Head of Residence on April 30. The Head of Residence explained to the Department of Public Safety that the early morning noise "sounded like two bombs exploding." The Department discerned that the "two bombs" were in actuality two CO2 cartridges from a pellet gun. The incident is still under investigation.

Under the Influence

Kevin J. Colletti, 18, of 10 Oceanside Dr., Beverly, was arrested May 1 on Massachusetts Ave. for operating a motorcycle under the influence of alcohol, driving without a license, driving without registration or possession of registration, driving a motor vehicle on a sidewalk, faulty equipment, no inspection sticker and repeated operation.

Merrill S. June II, 22, of 17 Metcalf St., Worcester, was arrested May 1 on Commonwealth Ave. for driving his 1968 Plymouth under the influence of alcohol, operating to endanger, and impeded operation. A passenger in June's car was placed in protective custody for drunkeness.

Stephen Carpenter, 17, of 40 Farview Way, Amherst, was arrested April 30 in lot 31 near North Village Road for operating a motor vehicle without a license, operating an uninsured and unregistered motor vehicle and possession of an altered drivers license.

Charles E. Council, 27, of 599 Union St., Springfield, was arrested at Whitmore April 26 on a default warrant drawn by the Amherst Police Department. The Department reports that Council was subsequently turned over to the Amherst Police.

Robert J. Driscoll, 22, of 167 Warren Wright Rd., Belchertown, was arrested April 30 on the access road near lot 21 for operating his Ford pick-up truck under the influence of alcohol.

Pottery Stolen

Two pottery figures, whose value go beyond monetary, were stolen from Munson studio on April 30 around 1:30 in the afternoon. The Department reported that the figures were part of a student's thesis for a final grade. The figures were worth $300.

Sometime between midnight April 30 and 6 a.m. May 1, stereo equipment was stolen from Pierpont Dormitory. The Department reported that losses may exceed $2,000 and that the Detective Division is currently investigating the case.

Autos Stolen

A 1972 Chevrolet parked in lot 40 was stolen April 30 between 8 a.m. and 2 p.m. The Department reported that the vehicle was locked. The Chevy was estimated at $1,200.

A 1970 Volkswagen parked in lot 65 was stolen April 30. The Volkswagen was also locked. The loss is estimated at $1,000.

A 1968 Buick parked in lot 63 was stolen April 30. The Department recovered the vehicle completely burnt in Leverett on May 1. The loss is estimated at $500.

An early model Falcon smashed into a 1975 Toyota in lot 44 on May 1. The Department is searching for the Falcon that caused $400 damage.

A similar hit and run took place on April 29 in Baker Dormitory parking lot. The Department has a description and registration number of a car that was observed leaving Baker's parking lot after having caused $150 damage to a 1972 Ford.

Six bicycles were stolen from the racks at Butterfield, John Quincy Adams, Coolidge, Baker, Chadbourne, and the library. The bikes were all valued between $100-$200.

Partial budget approved by town meeting

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

Amherst Town Meeting members last night approved several "housekeeping" items and approximately half of the town's fiscal 1978 operating budget before adjourning at 11 p.m.

The rest of the agenda will be considered tomorrow night and at subsequent meetings next week until all 68 articles have been voted on by town meeting members.

The first 13 items, dealing with the usual appropriations and transfers, were passed with relatively little discussion and almost all unanimously. Article 14, the town budget, however, stirred much debate and several amendments to it were made, none of which have passed so far.

Town meeting members defeated motions by Selectman William C. Atkins to cut various sections of the budget. His motion to cut $15,000 from a $549,807 allocation for the Fire Department and $6,000 from a proposed $125,230 Emergency Services budget was defeated by a tally vote of 125-94, thus retaining the Public Safety budget as proposed.

The members also defeated his motion to cut the Jones Library account of $258,798 by $11,500 and the Recreation Department allocation of $47,710 by $10,000, thus also retaining the amount recommended by the Amherst Finance Committee for the Human Services section of the budget.

The standing vote was 140-82.

Atkins' proposed cuts were part of an overall package put together by Atkins independent of the other selectmen which would reduce the recommended budget of the Finance Committee and the town manager by $171,500 — a decrease of $1 on the tax rate.

Atkins' total package, which will be introduced in separate motions as each category of the budget is discussed, will propose cuts in four other areas.

He proposes a $10,000 reduction in the $32,379 Planning Department proposed budget and a $50,000 cut in the $350,918 Highway Maintenance budget. He also proposes a $34,000 cut in the $125,500 allocation being requested by the selectmen in Article 18 for the purchase of items of equipment such as an ambulance, police cruisers, and a school bus, and a denial of a selectmen request that they be authorized to borrow $35,000 to purchase a fire pumper.

As indicated by both the tally and standing votes on Atkins' proposals, the town meeting is closely divided as to whether to allocate money for human services or cut back the tax rate of the town.

The Amherst Taxpayers Association, which had come out with its own recommendations regarding the proposed budget, deferred to Atkins' proposals and supported them.

The other articles passed by the town meeting include the following:

—that the town will hear the reports of the Town Officers, the Finance Committee, the Planning Board, and any other Town Boards or Committees, and take any other action related thereto.

—that the town will appropriate a sum of money to pay unpaid bills of the preceding fiscal years.

—that the town will appropriate and transfer funds to pay the expenses of issuing bonds during FY '77, specifically, an appropriation and transfer of $16,286.01 from water and sewer reserves.

—that the town will appropriate and transfer $434.49 from the Transit Authority Transportation Project — Reserved for Appropriation Account to Article 16 of the Warrant of the October 27, 1975 Special Town Meeting.

—that the town will appropriate and transfer the sum of $202.16 from Sewer Receipts Reserved to Article 30 of the Warrant for the May 6, 1974 Annual Town Meeting.

Articles 6 through 10 were transfers for the current year to meet anticipated deficits for several accounts for FY '77.

Dog packs under control

By W. ANDREW SUNDSTROM
Collegian Staff

The town of Hadley's recent problems with attacks by roaming packs of dogs has been brought "pretty much under control," Hadley police officer Michael Majewski said last night.

Dog packs were responsible for the deaths of livestock and pets in the town in recent months. According to Majewski, no attacks on people were reported.

Mary Malinowski, of Huntington Road, said a pack of three dogs killed her family's riding horse last February. Malinowski said she felt the dogs were probably local domestic dogs allowed by their owners to roam without restraint.

Members of the Zatyrka family of North Maple Road also suffered the loss of several animals to dog packs, and other neighbors have reported similar attacks on livestock in recent weeks.

Majewski and other Hadley officers have been spending much of their time lately attempting to bring the dog problem under control. Malinowski said she was satisfied with the job the town was doing in rounding up the packs, mentioning, "I haven't seen any dogs in a few days."

UMass students probably have little to fear from the Hadley packs, despite the town's proximity to campus. UMass Public Safety officer Thomas Bernaski said last night he has heard of no reports of dog-pack problems at the University itself.

The short-term solution to Hadley's dog problems appears to be continued tough enforcement of the town's leash laws in order to ensure that dogs cannot rove the town for extended periods of time. Still, the Daily Hampshire Gazette reports that there is talk among Hadley selectmen of a stricter leash law so that owners would be motivated to take greater responsibility for their pets.

Boston kids hit UMass

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

UMass at Amherst will be presented in its most favorable light to more than 200 high school juniors visiting the campus today and tomorrow for a "Boston Day" celebration.

More than 16 Boston public high schools will be participating in the program created by former Student Government Association (SGA) President Paul Cronin to "show students what UMass is all about."

Associate Dean of Students Janice Wertz has been coordinating the efforts of 17 faculty members and undergraduates to make "Boston Day" an educational event for the teenage visitors and their guidance counselors.

Buses will be arriving on campus at 9:30 a.m. and students will then be escorted to the Campus Center to hear an address on campus life delivered by Robert L. Woodbury acting vice-chancellor of student affairs and SGA co-president Marion L. Batiste.

In addition to attending an afternoon workshop entitled "Making it at UMass," the students will receive meals in the dining commons, and visit dormitories. Batiste will provide a tour of the campus today for the possible members of the class of 1982.

To provide the visiting entourage with a favorable impression — a disco will be held in the Commonwealth Room at 8 p.m. this evening. No alcoholic beverages will be served.

Moonie relates deprogramming

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

This is the second half of an article on a religious cult discussion held recently on campus.

Mike Bowles, a follower of Rev. Sun Yung Moon for five months in Los Angeles, related his experiences and how he was finally deprogrammed.

Bowles had gone to an "International Dinner" sponsored by the Unification Church.

"I liked having all this attention paid to me. I got a lot of love from everyone. I thought they were some kind of Jesus freaks, but I felt bad about leaving right after the meal so I gave them my name and address, which was a mistake," Bowles said.

After he was hounded by a member of the church he finally agreed to go for a weekend in the San Bernadino Mountains. The weekend lasted three days. "You get the feeling that you are the only one that wants to leave," he said.

He soon became a cult member.

Bowles said he was deprogrammed when he went home for a few days to visit his family. He didn't suspect anything when his parents took him to visit some of their "friends".

"There were some people there, they started talking to me. I didn't want to listen, I thought they were satanic, but they kept talking to me and I started listening and soon I started thinking for myself again," Bowles said.

"Mrs. Smith", who had her son deprogrammed, said she believes a religious cult's purposes are only money and power. She explained how she knew her son had become a "Moonie" and something was wrong.

"My son was acting like a computer. He had a programmed answer for everything. When he didn't have an answer he had a strange little giggle that used to drive my husband up the wall," she said.

"Every cult leader is considered a father image and you are a 'baby' when you start with the group. This is because you should be like a child to understand God. (Rev. Moon) You should honor your mother and father and Moon is your father," Smith said.

"Mrs. Smith" said he[illegible] [illegible] be professionally de[illegible] [illegible] Deprogramming is not possible in some states because the Civil Liberties Union works for the freedom of religion and restraining orders or extraditions aren't allowed if the person is over 21.

David L. Needle, a UMass student, and an ex-follower of Rev. Sun Yung Moon, said he learned man is a social animal and once his emotions are controlled you can do whatever you want with him, which is exactly what the Moonies do.

"Mrs. Smith" echoed Needle's thoughts and said, "They could even have you worshiping a frog if they wanted to."

Chinese scientists to lecture

A group of seven scientists from the People's Republic of China arrived here yesterday for a three day visit as part of a program of scholarly exchange between the U.S. and China.

US, Britain plead for Hess

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The State Department said yesterday the United States and Britain again appealed to the Soviets for the release of Nazi leader Rudolf Hess from imprisonment and the Soviets again refused.

Adolf Hitler's former deputy is the last remaining prisoner in Spandau prison in West Berlin. He was sentenced to life imprisonment at the Nuremberg war crime trials.

According to his son, Hess is ill, in constant pain and recently tried to commit suicide.

A statement by the State Department said the United States was aware of a British request to the Soviets for the release of Hess. The statement added, "We have already made our own approach through diplomatic channels."

U.S. officials said the Soviets responded with a flat "no".

The Russians have steadily refused to permit the release of Hess from the prison, which is one of the last remnants of four-power cooperation in Berlin, and — except for a guarded war memorial — the only place where the Soviets can maintain a military presence in West Berlin.

Trawler captain pleads guilty, given sentence, fined

BOSTON [AP] — The captain of the first Soviet trawler seized for violating the 200-mile limit pleaded guilty yesterday to breaking U.S. fishing laws.

Aleksandr Gupalov was given a nine-month suspended sentence and fined $10,000 in U.S. District Court. The Soviet government agreed to pay the United States an additional $240,000 in other fines.

The sentence imposed on the captain was on a criminal charge of violating the permit for his fishing vessel. The Soviet government was fined in a civil action brought against it as owner of the ship by the U.S. government.

The plea clears the way for the release of the 275-foot Taras Shevchenko, which has been idled in Boston Harbor since it was seized by the Coast Guard on April 10 off Nantucket Island.

The Soviet skipper was sentenced by Judge Andrew Caffrey, the same judge who refused to accept a plea of no contest from the Russian on Friday.

After he made his plea, the tall, blond captain rose in court and said through an interpretor: "I did not intentionally violate the laws of the United States."

The Soviet trawler was fishing legally for hake in American waters. However, it was accused of keeping three times its limit of river herring.

Under the new American law, the amount of herring kept cannot exceed one per cent of the entire catch.

The Russians' lawyer, Thomas Edwards, said the foreigners had interpreted the law to mean that 7½ per cent of their catch could be herring.

Before accepting the captain's plea, the judge questioned him about why he decided to admit guilt.

"Did anyone coerce you or force you to plead guilty?" the judge asked. "Were any promises made to you about this matter? Do you understand that you have a right to a jury trial?"

Gupalov listened to a translation of each question and then nodded, "Yes."

The captain faced a possible sentence of one year in prison and a $100,000 fine.

After listening to the skipper's answers, Caffrey said, "I am satisfied that Capt. Gupalov understands the nature of the charges against him. I am satisfied that he has pleaded guilty voluntarily."

The Soviet's lawyer said the trawler would probably go back to work on the fishing grounds in about two days.

When the vessel arrived in Boston, its entire cargo of frozen fish was taken off and put in storage. On Friday, longshoremen began putting the legal portion of the catch back on the ship.

HOUSTON: New York City Mayor Abraham Beame (C), admitting "It should have been done before," asked oil industry leaders to pump some of their offshore drilling dollars into his financially troubled city. The Mayor brought along two dozen business, labor, banking, civic and local government leaders to convince delegates to the offshore Technology Conference in Houston the many benefits New York has to offer as an onshore base for drillers. Mayor Fred Hofhoinz (L) and New York Deputy Mayor Osborn Elliott joined in a news conference. (UPI)

Official claims preventor not responsible for oil spill

Compiled from Wires

HOUSTON — A Phillips Petroleum Co. official said yesterday a blowout preventor that was put on upside down had nothing to do with causing the wild Ekofisk Field well that spewed oil over the North Sea for 7½ days.

W.A. Roberts, executive vice president of the Bartlesville, Okla., firm that is the operator of the field, said it still is not known whether the blowout resulted from human error or equipment failure.

At a news conference at the Offshore Technology Conference, Roberts said the Bravo platform well spewed at a rate of 20,000 to 28,000 barrels a day and caused the shutdown of about 400,000 barrels of production from wells on two other platforms in the field.

Today, Roberts is to accept for Phillips the conference's distinguished achievement award for its conception, development, and implementation of the Ekofisk production, storage, and pipeline system.

Roberts would not speculate on the financial losses from the blowout that was brought under control Saturday but said they would be considerable.

He said the blowout occurred during what had been a routine operation.

"At the time they were installing the blowout preventor, the fellows noticed they had it on upside down and started to take it off and turn it over and that is when the well started to blow," he said.

"I want to emphasize the blowout preventor itself, the fact it was on upside down had nothing whatsoever to do with the well getting out of control. It did make it more difficult to control the well. However, the control that took place on Saturday was made with the blowout preventor still in an upside position."

Roberts said the two platforms that were shut down as precautionary measures are being restored to full production but that the Bravo platform will be down two weeks to a month.

"We don't know who is to blame and we don't know if anybody is to blame or whether it was an equipment failure or what," he said.

"We do know the plug in the tubing somehow came out. We don't know what happened and won't know until we get the platform back in operation. We don't even know where the plug is now."

Roberts said Bravo received no structural damage but that there was some salt water damage to some electrical systems.

Roberts was asked how much Red Adair and his Houston team of oil and gas blowout and fire fighting specialists charged for bringing the well under control, Roberts said. "I just haven't gotten the bill yet," Roberts said.

The blowout could cost the government $60 million in lost revenues, one government official said and is certain to touch off a great debate on tapping Norway's immense underwater wealth.

"I think we have been lucky so far," said Hans Christian Bugge, director of the Norwegian Pollution Control Board. "There are surprisingly few reports of dead birds, and no dead fish."

A government spokesman said Norway will lose $1.2 million daily in revenues during the cleanup — close to $60 million by the time the platform is back in operation.

Coal becoming future fuel source abroad

LONDON [AP] — Coal, "king" of the industrial revolution, is emerging as the fuel of the immediate future in Britain and West Germany because of a looming energy crisis and increasingly vehement opposition to nuclear power. President Carter's approach may pave the way.

Experts say the mineral will be a key factor in the evolving energy prospects of the two countries, Europe's biggest coal producers.

Both governments have taken tentative steps to increase coal output after 20 years of declining production. But they have been reluctant to commit themselves to the massive investment needed for a large-scale program or to coordinate long-range energy master plans, and they face increasingly stringent pollution controls.

"President Carter, with his imaginative plans to deal with America's present energy crisis, has provided a stimulus for us to seek to prevent what could be our own future crisis," said Sir Derek Ezra, who heads Britain's Coal Board and who, like his German counterparts, is pushing hard for a coal-based energy strategy up to the end of the century.

As part of his energy program, Carter has proposed new taxes on U.S. industrial firms that do not convert from oil and gas power to coal within two years. He has announced a goal of increasing the use of coal in the United States by 65 per cent in eight years.

Coal accounts for 90 per cent of U.S. energy reserves, but now is used for only 18 per cent of its energy needs.

Britain, which burns coal to meet 37 per cent of its energy needs, has an estimated 45 billion tons in the ground, enough to last at least 300 years at current consumption levels, the state-run Coal Board says.

Germany, which meets 29 per cent of its needs with coal, has an estimated 59 billion tons of workable reserves, enough for 250 years at the current rate of consumption.

Britain is also exploiting North Sea oil, which should make it self-sufficient in energy by 1980 and into the next decade. But this period of energy affluence is expected to last only about 15 years.

Both Britain and Germany have nuclear power programs, but these have been stunted by political, economic and environmental opposition, especially in Germany.

More and more, economists in London and Bonn believe their countries' vast coal resources, wisely used, will save them from the painful measures ordered by Carter to avoid an energy disaster.

Jerked out of its energy apathy by the skyrocketing Arab oil prices of 1973-74, the British government in June 1974 announced a 10-year coal plan that would cost $3.36 billion. Inflation and a mounting wage bill from Britain's 300,000 miners has since pushed the estimated cost up to $4.59 billion.

The plan calls for current production of about 120 million tons a year to be boosted by 13 million tons a year, mainly from expansion of existing pits and the development of new ones.

The demand for coal in Britain in the year 2000 has been projected at 170 million tons annually.

Major new coal deposits have already been located, and Ezra is confident more will be found. "Our success ration is much higher than the North Sea — one in every four boreholes has found coal," he said.

Pits that had been scheduled for closing are being reworked and new pits are being scheduled, including a massive $340 million mine at Selby in the rich Yorkshire coalfields.

West Germany, like Britain, began cutting back on coal production in the late 1950s as industry switched increasingly to oil and gas. The number of operating mineshafts in the Ruhr, Saarland and Aachen regions plummeted from 146 in 1960 to 43 now.

Demand in the same period slumped from 142 million tons to 89 million.

But in 1974, amid spiraling costs and political uncertainty over Middle East oil imports, the Bonn government began looking again at its own domestic coal as an alternative.

Coal is now an even more significant factor because Germany's nuclear power program is threatened by fierce citizen oppositon, the strongest in any European nation against nuclear energy.

The government has stressed that coal will be the only indigenous resource for electricity if the nuclear energy program is scuttled, and it warns there will be a projected energy gap in the mid-1980s that could stunt economic growth unless coal production is increased.

Energy planners in Bonn have been hesitant to approve major coal expansion because of the massive long-range investment needed to boost production and because of hopes the nuclear power program will overcome oppositon. Carter's endorsement of the coal alternative in the United States may help end that reluctance.

Overland pipeline suggested for natural gas transport

WASHINGTON [AP] — Members of the Federal Power Commission yesterday recommended to President Carter an overland pipeline system through Canada for transporting Alaskan natural gas to U.S. markets.

However, the four FPC commissioners divided over which pending trans-Canada proposal to recommend to the President.

Two FPC members favored the plan of Alaska Arctic Gas and two others favored the package presented by Northwest Pipeline Corp. through its Alcan Pipeline Co. subsidiary.

But all four commissioners said if the Arctic proves impossible they favored the Northwest proposal. And they added in a letter transmitted to the President, if neither trans-Canada plan is found feasible the third proposal of El Paso Natural Gas Co. was an "economically viable" alternative.

The Canadian routes require approval of the Canadian government, ratification of an enabling treaty by the U.S. Senate and the Canadian Parliament, and resolution of several other issues.

In terms of yesterday's prices, the companies estimate these costs for completion of their pipelines in the early 1980's: Arctic, $8.1 billion; Northwest $6.7 billion; El Paso $6.5 billion.

Before a final decision is reached, the President must evaluate the FPC proposal and make a recommendation to Congress by Dec. 1. The President's proposal does not need to conform to the FPC's recommended route. Congress then has 60 days to decide whether to accept the President's proposal.

The law establishing the timetable also limits court challenges, a move designed to avoid the litigation that delayed construction of the Alaska oil pipeline.

Arctic Gas, a consortium of 16 American and Canadian energy companies, proposed a 4,200-mile pipeline. It would run across the Arctic National Wildlife Range in Alaska to the MacKenzie River Delta in Canada before turning southward to Caroline, Alberta, where it would connect with existing pipelines serving the American West and Midwest.

Senator criticizes Carter's energy plan

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. [UPI] — Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said yesterday President Carter's energy program, which calls for the renunciation of "breeder" power reactors, is flawed and will lead the United States to nuclear anarchy.

Instead, Church called for the creation of a global system which would utilize breeder reactor technology under strict international control. Church addressed a conference on world change and security at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

A breeder reactor is a nuclear power reactor which produces plutonium as a byproduct. The plutonium is recoverable and can be recycled to make more energy or diverted into nuclear weapons.

President Carter in his April 7 energy message announced the United States would cease a breeder demonstration project in Tennessee and end reprocessing of nuclear fuel for breeder use.

Church said, "However well intentioned, I am convinced that the administration's nuclear energy policy is a formula for nuclear isolationism.

"Instead of advancing the control of nuclear weapons proliferation, our self-imposed restraint runs the grave risk of leaving an international vacuum, which is an invitation to nuclear anarchy."

Church said he found two major flaws in the Carter policy:

"It does not take sufficient account of the energy vulnerability of countries lacking our resource base.

Florida legalizes use of cancer drug

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. [UPI] — The Florida legislature yesterday voted to legalize use of the controversial drug laetrile which cancer victims claim eases pain and gives them a psychological boost.

The state Senate passed and sent to Gov. Reubin Askew a House-approved bill doing away with penalties for hospitals or doctors administering it to patients who request it.

Askew said he will sign the measure, making Florida the third state in the nation to legalize laetrile — joining Indiana and Alaska. Laetrile has been banned for the past 14 years by the Food and Drug Administration.

The Florida bill does not authorize manufacture of the over-the-counter sale of the substance within the state, but stipulates the patient must supply the laetrile to the doctor or hospital.

"We have built in sufficient guidelines to ensure that there will not be the abuses some physicians think there will be," said Sen. Harry Johnston. Sen. Richard Renick warned, however, that many people who could be cured from cancer through conventional treatment "will look to the drug as a cure-all and as a result die."

The Florida legislative action came as the FDA opened a hearing on laetrile in Kansas City that was ordered by a federal appeals court in Denver.

Watergate defendants' plea denied

Court refuses conviction reversal request

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Supreme Court yesterday rebuffed an attempt by three Watergate defendants to argue that their convictions should be reversed because of a rare news report about secret court proceedings.

The justices turned down without comment a request by lawyers for former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell and one-time White House aides H.R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman to file a supplemental memorandum outlining the impact of the news report.

The court took no action, however, on the appeals of the three officials of ex-President Richard M. Nixon's administration before it began a two week recess. No word on the appeals is expected at least until May 16, when the court meets again.

If attorneys for the three men had been permitted to file the memorandum, they would have argued that the news "leak" from the court made necessary the overturning of all three convictions.

The news report aired by National Public Radio two weeks ago said the court had voted to deny the cover-up conviction appeals but that Chief Justice Warren E. Burger was delaying any announcement of the vote.

The report said the court had split 5-3 to deny the appeals. It added that Burger was delaying announcement of the vote in hopes of persuading at least one other justice to join those voting to review the case. In each appeals, four votes are needed to grant review.

The NPR report said Justice William H. Rehnquist had disqualified himself from considering the case. That appeared likely since Rehnquist disqualified himself from considering the "plumbers" break-in conviction appeal of Ehrlichman and did not participate in Monday's court rejection of the memorandum request.

Delays in announcing votes are not infrequent at the court. Any justice can request the court to postpone announcing a final determination in a case while he lobbies for more support of his views.

But leaks about the private, inner workings of the nation's highest court are very rare. Monday's action could be interpreted as a move by the justices to eliminate any additional outside pressure in its deliberations.

If the court denies the appeals, Mitchell and Haldeman likely would be imprisoned soon thereafter. They have remained free since their Jan. 1, 1975, conviction for conspiracy, obstruction of justice and giving false testimony under oath.

Ehrlichman last October decided to begin serving time while his appeal was pending and is now an inmate at an Arizona prison camp.

All three men were sentenced to 30 months to eight years in prison.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger has refused to comment on the report's accuracy. But the New York Times and NBC News have said they confirmed the report with other sources.

The report said Burger and fellow Nixon appointees Harry A. Blackmun and Lewis F. Powell Jr. voted to review the case.

According to the report, Justices Thurgood Marshall, Potter Stewart, John Paul Stevens, Byron R. White and William J. Brennan Jr. voted to deny the appeal.

Carter proposes revision of present welfare system

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter proposed scrapping the present welfare system yesterday and replacing it with a multi-tiered program to provide jobs for those who can work, cash for those who can't and income tax credits for the working poor.

HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr., who called welfare reform "the Middle East of domestic politics," told reporters the eventual cost of the plan and many details still have not been worked out.

The President promised he would complete the legislative proposals to implement the new system by the first week in August after consultations with legislative leaders in each of the 50 states.

The President had promised in his town meeting address in Clinton, Mass., on March 16 that "on May 1, Joe Califano will come forward and propose to the Congress a comprehensive revision of the entire welfare system." But he said yesterday the existing system "is worse than we thought" and deferred sending legislation to Congress.

Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., and Sen. Russell Long, D-La., chairmen of the House and Senate committees that will consider the proposal, were briefed at the White House Monday. Carter said legislative subcommittees will begin hearings this week even without the administration's specific legislation in front of them.

He said the initial cost of the revised system he will propose won't cost any more than the present system, which is now budgeted at $23.6 billion for fiscal 1978.

Carter said a three-month study of the welfare system by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and other agencies had convinced him "that the present welfare programs should be scrapped entirely and a totally new system implemented."

"If the new legislation can be adopted early in 1978, an additional three years will be required to implement the program," Carter said.

The President said the cost of welfare to state and local governments "should be reduced as rapidly as federal resources permit," but stopped short of promising a federal takeover of the system as many states have urged.

Carter, Califano and Labor Secretary F. Ray Marshall presented only a broad outline of the proposed legislation and gave few details.

The Carter plan includes:

—Up to two million public service jobs designed to give access to a job to every family with children and a family member able to work.

—Earned income tax credit for the working poor, possibly higher than present levels of supplemented with cash.

—"A decent income" for those who can't work, with the benefits now provided by Aid to Families with Dependent Children, Supplemental Security Income and food stamps, consolidated in one cash payment. The payment would be the same for all recipients nationwide except where adjusted for cost-of-living differences.

Carter said the system would include incentives to encourage people to take jobs in the private sector rather than public service jobs. He said it also would encourage people to work by ensuring that a family with at least one person working would make more than a family on welfare.

He also pledged that incentives would be designed to keep families together.

Must reading— The S.F. Chronicle

East Coast newspapers, for the most part, bore me silly. Their close attention to objectivity and high-minded journalism render the previous day's activities duller than ditchwater. That is why each week I head down to the newspaper section of the library to embrace my journalistic love — The San Francisco Chronicle.

It is a newspaper with soul, unlike the ugly and overwhelming New York Times, that huge and somber monolith whose only purpose is to frustrate the simple-mindeds' search for the comics. The Chronicle doesn't devote its front and editorial pages exclusively to city news and Carter drivel as does The Boston Gob. The San Francisco paper also has the best columnist in the country — Herb Caen. Caen typifies the Chronicle's slightly ironic, yet informative attitude. In a recent column, he writes "Runway cuts in curbstone corners, to make life easier for wheelchairs, are turning out to be hazards for the blind whose canes, suddenly swinging free, lead them to believe they should take a large off-curb step." I find it very difficult to make handicap jokes, so I won't.

The Chronicle also reported that San Francisco's gay community is boycotting (gaycotting) orange juice to protest Anita Bryant's anti-gay campaign. All the gay bars have agreed to stop serving orange juice in screwdrivers (which has always sounded like a straight drink to me, anyway). I imagine the San Francisco gays will not start squeezing their own fruits.

That week the Chronicle conducted an interview with Georges Simenon, the French mystery writer, who claims that he has made love to 10,000 women over the past 60 years. "I needed them physically." he claims. After some mathematical wizardry, we find that he has made love to an average of 164 different women each year. Pas mal, Georges! My own record currently stands at 1160 (1149 — if you don't include those who weren't of the age of consent). My greatest difficult was keeping count. For a while, I tried notches on the bedpost but have finally settled on hanging beaver pelts from the walls.

On that same day (a real bonanza), the Chronicle told of the plight of a local Nazi who had set up his Rudolph Hess bookshop across the street from the Temple B'nai Emunah. Needless to say, business was pretty slow on account of the fact that our Aryan friend was spending most of his time sweeping rocks, tomatoes, and front window glass into the rubbish bin.

And finally, in Stanton Delaplanes unique travel column written for the Chronicle, we learn that if you think your child will vomit during or even after a plane trip, fit him out with a cowboy hat. Should the little one feel a touch of nausea approaching, simply slip the hat under his chin, and voila, his cowboy vest is saved.

Say what you will about the Chronicle, at least it is never boring.

Games a success

To the Editor:

The New Games Tournament on Friday was made a success through the team effort of the referees, the artists, the people who participated, and through the support of the many groups and individuals who took time to lend a hand.

The tournament could never have taken place, though, without the funding support received from the Program Council, Southwest Assembly, Central Area Gov't., Orchard Hill Area Gov't., Brown, McNamara, and Cashin Houses, Graduate Student Senate, Greek Council, Student Gov't. Association, and Smith College Recreation Council.

One of the most important functions of New Games is to allow people to join each other in a community experience. Here at UMass, not only did that seem to take place with those who came to play, but it also seemed to happen among the groups and individuals who helped to make the tournament possible. My thanks to every one of you. Give yourselves a pat on the back.

Norman Burger

...more vandalism

To the Editor:

Last Friday and Saturday nights, the UMass ceramics studio was broken into and vandalized. Windows were broken, doors were forced open, and what is worst — people's work was both destroyed and stolen.

Lee-Ann Wessel, a graduate student, has been working on her thesis exhibition for two years. On Friday and Saturday a quarter of her show — at least six month's work — was destroyed or taken. Lee-Ann's exhibition is to be in two weeks. At least a dozen pots belonging to another student, Sarah Chamberlain, were taken. Later broken pieces were found nearby.

People who did this, where are you coming from? The university may be a dehumanizing place, but if you use that as an excuse you're letting it get you. So you're had. In reality the university is made up of people. We're all students, and we all have to live here and deal with this place. So think about it.

For us in ceramics our work here is our main endeavor. Our future careers as well as our present school careers depend on those clay objects that were taken. So if you were responsible, bring them back! No questions, but don't do it again!

Bravo Phi-Sig!

To the Editor:
To the Members of Phi Sigma Kappa:

On the Saturday of Schlitz-a-rama, most of us were somewhat apprehensive about driving the UMass buses through campus, especially in the vicinity of the festivities. The inordinate number of people (and vehicles) expected to be in the general area of your house were sure, we thought, to create considerable delay, confusion, and danger to the operation of the buses. However, due to your organizational abilities, and the extreme dedication and competence exhibited by the individual members who directed traffic, vehicle and pedestrian alike, none of the above fears ever materialized.

Thus, we would like to thank all members of your house for everything you did to minimize the adverse affects that are usually inherent with any crowd-attracting function as large as Schlitz-a-rama.

Seabrook update

To the Editor:

The May Day occupiers of the Seabrook, N.H. nuke site are affiliated with the Clamshell Alliance, a New England organization formed last July to stop Seabrook construction, to assist in efforts to halt nuclear plant development in New England, to re-assert the right of citizens to be informed and then to decide the nature and destiny of their own communities, and, to achieve these goals through direct non-violent actions which put life before property. The Seabrook site is being financed by several major New England corporations, including N.H.'s largest banks and insurance companies that will not insure citizens against nuclear accidents. Aside from the political and economic problems with the nuclear plant, Seabrook is a particularly bad location for such a plant. The ecology of the estuary and coastline is endangered, the popular beaches of Salisbury and Hampton pose evacuation nightmares, and the site is close to a relatively active earthquake fault. The citizens of Seabrook voted against the plant at their town meeting, however the construction company of the plant says it does not have to abide by this decision. Slavic studies cut; political?

To the Editor:

As students of the Slavic Department we wish to express to the general UMass population our views concerning the planned elimination of this department, as well as the Five Year Plan on the whole. Our denouncement however is not of the Provost or any other specified Administrator, but of the apparent contempt of public higher education repeatedly demonstrated in Boston and Whitmore. We defend Slavic studies as a valuable part of balanced education at UMass.

The Slavic Department is a central core for Soviet and Eastern European Studies, the only program in the five college area dealing with the cultural and social development of East Europe and Russia. This region, like Asia, is a distinct and active part of the world, little understood in this country despite its major importance.

Learning about Eastern Europe and Asia, that 'alternate half' of the world and its human and historic experiences, is mandatory to persons preparing to become part of an increasingly cosmopolitan society. So it is ironic that the needed studies of both areas are slated to be entirely excluded, an act somehow appearing to be at least partially politically motivated. What seems to be the real implication of the Five Year Plan?

Just as important to balanced education is cultural exchange and development within this society. With the Slavic studies, Slavic-American students have a chance to regain some of the much-lost culture which mainstream society has ignored, and the chance also to have others learn about Slavic people. The Five Year Plan would remove this, which would be a blow to the general atmosphere of cultural exchange and development that exists here.

In short, the exclusion of Slavic or Asian Studies would damage balanced education at UMass because the scope of humanistic study would be reduced and because other areas would be that much more vulnerable. As UMass is the best place in the state where lower and lower-middle income persons can receive an education balanced adequately with humanistic studies, what then are all the implications of the future plans for students unable to afford private higher education in Massachusetts?

We are not sitting back but are actively resisting. We expressed this at the April 26 rally in an organized group demonstration. And we call on ALL students to defend Slavic, Asian and all humanistic studies at UMass, namely by writing letters to the Board of Trustees and to legislators.

To cancel Union Carbide is 'asinine'

To the Editor:

THIS IS NOT A FIRST NATIONAL AD. I thought I would inform you of that fact seeing as how you have been recently printing letters with opinions such as mine in that section of the Collegian. [coincidence?]

In the last few weeks I have listened to certain groups on campus speak on the practice of apartheid in South Africa and state what they think are appropriate means of action to take. But last Thursday's letter by Bill Stewart, Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa was without a doubt the most asinine idea proposed yet. In it he made a request to Chancellor Bromery to cancel a visit from a Union Carbide representative for purposes of recruiting students. The reason he gave for such a request was Union Carbide's treatment of Blacks in South Africa.

My first impression to such a request was outrage at this ponpous individual who took it upon himself to decide for the whole student body such an important question. To inform us of Union Carbide's activities is commendable, but to bar us from seeing the representative was an infringement on our rights. Did it ever occur to Mr. Stewart that there might be students looking forward to the above mentioned companies visit to our fair campus? [Last I heard, this was a free country].

Would I be presuming too much to assume that the next step in the committee's plan would be to picket Union Carbide's personal offices to keep people from gaining employment because in their opinion Union Carbide was "unethical?" Or if his plans only stretch to the borders of this campus, then by all means be fair and keep every company off campus which in any way offends them.

My next impression of Mr. Stewart's letter was surprise, for unless I'm mistaken, Congress recently passed a bill prohibiting the import of Rhodesian chrome and if Union Carbide is breaking that law, then I'm sure the U.S. Attorney would very much appreciate your information.

One last point, and that concerns the figures given for black vs. white wages paid to Union Carbide employees in Rhodesia. The one small fact that you leave out is that Blacks in Rhodesia are the highest paid, when compared to wages earned by Blacks in surrounding countries. I feel this last point is a minor one, in that wage discrimination is wrong on any scale, but I made it more to bring up a point made in another letter recently printed in the Collegian [one of those mistaken for an advertisement] "Do we respond to political repression of the Chinese [or Russians] the way we do to the repression of blacks in Rhodesia or do our racist attitudes toward the former and our racial guilt concerning the latter held provide completely different responses to what are both travesties of human rights?"

We regret to inform you

Traditionally, the coming of spring has occasioned changes in the substance of thoughts that occupy the minds of young people. Generally these are enjoyable topics — sex, a greening of the earth, parties, May Day, Frisbee and the like.

However, there are less pleasant things that occupy the minds of many of us — final exams and papers, the ending of the semester and summer departures, and for many seniors, the endless waiting for responses to applications to professional schools and graduate schools.

Since it is statistically impossible for these schools to accept the majority of their applicants, the majority must be rejected. Whether the applicants are "let down easily" or scorned for their undue pride in their limited accomplishments or simply processed out of contention is as individual as the school applied to.

Let us look at a case study. Our subject is a young man named Irv Stickle (his name has been changed to protect the man's undue pride in his limited accomplishments) who has applied to many dental schools. Our sample will consist of six rejection letters from both public and private schools.

The UConn School of Dental Medicine rejection letter is by far the blandest of the lot and contains no indication that it is even addressed to any one person in particular. The body of the letter is preceeded only by a noticeably askew stamped date. To its credit the letter points out that the rejection does not deny either Irv's academic ability or potential in dentistry. There are simply too many applicants, it states.

Columbia University's School of Dental and Oral Surgery dates its letter only with the month and year but is kind enough to open with "Dear Mr. Stickle:". The school does feel "sincere regret" but "must necessarily disappoint many fine applicants" because of its "large number of worthy applicants and the high standards" of its program. It ends wishing Irv luck in his "chosen career" leaving it unclear as to whether or not the choices include dentistry.

The Washington University (St. Louis) dental school rejection letter is again a bland one. Like the UConn letter this one has no color variety (the Columbia letter has a blue letterhead) but unlike the two previously mentioned letters it contains the full address of the applicant. The Washington U. letter uses the democratic rationale and the rejection is the work of an Admissions Committee vote. It denies the implication that Irv will not be successful in dental school and says that other applicants simply had a stronger claim. Then, to justify their decision, the letter states all the criteria used in the making of the decision.

The Georgetown University rejection letter is brighter, with a colorful blue letterhead and a real signature in blue ink (not a stamp), but addresses the letter to "Ms. Irv Stickle:". It assures Irv that his application has been carefully considered and, without using the rejection route, simply declines to offer him a spot in the entering class. It also regrets the "disappointing nature" of the letter but wishes Irv future success and happiness.

The State University of New York at Buffalo is even more populist than the preceeding four schools and claims its decision is made by the whole dental school rather than just an admissions committee. It too chooses not to reject but simply to "not act favorably" on the application. Then it credits Irv with motivation and desire, unlike the other letters which credit him with nothing, and wishes him luck while hoping he'll be able to attend another dental school. The letter also uses color well with a blue letterhead and insignia.

None of the aforementioned letters even come close to the rejection letter sent by the University of Pennsylvania's dental school. If you're going to get rejected by a dental school make it UPenn, their rejection practically apologizes for not accepting you.

The UPenn letterhead is multi-colored and personally signed and by far the longest and most carefully written. The school "regrets that it will not be possible" to offer Irv a place in the entering class, is "truly sorry" that many students with excellent records must be turned away, and denies that the decision reflects either on Irv as a student or a person or on his school.

UPenn's letter then goes on to assure Irv that he is qualified for further education and will win admission to some professional or graduate school. Then, before adding the traditional thank - you - for - applying - to - our - school paragraph, the UPenn letter contains a paragraph that perhaps all schools should use in their rejection letters:

"May we remind you that no one has yet perfected the art of human assessment and that you can prove by your own achievements in the years ahead how very short-sighted our Committee was by not granting you admission."

I may apply to the UPenn dental school just to get one of their rejection letters to hang on my wall.

Schlitz-o-guzzle vandalism

To the Editor:

I hope you all had a wonderful time killing a few brain cells at Schlitz-o-guzzle. I hope you had a chance to let off some steam, after all Schlitz-o-guzzle is one of the most important vernal rites of the University.

But why did you have to break nine windows in the Botany Department greenhouses? If you can't drink without getting destructive, then I feel you shouldn't drink. Drunkenness is institutionalized here anyway, so it's not really your fault.

Luckily, it was warm and not raining last night, otherwise a lot of valuable and beautiful plants would have been ruined. Actually, my main beef is that I don't like cleaning up broken glass, so why not go home and break your parents' windows. I am sure your mother likes cleaning up after you.

Polish-American taxpayers' protest

To the Editor:

We, the taxpaying representatives of Polish-American Clubs in Western Massachusetts feel that the state should continue the Slavic Languages program in the University curriculum. Polish is one of the five most widely spoken languages in the U.S.A. Polish-Americans are one of the major ethnic groups in Massachusetts. We deserve to be represented. We have therefore organized to protest any effort of the University to eliminate the study of the Polish language and culture from the curriculum.

You don't need to be a nutritionist

To the Editor:

During the past two semesters, the Collegian has carried a number of beer advertisements. While usually there are no objections to advertising alcohol, two of these ads, one from Miller and one from Schmidt's, are particularly offensive. The Miller ad shows a man refusing lunch while carrying two beers on his lunch tray. The other, from Schmidt's, declares Schmidt's "The Brunch of Champions". The problem with both these ads is that they suggest that beer be used instead of food. You don't need to be a nutritionist to know that since beer, wine and liquor have only calories and no nutritional value, anyone who drinks beer instead of eating breakfast or lunch is harming him or herself.

In other words, the Collegian is carrying advertising that encourages harmful alcohol use. As a paper which tries to serve the University community, the Collegian should instead be carrying only advertisements that show healthy, responsible uses of alcohol, for example, one that showed a beer being consumed WITH lunch. The Collegian should recognize its responsibility to the health of its readers and refuse to print both the Miller and the Schmidt's ads, as well as any others which suggest such unhealthy drinking.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Indian suit goes to White House

AUGUSTA, Maine (UPI) — A meeting is planned in the White House complex Friday by representatives of the parties involved in the Maine Indian land claims suit, according to Rep. William S. Cohen, R-Maine.

The 2nd District congressman said in an interview he expects William B. Gunter, the retired Georgia Supreme Court justice named as President Carter's personal representative on the case, to provide some indication within the next few weeks of the nature of his recommendations.

Patrolmen 'sick-out' ends

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — A two-day "sick-out" involving about 100 New Bedford patrolmen ended yesterday and Massachusetts state police assigned to city patrols were recalled, officials said.

Authorities said the "sick-out" ended yesterday morning and all officers were back on the job. The action apparently stemmed from the city's decision to appeal an arbitration ruling.

After the work stoppage ended, Mayor John Markey said he doubted there really were any illnesses and the men who called in sick would not be paid for the time they missed.

Head of Elder Affairs named

BOSTON (UPI) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis yesterday named James J. Callahan as the permanent head of the state Department of Elder Affairs.

The appointment marks the third cabinet level replacement to be named by Dukakis since he took office in 1975. Others to be replaced were Human Services Secretary Lucy Benson and Consumer Affairs Secretary Lola Dickerman.

Lower auto insurance negotiated

BOSTON (UPI) — State officials and insurance executives yesterday resumed quiet negotiations aimed at finding a way to lower auto insurance rates for some 350,000 Greater Boston drivers and under-25 motorists across the state.

"The clock is ticking," said Insurance Commissioner James M. Stone. "The companies have some hard decisions to make."

Court rules signs legal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled yesterday that communities cannot prohibit homeowners from displaying "for sale" or "sold" signs on private premises.

Laws banning such displays violate the homeowners' rights of free speech, the court said in an unanimous decision.

The ruling struck down a three-year-old ordinance in the southern New Jersey suburb of Willingboro, where town officials had banned such signs in an attempt to end what they saw as the flight of white homeowners.

More children are behind bars

[PNS] — Ten years ago, study after study concluded that imprisonment was the worst possible treatment for children who broke the law. But today the number of youths behind bars in America is skyrocketing.

A decade of liberal reform aimed at channeling young offenders away from penal institutions — into counseling, job-training programs, mental health services and the like — has been reversed.

The bewildering array of youth institutions — public and private, local and state, huge prisons and small homes — makes it difficult to accurately estimate the number of youths in detention. But it appears that more children are locked up, in adult jails as well as juvenile facilities, than ever before.

The swelling ranks behind bars parallel the shrinking opportunities for youths in the streets and schools of America's cities. At the same time that youth unemployment has risen, financially pressed cities have cut back on school, recreational and social welfare programs.

As at least a partial result, youth "property" crimes spurted up by 50 per cent between 1970 and 1975. FBI statistics indicate youths under 18 now account for over half of all arrests for burglary and auto theft and over one-third for robbery.

A growing public outcry against the recession-spurred urban crime wave had fueled what Jane Ward of the California Youth Authority calls "a more punitive attitude toward kids, a feeling among judges and others that kids should be locked up."

With no place to send delinquent youths, juvenile justice has become a boom industry — the agency of first, rather than last resort.

The trend is spelled out by a national study done at the University of Michigan's School of Social Work. "Juvenile justice resources have increased," it concluded, "at the same time other youth-serving agencies experienced declines in their resources ...

"Given the reductions in other key sectors (e.g. public education and child welfare), there may be a tendency to refer youth to those institutions or organizations with the greatest resources."

In more human terms, a California juvenile justice worker laments, "So we know locking them up won't do anybody any good. So what else is new? Where else are we going to put them?"

During the 1960's, juvenile court judges, scholars and blue-ribbon commissions all agreed that locking youths up not only failed to "rehabilitate" them, but often made them worse.

In 1967, the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice declared the juvenile justice system a "failure." The youth who has once been through the process and comes out a delinquent is more likely to act delinquent again," it said.

"The most informed and benign institutional treatment of the child, even in well designed and staffed reformatories and training schools, thus may contain within it the seeds of its own frustration, and itself may often feed the very disorder it is designed to cure."

Fueled by the emerging consensus, many states experimented with programs to "divert" youth from the justice system to presumably more constructive social services.

But today, after extensive studies of this "diversion" process, most criminologists agree that rather than replacing jails, the new alternatives have simply made room for more youths — including less serious offenders — in the juvenile justice system.

Poloists sweep NE's

By ROBERT CORB
Collegian Staff

In less than eight hours the UMass men's water polo team became the Spring New England water polo champions this past Sunday.

The "A" team drew a bye in the first round, while the "B" team played a well-disciplined MIT team and lost 11-1. The lone goal scorer for UMass was Rich Egan. Because of the single elimination tourney style, the "B" team entered the consolation games and beat a team from Brown, 7-1. UMass goal scorers were John Gallagher with two, and Bob Corb, Carl Lukins, Jim McIver, Rick Mansfield, and Bill Tharion all with one.

The "A" team's first game of the day was at 1:30 against the MIT "B" team. UMass completely dominated the game, winning, 9-0. The scoring was well distributed with Corb, Henry Maclean, and Duncan Lomas getting two apiece, and Russ Yarworth, Mansfield, and Tom McGinn getting one each. The second game began at 4:30 with UMass facing perennial foe Harvard.

The game began as a tight defensive struggle with neither team scoring in the first period. UMass began to show its dominance at the beginning of the second period and by the half the score was 4-0.

UMass continued its dominance in the second half, and won going away, 12-2. Yarworth and Lomas led the UMass attack with four goals apiece, while Maclean with two, and Corb and Joe Hebert with one each rounded out the scoring.

In the finals UMass met arch-rival BC who had earlier pulled an overtime upset over Yale. UMass had been waiting all season to play BC and the first quarter set the tempo for the entire game. UMass scored first, and never lost the lead.

The largest lead the team could manage was two, so the game remained close until with twenty seconds left Ben Crooker sealed the victory with his first goal of the tournament. With this win, the UMass poloists capped one of their finest seasons ever, finishing with a record of 9-3, and being crowned the New England champs.

Throughout the year and especially in the championship tourney several UMass players have worked especially hard to make this team what it is. Senior Ben Crooker, a four year veteran of both the polo team and the swim team, is one of the outstanding defensive players on this or any other team in the league. Ben's intelligent use of his size and speed will be sorely missed next year.

Senior Duncan Lomas led the team in scoring this spring with 32 goals. Duncan is a past All-New England pick, and a sure bet to be on the all-star team headed for the National zone championships.

Another past All-New England choice is Henry Maclean. Henry's years of experience and lightning fast starts have earned him respect from all who have seen him play.

Juniors Russ Yarworth, the second leading scorer on the team with 28 goals, and Rick Mansfield are being looked at to lead the team next year.

One of the biggest reasons for this season's success was the play of goalie Ric Notini. Ric did not have a bad game all season, and his sharp outlet passes created many fast-break scoring opportunities.

Several new players such as Tom McGinn, and John Gallagher are expected to figure highly if UMass hopes to repeat as New England champs.

The UMass water polo club currently sports three teams. The women's team finished number two in New England behind BC. The men's "B" team finished the season at 2-6, but offered much valuable experience for all who played. All three teams are self-coached, with Bob Corb acting as the organizer. Corb is currently considering coming back to UMass after he graduates to coach the fall teams. He is also currently working on a proposal to make UMass water polo a varsity status team, a necessary step if UMass wants to move up top possible National Level competition. The N.C.A.A. Nationals will be held at Brown University next October.

Amato seeks new faces

By BOB HASKELL
Collegian Staff

UMass wrestling coach Dave Amato has been grappling in the arena of big-time college recruiting in the weeks since his Minutemen finished third in the New England Championships last March 6, and apparently the former New England titlist has lost none of his competitive savvy.

Recently Amato released the names of some of his newest recruits from the high school and preppy ranks, and the fruits of his labors could signal the beginning of a new era in UMass mat-mauling.

First, there is Dana Rassmussen from Tewksbury, Mass. A Two-time state champion while competing for Tewksbury High School, Rassmussen logged an overall career record of 90-6, and was selected as the Boston Globe's Outstanding Wrestler for this past season. A 107-114 lb. performer in high school, Rassmussen is expected to replace the graduating Peter Sachon in the 118 lb. class.

Four-time New England champion Dennis Fenton will be a difficult man to replace, but Amato has taken a step in the right direction by acquring the services of heavyweight John Allen from Farmingville, N.Y. After finishing second in the Long Island tourney while competing for Sachen High School in Farmingville, Allen blossomed into a dominant force while attending Suffield Academy in Connecticut. The 5'11", 235 pounder captured the National Prep School Championship last season while sporting an awesome 38-0 record. As a bonus, Allen was an all-country (Long Island) and All-New England prep selection as a middle linebacker on his school's football teams.

It is hoped that Stephen Joyce can fill the shoes of departing senior Dana Cormier at 167 lbs. The young Springfield native copped the State crown this year as he displayed his wares for Springfield Cathedral.

A couple of weeks back, the UMass grapplers held their annual awards picnic. Selected to be co-captains for the upcoming season were recently crowned New England champion at 150 lbs., Kevin Griffin, and hard-working Timmy Fallon (158 lbs.).

The team's Outstanding Wrestler Award went to Dennis Fenton, to no one's surprise. Fenton was also cited for having achieved the most pins during the season, and presumably contributed to the increased appreciation of gym ceilings. The team's MVP was Griffin, the Most Improved Wrestler award went to 134-pound Larry Otsuka, and in a coaches-only vote, Steve Jabaut was recognized as the squad's hardest worker.

"The outlook for next season is very good," said Coach Amato, "We have a lot of other prospects who may or may not decide to come to UMass, but whatever happens to them, I still consider our recruiting drive to be very successful up to this point."

Perennial powerhouse URI will still have to be dealt with next year, but Minutemen are optimistic. The Rams can be taught to appreciate a gym ceiling too.

Heagan beaned

MILWAUKEE [UPI] — Mike Hegan woke up Monday looking a little like "Muhammad Ali's last sparring partner," which is not at all the way a Major League baseball player is supposed to look the day after a game.

Except when a player gets hit in the head by a ball, like the Milwaukee Brewers' reserve was Sunday in the second game of a doubleheader against the Cleveland Indians.

Hegan was hit by a pitch thrown by Tom Buskey in the ninth inning of a game the Brewers lost 8-5 after winning the opener 7-3. Some 26,000 fans at Milwaukee county stadium saw Hegan go down.

"I'm fine except for looking a little bit like Muhammad Ali's last sparring partner," Hegan said after being released from a hospital.

He said he had no resentment at all over the pitch, although some of his teammates were hopping mad.

"I saw some of the comments in the paper today by Robin (Yount) and Von (Joshua)," Hegan said. "It's nice to see them stick up for you but I know that Tom Buskey didn't throw at me.

"We played for a couple of years in the Yankee organization. He wasn't trying to throw at me."

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, May 3 — Born today, you are one who may find it difficult to get to know himself. It is vital to your success both as a person and in the matter of a career that you should learn relatively early in your adulthood precisely what capabilities are yours. Your strengths and your weaknesses, your genuine likes and dislikes -- as opposed to the likes and dislikes that others tell you are yours -- your talents: it is necessary that you should know these before you can even begin to make use of your gifts. In many ways you are well suited to the kinds of activity that keep you isolated from people, for you are neither gregarious nor garrulous and, indeed, at times are actually irritated by contacts with others.

A stable individual, you do not allow your emotions to lead you a merry chase through life, nor do you allow intellectualism to rule to such a degree that you have no genuine awareness of your feelings. You never lose sight of the fact that it is head and heart working together that make the harmony of atmosphere, both within and without, that is the proper medium for successful work and satisfying play. You do not, however, need to be in the presence of people to take full advantage of such harmony: success and satisfaction can be achieved without close relationships with others.

There are times when you are slow to realize what your own objectives must be in order to attain the state of affairs you wish.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — If you will own up honestly to the poor quality of certain aspects of your work, you can set about putting things to rights. Hurry!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Though you may not be able to pass the competition, you should certainly be able to catch up with it. Make an effort to increase your pace.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Gains made early in the day may fade under personal stress late in the afternoon. Success may bring a burden that is hard to bear.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Make only provisional decisions today. If you fail to gain some sort of commitment from others, you may have to shoulder the responsibility yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — To find a solution to a problem of the moment, recreate one from the past -- and study its solution carefully.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — There is more opportunity present that you have eyes to see. Don't allow yourself to be blinded by a previous disappointment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — So long as you possess clarity of purpose, you will not get lost even when taking the circuitous route to your goal. Be stouthearted in the evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Recent good deeds bring unexpected rewards today. Don't be overly modest; admit your part in gaining advancement for another.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Allow a companion as much say in a joint project as you insist upon having for yourself. Rely on your own past experience.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Appeal to another's generosity if you would see yourself in the catbird seat by day's end. Seek to find, forgive and forget.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Another's viewpoint may be very much different from your own. Nevertheless, you would be wise not to contest or contradict it.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Keep to a budget previously set for yourself. Spur-of-the-moment buying could cause you considerable dismay later in the week.

Hunt caps season with strong finish

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

UMass track co-captain and half-miler Jim Hunt was pictured two weeks ago in the Collegian just being nipped by Boston College runner Leo Vercollone at the wire in the most exciting race of the day in the UMass Relays.

A week later, Hunt came back to battle Vercollone again in the same relay at the BC Relays. This time Hunt, determined not to be beaten, took on Vercollone again and turned the tables on him by nipping him at the tape.

Hunt will always turn in a quality performance. The senior pre-dental major is one of the finest conditioned athletes, both physically and mentally, that has ever put on a UMass track uniform.

"Jimmy is probably the smartest runner I have ever coached. He rarely makes a tactical error. He reacts very well to tight situations and I have never seen him back off or feel intimidated. He will certainly be a difficult person to replace both as a runner and as a team leader." said coach Ken O'Brien.

Hunt, from New Hartford, ranks presently as 13th in the East and fifth in New England. Last year as a junior, he was rated as the second fastest time in New England behind Northeastern All-American Mark Lech with a time of 1.53.

This season he has improved his time to a 1:52.8 clocking and just recently scored a 1:52 split in his leg of the two-mile relay at the Penn Relays last weekend.

Hunt can always be expected to be between the 1:52-1:54 category. "He's one of the finest quality middle distance runners in New England," said assistant track coach Arnie Morse.

"Distance running in high school was one of the keys to my success up here at UMass, said Hunt. He was a miler in high school, having produced a best time of 4:23. During his earlier years in high school, Hunt exclusively ran cross country but was encouraged by his brothers to compete in indoor and outdoor track in addition to swimming.

During high school track, Hunt found he had natural speed as he was entered in the 1000, or half mile. During the spring, Hunt ran as part of mile relay where he produced a 51 second best time in 440.

According to Hunt, he received letters from all over the country but declined to travel west, basing his decision on an academic program.

"Track was important to me but dental school was really the basis of my decision," said Hunt.

In four years, the senior co-captain said the biggest difference was the rebuilding of New England track. The growth rate of track has been tremendous not only at UMass but in all the state universities and private colleges.

"I think one of the keys to the rebuilding program were men like UMass coach Ken O'Brien who didn't have the money to offer scholarships but brought in good young talent and developed them into great runners by competition," said Hunt.

The highlight in Hunt's track career was not only his fifth place finish in the IC4A Eastern championships last year, but the honor of being elected captain. "It's quite an honor to win as an individual but something more rewarding to having the opportunity to demonstrate leadership," said Hunt.

"I've seen Jimmy Hunt been beaten in a race before but I have never seen him beaten himself. He is a first-class runner," said O'Brien.

Gibson far from idle

NEW YORK [UPI] — For a competitor like Bob Gibson, this is a completely novel transition, a period in his life when his subconscious sometimes still urges him to get up and go to the ballpark and his conscious says what for, nobody's waiting there for him anymore.

The sudden change from Major League Superstar to simple everyday private citizen never is an easy adjustment for any ballplayer to make, no matter how much or how well he is prepared for it in his own mind.

In the case of Bob Gibson, who was so intense, so uncommonly committed, during the 17 years he pitched for the St. Louis Cardinals, the abrupt switch had to be more difficult yet.

"I don't have to work," he was saying one day this spring while visiting his old ball club, the St. Louis Cardinals, at their St. Petersburg training quarters.

"That only goes so far and then you have to get something to do. You go nuts sitting around. I worked from 9 to 5 in a bank and thought I was going to die. I wasn't used to the regimentation."

Gibson, who retired at the end of 1975, holds more club records than anyone who ever pitched for the Cardinals. He won the most games, 251, struck out the most batters, 3,117, pitched the most shutouts, 56, and had the lowest earned run average for any one season, 1.12.

Since he quit pitching, the 41-year-old Gibson has been anything but idle. He's chairman of the board of station KOWH in Omaha and vice president of the Community Bank of Nebraska in that same city. He also has done some baseball broadcasting on TV, drawing a couple of critical notices for one of the interviews he did with John Candelaria after the Pittsburgh left-hander no-hitted the Dodgers last August ("I wasn't that bad, was I?"). He was, although ordinarily he does a good job in front of the mike.

Gibson says he has been much more relaxed since he left baseball, and it shows.

"Everybody thought I was so cool and nonchalant every time I went out there," Gibson said to Mike Shannon, who was one of his teammates with the Cardinals and now is one of their broadcasters.

"They never knew what really was going on inside me. I don't know that I could explain it. I was just tense and hyper. Reporters realized something was wrong with me. They could see I didn't want to talk before I had to go out and pitch a ball game. They thought I was being an ass, that I was purposely being difficult, but it wasn't that at all. I'd go home the night before a ball game and I didn't want to be around anybody. It wasn't that I was trying so hard to concentrate; it was my way of getting up.

Five enter hoop shrine

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — Five new members, including former Los Angeles Lakers star forward Elgin Baylor, were inducted into the National Basketball Hall of Fame Monday.

Baylor was the best known of the five men who had their colorful stained glass windows unveiled in the Hall's Honors Court. But most of the emotion was reserved for Charles T. "Tarzan" Cooper, a star from another era.

Cooper, 71, of Philadelphia, played professional basketball for nearly 20 years beginning in 1925. He was considered the most valuable player on the New York Renaissance team which won 88 straight games in 1932-33.

Cooper, who has been called the greatest center of his time, beamed at the stained glass window.

"It's a great feeling, the most wonderful feeling," he said. "It's the greatest of my life. Not in my wildest expectations did I think this would happen. It's a big day."

Cooper finished his career in the Black Professional League as team captain and player-coach on the World Professional Basketball Championship Washington Bears.

As Cooper's plaque was uncovered, many of his old Renaissance teammates hooted and cheered and one of them repeatedly wiped tears from his eyes.

The Rens had already been inducted into the Hall as a team, one of only four teams so honored. But Cooper and Baylor were the first black players to participate in the Hall's induction ceremony. Former Boston star center Bill Russell boycotted the ceremony when he was inducted.

"I thought I made some contributions to the game of basketball," said Baylor, "but I still felt pretty good when it actually heppened."

Bruins geared for big upset

Can the Bruins unseat the mighty Canadiens and bring the Stanley Cup back to Boston after an absence of five years?

If Gerry Cheevers continues to display his extraordinary talents in goal, he may very well be the key factor that will do the trick. His play in the Philadelphia series was simply magnificent.

During the Los Angeles series Cheevers was somewhat overshadowed by Rogie Vachon, who is probably the best netminder in the business, Ken Dryden notwithstanding. Cheevers is the reason that the Bruins swept the Philadelphia Flyers.

One would expect to see Bernie Parent getting all the headlines. But Parent found himself in the unaccustomed position of sitting on the bench, as Wayne Stevenson took over the goaltending chores.

Stevenson played well, but he was not able to match Cheevers feats. He just doesn't have the benefit of years of playoff experience behind him that Cheever has.

Former NHL and WHA veteran netminder Al Smith gave Cheevers the utmost compliment when he compared him to Vladislav Tretiak, the goalie on the Russian team.

"If Tretiak had Cheevers' mind, he would be the best goalie in the world. If Cheevers had Tretiak's body, he would be the best goalie in the world."

Reclaiming Cheevers from the WHA has to rank among Harry Sinden's best moves. But that alone hasn't made the Bruins into the team they are today. Sinden made trades that brought in players like Jean Ratelle, Brad Park, Peter McNab and Bobby Schmautz, all of whom have been instrumental in the team's success.

These players have fit nicely into coach Dan Cherry's system. Cherry, who played for Eddie Shore in the minor leagues, has brought some of the old man's ideas into the NHL. He demands that his players be two-way hockey players. Anyone who isn't will quickly occupy the bench until he learns how to play the game.

Look at Brad Park, for example. He is no longer the flashy, ice-rushing defenseman of his New York Ranger days. Instead, he is a steady all-star performer, who does what he has to do to help the team.

I was among the critics who lashed out against the Esposito trade, figuring that Jean Ratelle was getting old. Little did I know that he was one of those ageless wonders (a la John Havlicek) who would bring a lot of class to Boston.

Ratelle has done it all for the Bruins. His leadership has been a big influence on the younger players. He's consistently winning the key faceoff, scoring the big goal, or setting one up.

This Bruins team does not rely on any one individual to make things happen. Those days disappeared when Bobby Orr left for Chicago.

Each member of the Bruins knows he has to work hard with his fellow teammates to get things going. This is not only true of the Ratelles or Parks, but also true of the Jonathans and Hagmans.

Man for man, the Bruins do not match up against the Canadiens. No team in pro hockey does. But that doesn't mean the Canadiens are unbeatable! After all, the Bruins are the team which gave Montreal the most trouble during the regular season, handing the flying frenchmen three of their eight losses.

The general feeling is that any team that only loses eight times during the course of a season shouldn't lose four games in two weeks.

Tell that to Gerry Cheevers and Co. They just might have something to say about that.

Gazelles face Lyons, seek to regain form

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

Smarting and still perhaps a little surprised after suffering its first loss of the season on Saturday afternoon, the UMass women's lacrosse team will be seeking to regain that winning formula this afternoon when the Gazelles play Mt. Holyoke College in South Hadley.

The Minutewomen, 5-1-1 on the season, lost their first game Saturday, when UNH defeated them, 7-5 in Durham in a close and hard fought game.

"It was a one or two goal game throughout," said UMass coach Frank Garahan. "One team would score a goal, then the other team would come right back and maybe score two."

The Gazelles got off to a strong start, as they scored two goals off of their fastbreak offense which has been their strong point this season.

UNH scored to cut the UMass lead in half, 2-1, but the Gazelles answered back with a goal with 10 minutes to go in the first half to give them a 3-1 advantage.

However, the Wildcats put on a strong offensive flurry in the last five minutes of play in the half and managed to net two goals, tying the game, 3-3 at the half.

"We were reacting well on defense," Garahan said, "and we were getting good movement on our offense. We were getting the shots, it was just a case of outstanding goaltending that hurt us."

UMass once again started the second half off in strong fashion, netting a goal less than two minutes into the half. But the seesaw game swung right back to UNH, as the Wildcats tied the game, 4-4 moments later.

UNH controlled play for the next eight minutes, scoring two-unanswered goals to take a 6-4 lead, to the delight of its home fans.

UMass scored late in the game to pull within one, but the Wildcats added an insurance goal in the final seconds.

"We really pressed on offense," Garahan said, "but we just couldn't put the ball in the net."

Garahan said that he is hoping for another crack at the Wildcats when the teams will participate in the New England Women's Lacrosse Association Tournament this weekend.

"We were mentally prepared for the game," Garahan said, "but we might have been a little too overconfident after our big win against Bridgewater St.

Hopefully the loss will have the same effect on the team as the tiet we had against Northeastern in our first game of the season. That tie just fired the team up and I hope the loss will have the same effects."

Against Mt. Holyoke today, Garahan isn't looking for too big a battle.

"Mt. Holyoke is not that strong a team," he said. "In fact, they just lost to Smith, a team we beat by over 10 goals."

Garahan said that he will be trying to use everybody on the team so that they will have some playing time for the weekend tournament.

"Our next two games this week should be fairly easy contests," Garahan said, "so I will be trying to get everybody into the game so that when playoff time comes around, inexperience will not be a problem for us.

"Also, during the playoffs this coming weekend, we may be playing more than one game in a day, so it will be important to keep everybody in top shape because we will need them."

Czech icemen win

VIENNA [UPI] — The United States led twice against title holder Czechoslovakia Monday before losing 6-3 in their final first round match of the World Ice Hockey Championships.

The Americans thus wound up with three points in seven matches during the first round and will compete against Finland, West Germany and Romania in the playoffs for rankings five to eight.

The U.S. offered surprisingly strong resistance to the Czechoslovak World Champions and were ahead 2-1 after the first period on goals by Dave Hynes and Bob Miller. After the Czechs drew even in the opening seconds of the middle period, Bob Krieger put the Yanks ahead again at 3-2 just a minute later with a blistering shot from the blue line.

Intramural playoffs set; softball championship at stake

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

All good things must come to an end, like the Boston Celtic's NBA reign, weekend parties at UMass, and a checking account. Not to mention a full tank of gas.

Well, intramurals for the 1977 season are winding down to a finish. Softball players began this week, and will continue up until the last day of classes (another good thing that must end).

The following is a preview of what could be the top ten men's teams on campus.

Number One: No one. No one, you ask? That's correct. Out of all the teams I talked to, none would rate themselves numero uno, and I can't say I blame them. It's a jinx to say you're the absolute best, because not only will you come down with 'the swelled head' syndrome, but every opponent will be gunning to knock you off. One thing teams don't want is to give the opposition more incentive to win. So the number one spot will remain vacant either until the title is decided next week, or some team calls me and swears they're the best around.

Two: John Thompson takes spot number two with his team named F-Troop. "We're strong in all departments, with offensive power. We carry two pitchers, Brian Matoska and Kevin Patterson. If one gets tired, we can replace him. We really try hard. We play a good game and blow the opposition off the field!".

Three: Patterson Red Sox — "These guys are good, with speed on the basepaths," pointed out coach Bruce Bressler. "Not to mention our fireballing righthander Chuck Bond."

Fourth: Tie — The MacKimmie Marauders and Wheat share the cleanup position.

The Marauders made the playoffs last year and have five returning players (Tom Doyle, Joe Doyle, Bill Cartmill, Bob Swartz, and John Breslouf) from that squad. They were knocked out by BKP in the semis last season, the fraternity which won the tourney.

"Our pitcher (Breslouf) is the sparkplug of the team," said coach Joy Doyle. "He's pitched a no-hitter, and a one-hit game (two out in the fifth). We don't give our opponents any runs, they have to earn 'em".

Wheat, which also made it to the semifinals last year, has returned again for another crack at the title. "When we started the year, we didn't feel we'd have any problems," commented head man Charlie Haden. "But we were in a pretty tough league. "We're sounder defensively than last year, but we've lost some of our offensive power."

Fifth: The Grapefruits. Manager Steve Tetrault pointed out how his club has improved from 1-4 last season to 5-0 this year. "Last year we practiced a lot, got all hyped up. This year we're not as pressured. We have solid hitting and haven't made more than eight errors all season. Our cheerleaders helped us win one game; they rattled the other beam by rooting for us.

Sixth: The manager of the Washington Whips was unavailable for comment, but sources say they're a decent team. Thus, the sixth place rating.

Seventh: This spot with a shot in the dark, and the flip of a coin, goes to Kappa Sigma; they advanced in the playoffs via a 2-1 victory over the previously undefeated Brandywinos.

Eighth: "A team with super outfielders and plays great defense" is how Sam Santossuo depicts his Cannonballers, who are named after Archie Bunker's bowling team. "We do have a tough time when it comes to hitting however."

Ninth: The Bucs, who have the Baker dorm championship, just made the top ten. "We have the 'Polish Power Pitcher', Joe Leonczyk, and a bunch of kids out to have a good time," injected Willy Huntress, head Buc. "We can stay in games with anyone."

Tenth: Having settled their team name by opening a zoology book, the Stumptail Marques round out the top ten. Chris Fuchs summed up his team, "We average about ten runs a game, with balanced hitting. Our pitcher, Dana Cormier, is our strong point. On any good day we can win. In softball, the hits either drop in, or they don't."

Honorable mention — Crabtree's Unawares. "We're like the Bruins. Scrappy, hard working, dedicated. We're going somewhere." spoke Ralph Laganelli.

Mittwomen hot

By PAT McGRATH
Collegian Staff

"When you're hot you're hot."

Whoever coined that phrase must have had the UMass women's varsity softball team in mind as the Minutewomen are strolling along with an 11-1 record. There are six games remaining on their schedule, and today's opponent, Southern Connecticut State College, appears to be the big test for the Diamondwomen.

"Southern beat us last year by a score of 7-4," said UMass coach Dianne Thompson. "Hopefully, we can avenge that loss with a good team effort today."

The Owls sported a fine 9-1 record last season, but thus far in 1977, they are only 4-3. They have beaten Bridgeport, the University of Connecticut, Bridgewater State College (whom UMass lost to), and one game in doubleheader against Boston State. They have lost to Central Connecticut, Springfield, and once to Boston State, three teams that the Minutewomen have defeated this year. Southern has been accepted to the Eastern Regionals to be held later this month, largely due to last year's record.

The Connecticut team has a number of veterans back this year, including the team's only senior, centerfielder Dorothy Rickus. The Owls feature many standouts from this year's basketball team that was ranked sixth nationally. They are: Joan Van Ness at first base, M.J. Pruzinski at third, and pitcher Marnie Danko. Danko is having a good pitching season and she is also one of the team's leading hitters. The Southern coach, Louise Albright, was an outstanding American Softball Association player for a number of years. She provides her team with much experience and expertise.

"Albright is a very fine coach," commented Thompson. "Her team plays like we do. They use gutsy baserunning as a major offensive tool."

The softballers will send freshman Sue Peters to the mound. She sports a fine 2.17 E.R.A. and is looking for her fifth win without a loss. If she has any pitching difficulties, freshman Gail Carter is expected to get the call from the bullpen.

There will be a change in the UMass batting order as Peters will lead off, Carol Bruce will bat second, and Susan DiRocco, a hard-hitting shortstop, will bat in the number three spot. Thompson hopes to come up with more of an offense against Southern than there has been in recent games. DiRocco, the team's leading hitter with a .419 average, and freshman Rhonda McManus, who bats cleanup, will hopefully provide the power that UMass needs.

"Pitchers Gail Matthews and Carter will not be in the lineup," said Thompson, "and they are two of our best hitters. We struck out six times in the first game against Boston State — our highest total of the year. I hope that our bats will come around today though."

One bright spot for the Minutewomen in the Boston State game was the hitting of junior catcher Cheryl Meliones.

"Meliones has been in a hitting slump," explained Thompson, "but I think she finally realizes that she can be a hitter."

Rita Riley will be in left field against the Owls, but Thompson is undecided about right. That starting assignments will go to either Pat Oski of Lynn Barry.

UMass is looking to cut down on its errors and improve its hitting for today's game.

"If our hitting is weak, we may go with more bunts and slap hits," said Thompson. "Danko should be fast, so full swings may not be effective."

"Southern plays a psych game on you," summarized Thompson. "They have an advantage over most teams, but with a solid team effort, we should do well against them."

Minutewoman catcher Cheryl Meliones has been one of the bright spots on the UMass varsity softball team this season. The junior catcher has broken out of a hitting slump and has been one of the reasons the diamondwomen are currently sporting a record of 11-1. (Staff photo by John Sideropoulous)

Netmen sixth in NEITC's

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team placed sixth in a field of 40 in an Ivy dominated New England Intercollegiate Tennis Championship last weekend at Amherst College.

"It was UMass' best showing ever," said Ed Serues, Amherst coach and tournament director. Serues added that UMass had never placed above fifteenth in the New England's until this year.

The Minutemen were edged out by Boston College for fifth place by a mere half point while the Ivy League schools continued to monopolize New England tennis by taking the top three spots.

Yale finished first with 52 points, followed by Harvard (40), Dartmouth (39½), Tufts (27½), BC (26), UMass and Williams (25½).

"I'm very pleased and very content with our performance," said UMass coach Bill Brown.

The Minutemen showed strength in the top singles ("A" division) and the lower singles ("C" division), as they have all year. However, they could only muster one point in the middle ("B") division.

Alan Staple, the most successful Minuteman, showed a lot of poise as he blazed through the "C" division only to be stopped in the semifinals.

Fourth seeded Adam Rosen reached the quarterfinals in the "A" division before losing to Williams' Martin Goldberg, 6-2, 6-3. Goldberg, who had lost to Rosen by a similar score early in April, stunned the gallery as he outsmarted Rosen for an easy victory.

"Adam loves to hit hard," explained Goldberg, "I didn't give him anything to hit. I mixed it up with a lot of spins and junk. The slow hitting really got him off his game."

"He was too steady for me," Rosen said. "He didn't let up at all."

To reach the quarterfinals, Rosen needed only two sets to defeat Brandeis' Jeff Ginsberg, Middlebury's Court Chilton and Tufts' Tom Potter.

Alan Green lost in the third round of the "A" division to second seeded Kerry Leeds of Yale, 6-4, 4-6, 6-1. Leeds went on to win the division. Although he was seeded second, Leeds was favored to win the championship from the start.

Green beat Vermont's Kirk Dice in the second round, and Springfield's Howard Shultz in the first.

In doubles, Rosen and Green lost a third round match to the top seeded team of Don Waldman and Todd Lundy, 6-4, 6-0. Neither team looked impressive and didn't seem to care who won. Rosen and Waldman, the top seeded singles player, had lost all concentration as a result of being upset in their singles matches. Waldman and Lundy eventually won the division.

Alan Staple reached the "C" division semifinals where he was outclassed by Yale's Bill Brady, 6-3, 6-1. Brady defeated teammate Randy Kaufman for the "C" division title.

Staple was UMass' most consistent player at the New England's. His precision baseline ground strokes and aggressive net play enabled him to take two set victories from Harvard's Kevin Shaw, second seeded in the "C" division; Trinity's Tyler Johnson; Wesleyan's Tom Levit; and Babson's Simon Samela.

Yale's Randy Kaufman's two forehands eased him past a jittery Jimmy Barnhart, 6-0, 6-2, in the "C" division quarterfinals. On his way to the quarterfinals, Barnhart defeated Fairfield's Brian Beusse; Tufts' Basil Hero; and Clark's Tom Rosenman.

Barnaby Kalan's 6-3, 6-4 first round win over Clark's Bill Shakeman was UMass' only point in the "B" division singles. Kalan lost in the second round to Trinity's Mark Matthews, 6-3, 6-2.

Ricky Sharton lost his first match in the "B" division to Brandeis' Bobo Blake, 6-3, 2-6, 6-0.

Kalan and Staple lost to Peter McGlothlin and Doug Ireland of Dartmouth in the second round of the "B" division doubles, 6-2, 4-6, 6-2.

Barnhard and Steve Heyl dropped their opening round match in the "C" division doubles to BC's John Officer and Kevin Naylan, 6-3, 6-3.

What's in a headline?

The world of sports has its own unique language in which athletes and observers alike must become fluent. Whether the participants be linksters, hoopsters, gridders, or runners, they all exist in a fantasy land of cliche.

Sportswriters and announcers often become trapped in the sports lingo. Other journalists laugh at the ease of sportswriting in alluding to the ready-made phrases for meaningless, highly structured games.

Actually, the rules and regulations, the fantasy-like atmosphere, and especially the rusty metaphors of sports are what make sportswriting difficult. How do you present a game story with vitality and originality?

Most sports reporters do not bother to escape the terminology of their ancestors. You need to look no farther than the sports headlines to see that the cliches are ever present.

No newspapers, no matter how reputable they are, are immune to the banalities of sportswriting. A sampling of weekend sports pages provides plenty of evidence.

The New York Times adheres to the simplest terms in its sports headlines, but "Kuhn Claims Suspension of Turner Averted Crisis" is going a little too far. Can an owner's tampering with a free agent be termed a crisis, even in the egotistic world of baseball?

What about the Globe's "White comes alive, Celtics live on, 113-108"? A crucial playoff game? Yes. A life and death struggle? Tommy Heinsohn may get an ulcer or two, but don't tell Jo Jo he was dead before the sixth game.

• Another typical headline in Saturday's Globe was "Brown to play hungriest Nuggets." What's a hungry Nugget? Will Paul Silas or David Thompson starve themselves in order to play against Portland?

The Springfield Union often comes up with a tricky headline to correspond with a player or team name. Such was Saturday's "Sox hop on Doc." Would Doc Ellis stand for anyone hopping on him? After all, being trade to Charley Finley's madhouse is traumatic enough.

The Union followed "Sox hop on Doc" with "Scott hits tape job." Have you ever seen someone use a tape measure to calculate the distance of a long home run?

The Hampshire Gazette went to extremes in its Friday Celtics preview, "Celtics clutch for last straw." Are the Celts a bunch of alcoholics or are they really going to draw straws with the 76'ers?

Of course, we can't forget the Collegian. Its use of cliche often borders on the absurd, particularly in headlines of games in which all the UMass teams have the same nickname. Other teams should follow the example of the lacrosse Gorillas in establishing a definitive nickname.

A classic "Batsmen bomb Bridgeport" adorns the back page of Friday's edition. Although the three B's are somewhat poetic, the "bomb" metaphor is overused, to say the least. Who would even waste a bomb on the city of Bridgeport?

"Linksters lay waste" is another catchy line, but does it really mean anything? This description of the golfers' victory sounds destructive, if not obscene.

None of the papers, whether it be the Times or the Collegian, can avoid the tired metaphors which have dominated sports for decades.

In glancing over the baseball story I wrote for Friday's paper, I notice a "long shot" and a "15-hit attack" and "hot hitting." Yes, I'm a guilty cliche monger, too, particularly in a rush job like that story.

It's very easy to use cliches to describe even the most dramatic events. Cliches, no matter how anachronistic they may be, often reinforce certain social values.

The sports cliches are often such military phrases as "bomb," "lay waste," or "attack." They reflect a moral attitude from which this country has yet to escape.

Isn't it about time for sports reporters to use their imaginations a little? Isn't it time for all of us to think before we repeat some destructive metaphor which hardly reflects our thoughts?

Record walkout in seventh day

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

There doesn't appear to be any immediate end in sight to the seven-day old strike by employes of the Amherst Record, according to a spokesperson for the striking workers.

There won't be any resolution to the problems "until we can get some sort of agreement," said Karla Alwes, the Record proofreader and assistant shop steward in the union representing the paper's employes.

Alwes said in an interview last night a number of the 13 striking employes have decided if there is no resolution to the problem, they will be able to stay on strike for about a month. After that time, they are uncertain about what action to take.

According to Alwes and other striking employes, the problem is Record Publisher Michael J. DeSherbinin will not recognize the union as bargaining agent for the employes and as a result will not deal "seriously" with them in contract negotiations.

In April 1976, a majority of the 29 Record employes voted to affiliate with District 65 of the Distributive Workers of America.

According to Alwes, four employes acting as a negotiating committee met with DeSherbinin about five times in the past few months, with the final meeting taking place last Wednesday. They have not had any communication with him since.

Originally, the union asked for more paid holidays, an end to sick days being counted as a vacation time, and a pay increase.

The union has lowered their demands two times, Alwes said, but DeSherbinin has not agreed to any of the requests and has offered only a 10 cent an hour pay increase.

DeSherbinin could not be reached for comment last night, but said previously the offer he made was all the paper could afford.

He also said he recognizes the union and would make an arrangement with them as long as it wouldn't raise "our costs."

Alwes said he (DeSherbinin) is saying the union shouldn't be there," because all the employes don't want to belong.

The union will compromise, said

Faculty wants Wood, Puryear canned

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass faculty voted yesterday in separate motions to express no confidence in Provost and Vice-Chancellor of Academic Affairs Paul L. Puryear and President Robert C. Wood, and sought their removal from office.

Puryear said last night in a telephone interview he would not comment until today.

Four other motions dealing with governance procedures in academic and personnel matters were also passed during the three-hour meeting, which attracted 400 of the 1300 faculty on the Amherst campus. Approximately half the members left Mahar Auditorium after the Puryear censor motion was approved.

Wood, speaking from his home in Lincoln last night, said he is reacting to yesterday's vote in the same manner as he did when a similar motion was passed by the faculty in the College of Arts and Sciences last week.

The real issue, said Wood, is the "problem of priorities and funds. You can change administrators, but you can't change the problems they will face.

"The frustration of the faculty are not directed to the real world," said Wood.

Student Government Association (SGA) co-President Pinky Batiste said last night she was "appalled at the elitist behavior" of the faculty during the meeting.

"The faculty went there to show their concern of academics of the University, but at the same time would not recognize someone who wanted to speak because he was a student."

Trustees may vote to up student fees

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

If the Board of Trustees supports proposed increases in student fees this morning, UMass students will face a $3000 bill for the 1977-78 academic year.

Also on the agenda for the eleven o'clock meeting at UMass-Boston are discussions about South African investments, the Tilson Farm steam plant, and the five year faculty reallocation plan proposed by Provost and Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Paul L. Puryear.

The fee increases, added with the $480 tuition, would represent a $231 hike from the present charges. Residence halls would be $56 more, while board would jump $50. A boost of $16 and $15 could be tacked on the current fees for Health Services and the Campus Center.

The Budget and Finance Committee will be presenting a report to the board about additional investments in corporations in South Africa. UMass students have been staging demonstrations this semester, asking the trustees to withdraw the current UMass investments in corporations operating in apartheid South Africa.

Coming from another committee will be a report on Tilson Farm, the UMass-Amherst steam plant completed two years ago, but never opened due to faulty construction.

A confirmed source said this committee may also present testimony seeking to re-locate President Robert C. Wood's office at One Washington Mall in Boston to the old office on Arlington Street near Park Square, Boston.

UMass-Amherst faculty representative George T. Sulzner will relate the action of yesterday's general faculty meeting in which faculty supported motions censuring Puryear and Wood, and seeking their removal. Four other motions about governance procedures in academic and personnel decisions were also passed.

Sulzner said last night in a telephone interview he will give the trustees "a summary" of the faculty meeting, while a complete transcript "will follow, as well as a request to present a governance case at the Faculty Educational Policy Committee hearing" in mid-May.

Town Meeting set to decide on budget

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

A Town Meeting torn between human services and fiscal austerity will consider the rest of the budget for the Town of Amherst when the meeting resumes tonight.

The remainder of the budget is expected to be approved tonight, with or without revisions. The meeting will once again be at the Junior High Auditorium at 7:30.

Members approved half of the budget as recommended by the Finance Committee and the town manager, despite proposals by Selectman William C. Atkins to cut various categories in order to reduce the budget by $171,500, which would cut $1 from the tax rate.

The Amherst tax rate is currently $42.00. The proposed budget would increase this rate to $44.50, an increase of $2.50.

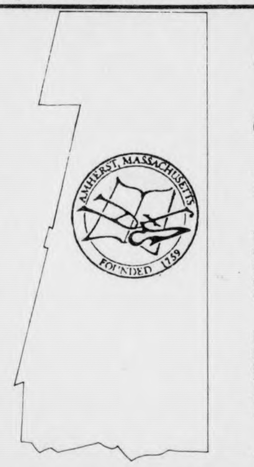
The categories which are to be considered next are Planning and Code Enforcement, Public Works, Property Management, and Debt and Interest.

The members will also examine Reserve Fund Adjustments and the Jones Library Adjustment, as well as the budgets for the Amherst Public Schools and the Amherst Pelham Regional Schools.

Atkins will propose cuts in two other areas; the Planning Department and the Highway Maintenance Fund. He is expected to move for a $10,000 cut in the recommended $32,379 budget for the Planning Department, and a $50,000 reduction in the $350,918 budget for Highway Maintenance.

If the meeting wades through the rest of the budget in one night, more interesting articles await them.

Article 15, next on the warrant, was placed there by petition of Kenneth M. Mosakowski and others. It requests the town to endorse legislation proposed by the Massachusetts State Board of Education revising the formula for state aid to the public schools in the Commonwealth.



Belchertown enters era of new services

By D.A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

The demolition yesterday of the first residential building constructed at Belchertown State School heightened the hopes of further changes being made in the services offered mentally disabled citizens.

Constructed 57 years ago, K-Building was demolished at 4:15 p.m. in a ceremony symbolizing the progress into a new era of services for the retarded making the restrictive environments of the past obsolete.

According to the state school, the event was a result of an increasing awareness on the part of Western Massachusetts citizens and professionals, that quality services are necessary in this treatment.

According to Benjamin Ricci, Jr., a member of the Belchertown Friends Society and a professor of exercise science at UMass, K-Building was where the Department of Mental Health "warehoused people." Though it had been vacant for a year, he said, the smell of urine still permeated the building.

He cited in an interview the housing of patients as a failure of the Department of Mental Health. "We're doing them a favor by destroying their failure," he said.

The Belchertown Friends Society brought legal charges against the Department of Mental Health, which is now required to provide adequate living environments for patients.

"If you want something done at government," he said "you've got to do it as citizens."

Ricci said many more buildings at the school are in the same condition as K-Building, and are still in use. He named the other lettered buildings, which are among the school's first residential buildings, and the infirmary. They are, he said "tributes to the stupidity of the trustees."

The next effort in securing decent housing and constructive environments of the mentally disabled, "is to demolish the other buildings," he said.

Trial tomorrow for SWA 5

By JOHN M. MORAN
Collegian Staff

Five candidates for officers in the Southwest Assembly (SWA) will be tried by the Student Judiciary Thursday night for alleged misuse of campaign funds, according to Louis Copponi, prosecutor for the Student Attorney General's Office.

"It's a fairly simple case," said Copponi," and it could go either way. The selection of the judges will probably have a lot to do with the outcome. I think we have a good case."

Copponi said the investigation began April 21 the day after elections, when Southwest residents Ed Bachelder and Peter Clinch of the 8th floor of Washington Tower brought the possibility of a violation to the attention of the Attorney General's Office.

SWA candidates Diane Fessenden, Bruce Berkowitz, Bonnie Ward, Greg Maynard, and Joni Mersky are alleged to have broken Southwest Election Regulations when the phrase "For Southwest T-shirts call Jeff 546-5068" appeared at the bottom of a table tent advertisement card.

According to Clinch and Bachelder, this violated rule 19 which reads, "No campaign funds shall be expanded except for items directly relating to the campaign."

Since the cards were placed in the dining commons, some dining commons personnel were questioned in connection with the investigation, said Copponi. He said he expects to call the Southwest Assembly Elections Committee Chairperson Paul Banks as a witness in the course of the trial.

Berkshire dining commons Manager Richard Ellis and Director of Food Services Art Warren will submit written depositions instead of appearing at the trial, Copponi said.

Phonothon nets 66 grand

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

A grand total of $66,554 was pledged as a result of the fourth annual UMass Alumni Phonothon, a 27 per cent increase over last year's pledges, according to Joseph Carter, assistant director of the phonothon.

Carter said out of last year's pledge total of $52,500, the phonothon actually collected $42,500, or about 80 per cent. The money was used for such programs as University Without Walls, the Office of Internships, music scholarships, Marching Band, the Debate Team, and art acquisitions among others.

The use of this year's money will be decided by the Alumni Board in conjunction with the Chancellor and the Budget Office, Carter said.

During the phonothon, which ended April 14, 661 volunteers called a record 32,957 alumni. The 11,812 reached made a total of 5,113 pledges, with the average pledge being $13.02.

Fifty-one people did pledge over 100 dollars, which entitled them to qualify as members of the UMass Alumni Second Century Club.

There were seven phonothons this year, located in Amherst, Springfield, Boston, Hartford, Washington, D.C., UMass, and for the first time, New York, said Carter.

Marching Band was the biggest fund raising group, pulling in $8,929.40 in pledges.

Boston kids invade UMass

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Four chartered buses rolled into the Campus Center turning circle at 10 a.m. yesterday carrying more than 100 very distinguished visitors to the University.

Students from 18 Boston public high schools had come to view campus life as part of a Boston Day program created by former Student Government Association (SGA) co-president Paul Cronin and UMass President Robert C. Wood.

Accompanied by guidance counselors, the high school juniors congregated in room 101 of the Campus Center to register for the two-day event and receive welcoming remarks from Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury.

SGA co-Presidents Pinky Batiste and Jon Hite also addressed the mostly teenage visitors. "Don't be put off by the size of the University," said Batiste. "Just relax and have a good time. I hope you all enjoy yourselves here and I want you all to fill out applications to come here when the time comes."

Janis Wertz, assistant Boston Day co-ordinator, announced the divisions of groups by schools. Volunteer undergraduates met with their respective groups to introduce themselves as guides for the day's scheduled activities.

Twelve students from Boston High School were paired with another dozen visitors from Roxbury High under the guidance of Student Attorney General Paul Yanowitch and George Washington Tower Assistant Head of Residence Steve Englander.

Yanowitch allayed the fears of Boston High student Patricia Hicks. "Yes, well, the dining commons, its institutionalized food and its not the greatest."

Undaunted, the group retired for lunch after a tour of John Quincy Adams Tower. As they emerged unharmed from the half hour repast, some wondered aloud as to whether they would be able to see UMass students in their classes.

Upon questioning from the tour guides, students revealed their personal academic interests lay in the business field. The group was then escorted to Mahar auditorium in the School of Business complex. Observing a lecture of a few hundred college undergraduates caused a mild eruption of questions as to the enrollment figures of the University.

"Not all classrooms are this large," said Yanowitch. The students breathed a collective sigh of relief. Englander explained required courses drew a larger enrollment than did specialized, higher level courses.

Stanley Green of Boston High translated the lecture for the benefit of the less mathematically minded. "You understood what the professor was saying?" asked a tour assistant. Green nodded. "Then you're ahead of many of the junior business majors," the assistant remarked.

Students in all tour groups were given the opportunity to ride the elevators of the tallest library in the country and visit the $16 million Fine Arts Center.

By late afternoon questions were centered around the requirements of different majors. Counselors offered general information concerning the students' interests.

Because the buses had arrived an hour late, many areas of the campus were left uncovered by several tour groups. "You'll be able to see more during the summer if you decide to come to UMass," said one counselor.

Students returned to the Campus Center at 3 p.m. to rest and divide again into groups for a workshop entitled "Making it at UMass."

During this question period, estimated costs of tuition, board, and miscellaneous expenditures were reviewed. Discussion leaders explained the rules and regulations of the University as well as pointing out the extracurricular activities offered.

Students returned to the dining commons at 5 for dinner, and then were allowed "free time" before capping their first of two days at UMass with a disco on the 10th floor of the Campus Center.

As Janis Wertz dimmed the lights, "for a more comfortable atmosphere," the students arrived to exchange impressions of the day and relax in the best UMass tradition.

"I came here to party" said a Brighton High youth.

Women's support group meets

By CAROL COULTAS
Collegian Staff

An organizational meeting for the formation of a campus wide women's support group to deal with problems encountered in predominantly male oriented departments was held last night in the Campus Center.

Facilitated by Janet Oppenheim and Dr. Grace Rollason of the Zoology department, the group decided on concrete objectives for the support group system. The three main goals set by the group for this system are to provide a forum for discrimination, to funnel discrimination complaints to the proper authorities, and to inform student populations, especially freshmen and transfer students, of support groups and whom to contact if they are interested.

Mostly women from scientific fields attended the meeting. Support groups for the departments of Forestry and Wildlife, Botany, and Geology are now in existence.

"It has been difficult finding support groups already in existence. Many don't publicize their meetings or are composed mostly of graduate students," said Oppenheim.

Dr. Janice Shafer of the Physics department expressed her hopes of getting more faculty involvement. She believes, along with Rollason, many faculty members would be willing to assist the support groups in getting off the ground.

The group has planned another organizational meeting for next semester.

Native troupe here to educate whites

By LISA MASSIMIANO
Collegian Staff

A Native American group will set up an encampment of tipis at Hampshire College this week, to present a series of talks, ceremonies, workshops and films throughout the five college area. White Roots of Peace is a traveling cultural group consisting of 45 Native Americans ranging in age from 5 to 65, and representing eight different native nations and languages.

According to Steve Latter, coordinator of the event, the organization has traveled over 300,000 miles, visiting colleges and universities all over the country.

"What they are is a cultural communications group, and their main purpose is to provide education for white people about the red man's culture," said Latter.

This is the second time White Roots of Peace has visited the area. They performed at UMass four years ago.

"We asked them [illegible] UMass is an education[illegible] and this event can be educating for everyone, older people and children as well as college students. It provides us with an explaination of a culture that exists next to ours, a culture that isn't dealt with clearly in the history books," said Latter.

Based at Hampshire College, the group will perform at all five colleges May 4–7. The program includes workshops on all aspects of native issues, past, present, and future.

The group will hold an arts and crafts exhibit May 6 at UMass. From 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Guatemalan textiles and handcrafts, paintings, and Mohawk basketry will be displayed in the Cape Cod Lounge. An Aztec spiritual dance will be performed at noon in the Student Union Ballroom.

A series of films made by or about native peoples will be shown at Hampshire College, Amherst College and UMass throughout [illegible] four days, and on May 5, 6, and 7 the group will hold a traditional Iroquois Style Social [illegible] activities, speeches, an[illegible]

Tribunal bars Lyon elections

By STEVE TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

A student judiciary tribunal granted an injunction last night prohibiting Mary Lyon House from holding house elections until that dorm amends a questioned article in its constitution.

The election, originally scheduled for last night, had been cancelled Monday night by the dorm government until the matter could be settled.

The article in question stated only dues-paying members of Mary Lyon House could vote in the election. In granting the injunction, the tribunal released a statement stating "Dorm dues are voluntary contributions, and the right to vote cannot be withheld due to failure of members to pay their dues."

Marian Lemire, a Mary Lyon resident and student senator, led a group of residents in requesting the injunction on the grounds that the article in question constituted a "poll tax", and also on the grounds that the Mary Lyon constitution had not gone through the proper channels to be recognized by the University.

In order for the dorm to hold legal elections, the judiciary said, the dorm must amend the article in question, propose a house budget, and submit both for approval to the Northeast Area Government and to the Student Government Association (SGA) Governmental Affairs Committee.

Black Affairs

Our own identity

By MARY CUSTARD
Black Affairs Staff

Many people have asked why, indeed, is there a Black Affairs section in the Collegian.

As a minority on this campus we find that many times what is important to us is not important to the majority. And also what may be relevant to the majority might not be relevant to us.

It has been said that news is news, whether it concerns Third World people or whites. Most of the articles printed in Black Affairs would never have been seen unless there was a Black Affairs. We, the staff, encourage input from our community. Many of the people that do submit their works to Black Affairs would not even consider submitting them to the Collegian due to the fact that they probably would not be printed.

We are a part of the Collegian, a very important part, but yet we do have our own identity. WE ARE BLACK AFFAIRS!

In support of Ms. Ramos

In times when there is a threat of level-funding and the threat to the quality of our education we, the student body should not lose sight of the many positive aspects this campus has to offer. Along with level funding many worthy professors will not be granted tenure. One of these people is Diana Ramos, a Third World dance instructor. After many numerous letters and recommendations in her behalf, the decision now rests in higher hands. During this time of financial duress it is pertinent not to lose sight of the absolutes, such as the foundation of non-discriminatory cultural-educational practices.

Ms. Ramos' fight for tenure has gone through many stages. Recommendations, support by the College of Arts and Sciences have taken her to the Board of Trustees. From the Board her case was presented to the Provost. A letter was immediately addressed to Ms. Ramos stating her credentials did not meet the qualificiations for tenure. The two-parts that were lacking were community involvement and student evaluations. Her resume gives a complete support of her community involvement. Just recently she put on four spectacular dance performances in the Valley. Her teaching experience is lengthy and may I again stress the point that she is the sole choreographer and dance instructor of Third World dance in the Five College area.

Please join with The Diana Ramos Community Support Committee in support of Ms. Ramos. Don't let the University dismiss such a talented black woman. Her dance class is the only Third World dance class in this area. Let's not let level funding obliterate our duties as students to support our education and maintain its quality. By not supporting a woman such as Ms. Ramos we as students will be losing not only an excellent dance instructor but losing a part of that quality education.

The Diana Ramos
Community Support Committee

To Whom It May Concern:

I am a second semester transfer student at the University of Mass. Since this is my second semester here, I have had the pleasure of meeting Diana Ramos. Miss Ramos has not only aided me in my pursuit of self-fulfillment, but she has also given me a greater direction. Through her classes she has brought me back to my history.

Miss Ramos is a community member and she has put on four performances within the five college area. To me, Miss Ramos holds a very special place in my heart. How can the community not know of her talent and the role in which she functions as a master in the art of dance.

I do not understand why anyone who watched Miss Ramos perform would ever question her abilities.

Sincerely,
Annie Carpenter

M.T.W.A. visits UMass

By RENEE MOBLEY

Thanks to conference money allocations from the Black Mass Communications project, the first Amherst based conference of the Massachusetts Third World Alliance was held Saturday in the Campus Center.

Brother Malo Mcgraw, vice president of B.M.C.P., worked dilligently over the past month to bring the conference to UMass. His efforts were rewarded when thirty delegates from Universities and colleges throughout Massachusetts met in C.C. room 197 for their tenth conference.

At the last conference, held at Bridgewater state college, officers for M.T.W.A. were elected. Chairperson Tiny Fernandez took the gavel for the first time on Saturday and made a report to the body.

Working steadily and faithfully between conferences, Fernandez managed to obtain the services of a black lawyer, Attorney Anton Cruise. He advised Fernandez on the red tape and legal hassles the alliance would have to go through to obtain non profit, tax exempt, corporate status. Such status would insure the organization's survival even after present members have graduated.

Fernandez also met with the black caucus of Boston, Mass. to ask for advice and support. The alliance was asked to submit a letter to the black caucus, describing M.T.W.A. and its purpose. The caucus is expected to reply in a letter.

As the order of business proceeded the question of M.T.W.A.'s permanent mailing address was raised. After a short discussion it was decided that the official mailing address would be: Westfield State College; Western Ave., P.O. Box 216; Westfield, Ma. 01085.

Delegate Lee Jenkins of Boston State College then asked for a suspension of the rules to discuss issues concerning Salem State College and Boston State.

Approximately two weeks ago at Salem State a racial incident in one of the dormitories led the black people of that school to take collective action. Salem asked for the support of the alliance in a rally to be held at Salem State on May 4th.

The representatives of Boston State expressed concern for the survival of their Afro. Am. studies program. The present director of that program will be retiring at the end of this academic year. No efforts or plans have been made to replace him. Boston State will demonstrate on May 3rd at the new building on Hunington St. in Boston, Mass.

Mr. Jenkins asked the alliance to send delegates from each school to express unity and provide strength.

The body then broke up into four committees to discuss future plans. The conference reconvened ninety minutes later and the committees made their reports.

The legislative committee discussed fund raising activities for the summer. Plans were made for cabarets, plays and carwashes. An alliance weekend was planned for August. The weekend will offer such speakers as Dick Gregory and Julian Bond.

The special committee on membership suggested the possibility of extending membership to private institutions of education.

Budget and finance committee reported on the anticipated budget for summer and fall. It was decided by the body that the organization would have a structured category budget system.

The meeting adjourned after it was decided that the next conference would be on May 14th at Salem State College.

Thoughts

The struggle does not end simply because school is over. Wherever you may spend your vacation, be aware of what is happening with your brothers and sisters throughout the world and continue the fight for freedom!

Valerie Maynard

On May second at 3:00 p.m. I had the pleasure to hear Valerie Maynard speak. Miss Maynard is currently a professor of art at Jersey City State University. Her extensive creative works were on display recently on the UMass campus.

The lecture began with a film. Throughout the film Miss Maynard narrated. Her works were seen on the screen but the real value was heightened by the acute awareness by the audience that they were viewing something unforgettable. The program ended with a slide show of Miss Maynard's most recent works and although she mentioned the titles for each slide many needed no description. Miss Maynard's powerful graphics and sculpture address the Afro-American experience. She combines political and cultural awareness with a moving aesthetic. I'm sure she provided an inspiration for many of the people that were honored to be in her presence.

A woman of such magnitude is difficult to describe, but I feel she has done it best herself in the following quote:

> "I am a medium. At once fearful, anticipating in the same breath. Consciously seeking the essence of everything in my experience and wondering if my absorption ducts are wide open. Awaiting constantly the flowing flying harmonious creation. We have arrived."

Racism at Salem State

Editor's Note — Approximately three weeks ago at Salem State College a racist incident in one of the dormitories led the black people of that school to meet with their president, Edward Penson.

The incident involved a mock trial, resembling trials carried out by the Ku Klux Klan. White students also smeared ice cream on the doors of several other students. The students involved simply received a warning for their conduct.

There were several meetings between the black students and the administration, however these meetings were frustrating and non-productive.

After many months of meetings and trying to be cool, the Black Community here at Salem State College, has met with the callous insensitivity of this administration. The atmosphere here is now so oppressive that Blacks feel unwanted and are afraid to stand up and fight for their BASIC HUMAN RIGHTS.

Every racist incident in the Dormitories and elsewhere on this Campus is swept up under the rug by this administration. Racist attitudes and behaviors are encouraged, since the administration refuses to heed the long overdue needs of the Black Community.

The facts are overwhelming:

1. — Less than fifty (50) Black students out of more than 5,500.
2. — Two (2) Black full-time Faculty out of some 290.
3. — Five Black Administrators out of some 50.
4. — Four Black classified staff out of some 187 positions.
5. — The Afro-American Society's Advisorship is a matter of litigation year after year.

6. — Financial Aid for Blacks is bleak.

7. — Academic Counseling and assistance for Black students are ineffective if not non-existent.

8. — Our Black Studies Program is inadequate. Fundamental courses in Black Studies do not exist and the staffing is embryonic.

9. — Blacks and First World people do not get hired at Salem State College because of an ineffective Affirmative Action Program. Affirmative Action office is not independent from the Administration and the Officer's role and power appear to be severely restricted.

10. — In spite of our protests events resembling the "Slave Auction" are still being held on this campus. This amounts to a mockery of a poignant episode of our cultural past. NOW WE HAVE TO DEAL WITH A "MOCK TRIAL" AND "K.K.K." INSPIRED BEHAVIORS.

The President's approach is to meet to schedule more meetings and then make a report. That is all!

From meetings to meetings our words and intended actions are misrepresented. We are faced with road blocks, delayed tactics, callous insensitivity and blatant disregard. We have been obliterated from the Administration's list of priorities. We have exhausted all "appropriate" avenues to insure our survival and well being on this Campus. THIS IS WHY WE ARE HERE DEMONSTRATING TODAY!

We will wait no longer. We will meet no more just for the sake of meeting. We want action. We will stand no more VIOLATIONS OF OUR BASIC HUMAN RIGHTS! Our Black Mothers and Fathers built this country with their life, blood, and sweat. No Neo-Eugenist can scare us off. We have a right to a decent education in the Massachusetts State College System and any State College System.

NEEDS OF THE BLACK COMMUNITY AT SALEM STATE COLLEGE

1. — More Black students at Salem State College
2. — More Black Faculty at Salem State College. — No Cutbacks.
3. — More Black Administrators at Salem State College. — No cutbacks.
4. — An Afro-American Studies Department at Salem State College.
5. — One (1) African Culture Course required for all Students at Salem State College.
6. — One Black Coach in the Men's Physical Education Department at Salem State College.
7. — Financial Aid for Black Students and First World Students.
8. — Black Professionals on the staff of the Dormitories at Salem State College.
9. — Permanent salaried position for the Afro-American Society Advisor.
10. — Afro-American orientation for Black and First World Students at Salem State College.

Our ten (10) stated needs must become policy of Salem State College.

Goodbye for now

The end of the semester is rapidly approaching and we are seriously getting into our books, but let us take this time out to reflect upon the past. The pressures, the conflicts and the tension; the parties and the concerts; the people, their smiles, and the good times! We've matured, we've learned, we've laughed, and we've cried but most importantly we've done it together.

Each of us has spent an important part of His-Her life here. Most of us have made friendships that will last as long as we live. There are so many memories, so many stories to tell.

As you break out the little address book to get the addresses of all those people you want to keep in touch with throughout the summer, don't forget those graduating seniors who might never return to the little town of Amherst.

As we think of the future, for most of us it's trying to get a summer job but for others it's searching for a permanent job. As you soon-to-be graduates take all of the skills you've learned here at UMass out into the real world we, the staff of Black Affairs, wish you the best of luck. For those of you returning in the fall, we bid you good-bye for now. Have a nice summer!

In September of 1973, Miss Sonja Joy Milbourne entered the University of Massachusetts, but before coming here she attended the Radnor High School in Radnor, Pennsylvania. There she was a girl scout cadet, the first black cheerleader and later the captain of those cheerleaders. Waiting for My Black Friend, Lover, and Stranger

Saturday morning I awake with my mind occupied in thought of my black friend to tell me stories of beauty, pain, and fear
The thought of his smile causes the sun to rise and I know with his smile
I am safe

Waiting for my black lover his body is healthy, strong, and nice to have next to mine
His mind is quick
His vibrations are intense
His touch is as warm and gentle as a drop of rain
as it melts to kiss the sweet earth
In his arms I found peace and the wish it would last forever

Waiting for my black stranger who's world hurts to reach who's body hurts to have

The morning changes to noon noon changes to evening evening changes to night night changes to morning
Where are you?
I am waiting

Bring an end to it

By MARY E. CUSTARD
Black Affairs Staff

As I look back, I recall with regret and disdain the coldness and unfeeling that many of us showed towards one another.

Everytime I get into a serious conversation with someone (male and female) one of the main subjects is the UMass grapevine. Now we all know that the grapevine operates anywhere, but it seems that the UMass grapevine not only spreads rumors but serves to create distant or non-existant relationships among the brothers and sisters here.

I'm not placing the blame on anyone in particular, but there are those people that besides spreading rumors help to create them. Some people have decided that if they don't know your business that they will then make up something about you. All of these he said, she said and-or he's messing with, she's messing with cliches have become everyday occurrences!

People dislike each other without any concrete reasons. Between so many of the sisters and brothers there are tensions caused by the grapevine.

I, myself, have been the main topic of a few rumors and during my first years here at UMass I was greatly disturbed by these rumors. But now, I've become accustomed to the grapevine and can play it off (usually). There are still so many others that can't deal with the situation and I sympathize with these people.

We have enough problems and pressures without having to worry about a backstabbing brother or sister. This situation has become ridiculous.

I can't offer any explanations on why a person would lie on someone else but I hope that this article will make you aware of the problems arising as a result of the lies.

With all sincerity I hope that we can and will bring an end to this problem soon, for our own sakes.

Schlesinger defends energy plan

WASHINGTON [AP] — White House energy adviser James R. Schlesinger gave President Carter's energy program a formal send-off in Congress yesterday, claiming most Americans will be able to absorb the higher energy costs.

While the President's program might have some initial adverse effect on the economy, Schlesinger said, its long-run impact would be minimal and would avert a future economic crisis.

"Unless we get on with the job, we're going to have a disaster," Schlesinger told the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee.

Schlesinger's appearance marked the first time an administration official has testified on the energy program since the President unveilled it April 20 at a joint House-Senate session.

Committee chairman Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., predicted favorable action on "most of those parts of the program which will come to this committee." But he said the administration must first provide "convincing answers" to how much actual energy would be saved by the plan and what it will cost the economy.

Schlesinger said that while the higher energy costs called for by the legislation would be passed on to consumers in the form of higher prices for a variety of products, some of this will be offset by an expected rise in per capita income.

"In terms of real income, there will be no reduction" in Americans' buying power, Schlesinger said. However, he added, "we are going to some extent change the style of American life."

He also noted that some of the higher costs would be directly returned to Americans through the program's proposed system of direct tax rebates and tax incentives.

Schlesinger urged Congress to consider the program — which contains 103 separate pieces of legislation — as "a complex whole" and not to pick it apart piece by piece or focus only on the most controversial aspects.

He said the plan was carefully tailored to "distribute benefits and burdens equitably" and that Congress should not attempt to alter this basic thrust.

In three hours of testimony, Schlesinger repeatedly defended perhaps the most controversial element of the program: the standby gasoline tax.

"What it will help to do is alter the ingrained taste of the American people," Schlesinger said.

The tax would be levied in yearly five-cent a gallon increments beginning in 1979, up to a maximum of 50 cents a gallon, if gasoline consumption rises above specified federal targets.

Schlesinger predicted a "50 per cent to 60 per cent chance the tax might be imposed" in any given year, but noted that Americans could avoid it by using less gas. "This represents the type of challenge Americans have been so successful in meeting in the past and will likely meet in the future," Schlesinger said.

But committee members generally expressed skepticism. Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., told Schlesinger the tax "is a patently unfair method of trying to conserve energy."

Carter wants 'ethics office'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter, saying "no one ... is above the law," yesterday proposed an Office of Ethics to curb abuses by federal officials and endorsed creating special prosecutors to investigate misconduct.

The President's plan would require annual public financial disclosure statements by 13,000 government officials. To a limited degree, the fiscal accounting would extend to their spouses.

"The American people must be assured that no one, regardless of position, is above the law," Carter said in a message to Congress.

The Office of Ethics would be set up under the Civil Service Commission and would be designed to issue guidelines and handle complaints.

The proposal would beef up conflict of interest codes and expand the number of people covered by them, Carter said in a message to Congress.

It would also spell out a three-part program of financial disclosure by government officials and impose restrictions on the type of work an official could do once out of office.

Carter also put his support behind efforts to create a temporary special prosecutor's office "to handle cases of misconduct by high-ranking executive branch officials."

He did not submit his version of legislation for a special prosecutor, however, saying legislation now in Congress is adequate. These proposals would authorize a special prosecutor on a case by case basis, if the need arises.

Carter said he wants to shut the "revolving door between government and private industry" in which officials leave their post and join firms dealing in the areas they were involved with in government.

It would impose a one-year ban on "formal or informal contact" between a former official and the agency that person was connected with. The ban would "prevent the misuse of influence acquired through public service," Carter said.

House passes jobs bill; Carter due to give support

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House yesterday passed and sent to President Carter the first part of his economic stimulus program, a $4 billion measure which its sponsors said would create 600,000 new jobs through public works projects.

The measure won approval on a 335-77 vote, after clearing the Senate last week.

Money to fund the authorization measure is included in a $20 billion economic stimulus appropriations bill which was sent yesterday to a conference with the Senate seeking a compromise on differing points. Other funds in the money bill would be for public service jobs and youth employment training programs.

That measure, another affecting the public service jobs and the tax bill, also in conference, make up the rest of the Carter package.

The public works measure, certain to get Carter's approval, is designed to open up 300,000 new jobs in the construction industry and another 300,000 in indirect new job openings.

It would allocate funds favoring larger, industrial states with high unemployment and free money for long-stalled projects at the local level.

The measure was stalled for nearly seven weeks after it passed the House as strictly a public works jobs bill but the Senate added a major water pollution provision which snarled progress in the conference committee.

House conferences insisted water pollution should be treated separately and the impasse was finally broken after Senate pollution backers, principally Sen. Edmund Muskie, D-Maine, were forced to make more and more environmental concessions to keep it in the big bill.

The jobs measure also includes a provision to prevent Carter from holding up funds for 18 water projects that were on his list to be eliminated and which are part of the effort to get projects going and open new jobs.

Rep. Robert Young, D-Mo., sought to eliminate from the compromise bill that language ordering that water project funds be included, since the provision specifically said the Mermamec Park Lake project in Missouri would not be protected from the Carter funds cut.

Young's motion to eliminate the section mandating spending of money for the water projects lost on a 302-108 vote.

Sen. OK's military budget

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Armed Services Committee yesterday approved an authorization bill slightly less than President Carter's $120.1 billion military budget request.

It revised administration naval shipbuilding plans and reopened the doors for revival of the supercarrier.

Although both House and Senate earlier this year voted in favor of the administration's request to halt spending on another Nimitz-class large deck aircraft carrier, the committee included $81.6 million that could be used to restart work on the ship in fiscal year 1978, which starts Oct. 1.

At the same time, Defense Secretary Harold Brown was directed to make a study by next Feb. 1 of cost effectiveness of supercarriers, medium-size carriers the administration is now planning for the 1980s, and sea-control ships that would carry vertical take-off aircraft.

"We want a re-evaluation," said committee chairman John C. Stennis, D-Miss. "There are divided opinions within the Navy. We fixed it so they could get at all these things in time for the fiscal year 1979 budget."

The committee bill increases the administration request for weapons and research programs by about $127 million, but would reduce military strength of just over 2 million men by 17,100 and make other manpower realignments to cut the overall defense budget by about $59 million.

It also includes a provision calling for a 4 per cent reduction in each of the next two years in the number of generals and admirals in the military, reducing them by about 100 to 1,000.

The committee said the funds for the supercarrier "in no way suggests the committee has made a final decision in favor of building another carrier of this class."

It said the funds would permit consideration of a big carrier, just as research and development money included in the bill would allow consideration of the medium size flattops and sea control ships.

Prison brass warn of jail overcrowding

BOSTON [AP] — Massachusetts expects to have 3,000 state prison inmates by July, or 160 more people than it has beds, Correction Commissioner Frank Hall said yesterday.

Hall told a meeting of the governor's cabinet that the overcrowding is "dangerous and presents problems of health and security."

The trend toward more defendants being sentenced to prison for longer terms shows no signs of leveling off, Hall said.

Tom Sellers, a planner for the correction department, said by July 1, 1978, the state will have about 3,600 inmates, but can expand its facilities to only 3,000 beds.

He added that right now about 120 inmates, who have already been sentenced to state prisons are still waiting in county jails to be transferred.

Hall presented the figures in an apparent effort to step up legislative action on proposed new state prison sites. The House Ways and Means Committee has recommended that state facilities in Gardner and Bridgewater be converted and renovated for use as medium security prisons.

Those two sites would, however, supply only 300 of the estimated 600 new beds needed.

Hall said the department expects to open two new minimum security pre-release centers by this summer.

He added that the most dramatic shift in prison populations during the past two years has been the increase in the number of youthful offenders, age 16 to 19. Two years ago youthful offenders made up 13 per cent of the prison population, Hall said. Today they account for 20 per cent of state prison inmates.

State officials seek needed oil refinery

BOSTON [AP] — State administration officials told the oil industry yesterday that Massachusetts wants a refinery to help assure the Bay State and New England a steady supply of fuel.

Lt. Gov. Thomas P. O'Neill and Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' economic aides made their second annual presentation to the Offshore Technology Conference, attended by several hundred oil industry executives in Houston.

A year ago, O'Neill surprised the industry officials by declaring that Massachusetts was no longer hostile territory for oil corporations. Since then, he has lobbied privately for construction of an oil refinery, though no specific location has been cited.

Last November, Massachusetts voters — an an advisory referendum — said they approve of development of a refinery and a deep water port.

The sale of exploratory rights to 178 tracts of ocean on Georges Bank, off the Massachusetts coast, is scheduled to be conducted by the U.S. Interior Department next spring.

Dukakis and his aides repeatedly have said they welcome the exploration as long as there are sufficient environmental safeguards.

The administration says an oil refinery in Massachusetts would be an economic boon, creating new jobs. Officials claim a refinery would lessen the state's dependence on foreign oil.

Representatives of four Massachusetts cities — Boston, Lynn, Fall River and New Bedford — made presentations at the Houston conference, seeking to attract the industry to their coastal communities as a base of offshore drilling operations.

A presentation also was made by the Massachusetts Port Authority and dozens of Massachusetts businesses. The oil industry officials were presented with a raft of promotional literature touting the economic and social benefits of the Bay State.

Meanwhile, state Commerce Commissioner John J. Marino told the industry representatives that Massachusetts "wants, needs and encourages offshore and onshore development of its energy resources."

He also said the state "hopes to have built an oil refinery ... " for oil taken from Georges Bank and overseas.

O'Neill said the country some day will rely almost exclusively on solar and nuclear energy. But until then solutions to the current energy crisis must be found, he said. "We recognize, as we always have, the necessity of responsibile offshore development," O'Neill said.

Police renew enforcement of banned Sunday sales

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — Springfield police again have started enforcing the state's 300-year-old blue laws banning certain Sunday sales, which were declared constitutional by the state Supreme Court last month.

Police Monday issued 37 complaints against two stores for allegedly violating the laws last weekend. The cases were scheduled for arraignments in Springfield District Court May 12.

Springfield police also issued the charges which sparked the earlier test of the case before the state Supreme Court. Two Springfield area Zayre department stores appealed the law after they were charged with violations last November.

After those arrests, hundreds of stores throughout the state remained open Sundays during December. Police initially charged dozens of stores with violating the laws, but then stopped handing out citations pending the outcome of Zayre's appeal.

Western Massachusetts district courts also had delayed hearing hearing those earlier cases pending the appeal. The state Supreme Court handed down its decision April 21 declaring the laws constitutional.

As a result of that ruling, Springfield Police Captain Robert Meffen said Tuesday that stores again will be charged with violating the law if they remain open on Sunday. "We're back in full prosecution of the law," he said.

PARIS: Chief American negotiator, Assistant Sec. of State Richard E. Holbrooke, shakes hands with his Vietnamese counterpart at the conclusion of the first day of talks in Paris. (UPI)

U.S.—Vietnam talks begin

PARIS [AP] — Representatives of the United States and Vietnam opened formal negotiations yesterday on the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two governments. An agreement is expected quickly.

The two delegations, headed by Richard Holbrooke, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Southeast Asian affairs, and Vietnam's Deputy Foreign Minister, Phan Hien, met for three-and-a-half hours in the newly-opened Vietnamese embassy. They will meet again Wednesday.

At the end of the meeting, Holbrooke and Hien smilingly shook hands in an apparent reflection of the warm atmosphere at the talks. Holbrooke said "we had a frank, friendly and very useful discussion." Hien, standing beside the American delegate, added smilingly in English: "I have to agree with him."

A Vietnamese spokesmen said no details of the discussions would be disclosed until the end of the talks, possibly within two weeks. The meetings will resume at the Vietnamese embassy Wednesday and the next two meetings will be at the American embassy, the spokesman said.

It was the first high-level contact between the two governments since Communist-led forces occupied the South Vietnamese capital of Saigon two years ago and the country was reunified the following year.

Informed sources said earlier that the two governments had cleared the way toward establishing diplomatic relations by abandoning the preconditions raised by each side.

The United States had demanded a full accounting for 2,500 Americans missing-in-action in the Vietnam war, while Hanoi had demanded the United States lift its trade embargo and pay more than three billion dollars in war reparations.

Kissinger knocks economic aid program for Vietnam

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Henry Kissinger denied yesterday there is a U.S. commitment to supply reconstruction aid to Vietnam and said it was "absurd" to say the Vietnamese had any right to economic help.

The former secretary of state said he would object strongly if economic aid was the only provision of the Paris Accords carried out.

Kissinger said there was discussion of a $3.25 billion Vietnam reconstruction aid program, but "this was dependent on the constitutional processes of the United States and the carrying out of the other provisions of the Paris agreement."

"It would be absolutely absurd to say that they have the right to economic aid, having broken every provision of the agreement they signed in 1973," Kissinger said in his first substantive public talk since leaving office.

Kissinger received a standing ovation from the businessmen attending the U.S. Chamber of Commerce meeting when he said as far as aid was concerned "I would put Vietnam in alphabetical order" with other foreign policy decisions — meaning way down the list.

He did not directly criticize any of Carter's foreign policy initiatives, but expressed strong reservations about how Carter has handled his pronouncements on human rights.

AUGUSTA, Maine: Robert Randall, a college instructor, shows off a pack of marijuana cigarettes that were supplied to him by HEW. A federal court upheld his right to smoke to arrest a Glaucoma condition in his eyes. (UPI)

Maine officials oppose stricter marijuana laws

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — Opponents yesterday called a bill to restore stiff penalties in Maine for possession of marijuana "an expensive and inappropriate war on youth."

"This bill does not represent or constitute a war on drugs," Sen. Richard H. Pierce, R-Waterville, said at a hearing on the bill before the Judiciary Committee.

"It represents an expensive and inappropriate war on the youth of this state." Pierce estimated that the bill would cost the state at least $.5 million annually.

Fines for possession of marijuana were reduced one year ago from up to five years in prison to a maximum fine of $200.

Michael D. Fulton, director of the state Office of Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, said Maine does have a "serious drug problem," but it is not marijuana.

Census bureau reports on shifting lifestyles

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Americans in the 1970s changed their views on marriage, divorce, childbearing and other social institutions to the point where their lifestyles are vastly different from earlier generations, a government report indicated yesterday.

The Census Bureau said marriage and childbearing are being delayed or avoided more than ever, divorce is on the upsurge and an increasing number of women hold jobs or attend school.

The report, based on studies conducted last year, showed the divorce rate made its largest leap ever between 1970 and 1976. There were 75 divorced persons for every 1,000 married persons in the United States last year. In 1970, the ratio was only 47 per 1,000.

The bureau estimated about one-third of all married persons between 25 and 35 "may eventually end their first marriage in divorce." About 40 per cent of those who divorce and remarry may have their second marriage end in divorce too, the study added.

The Census Bureau said the proportion of 20 to 24 year old women who never marry increased from 28 per cent in 1960 to 36 per cent in 1970 to 43 per cent in 1976.

In the 25 to 29 age group, unmarried women were 15 per cent of the total female population, up from 10.5 per cent in 1970, the study said.

The birthrate, dropping steadily since the Korean War, continued downward considerably in the 1970s.

"The increase in childlessness... presumably reflects, in part, the changing attitudes of young wives toward early childbearing and the pursuit of their own career goals," the study noted.

According to the study, almost half — 42 per cent — of all married women 20 to 24 years old have no children compared with 36 per cent in 1970 and 24 per cent in 1960. In the 25 to 29 age bracket, 22 per cent of all married women are childless, an increase of nearly 6 per cent from 1970.

The report also said:

—Nursery and elementary schools are losing enrollments fast, but college enrollments jumped 34 per cent in first six years of the decade.

—One-fourth of all college students last year were 25 year or older.

Study calls kids a $64,000 investment

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The decision by middle income parents to have a child is really a $64,000 question, according to a study released yesterday.

A report for the Population Reference Bureau said middle class parents underestimate the cost of rearing children — they think they spend only 8 per cent of their annual income on the child but actually spend 31 per cent on the first born and 15 per cent on a second child.

The $64,000 question includes $2,194 for childbirth, $53,605 for costs up to 18 and $8,416 for four years of college.

The cost jumps to $107,000 if a middle class mother sacrificed earnings from a part time job to stay home to raise the child, according to Florida State University associate professor Thomas J. Espenshade.

Espenshade said childbearing costs for middle-income families increased more than 50 per cent from the $40,000 cost per child in 1969, with cost for low income families slightly lower.

Espenshade said costs play an increasing role in decisions to have children in the United States. But his study indicates a number of young adults consider "happiness, love and companionship," or "personal development of parent" as their main reason for having children.

★ Faculty wants Puryear, Wood canned

During debate of the first motion, which sought the general faculty's support of the Faculty Senate's opposition to Puryear's governance procedures, former SGA co-President Jay A. Martus was refused by the body an opportunity to address the chair.

Batiste also expressed concern about some faculty comments.

"I do not understand how a faculty member can stand up and say to his colleagues, 'We are the University'.

"I'd like to call to the attention of the faculty they are not the only constituents in the University," Batiste said.

Batiste was referring to the speech of Prof. Robert Paul Wolff supporting the motion to censor Puryear. Wolff told the faculty Puryear's actions "threatens the breakdown of orderly processes" of traditional UMass governance procedures.

"Either he does not understand, or does not want to acknowledge collegial life," said Wolff.

Prof. John H. Bracey, of Afro-American Studies, however, responded to Wolff's address by saying the "collegiality" mentioned by Wolff must be "collegiality of white faculty members."

Bracey alleged there existed "antagonism toward the provost before he arrived here."

Jeff Ludtke, president of the Amherst chapter of the Association of American University Professors (AAUP) urged the faculty to allow "due process" when seeking the removal of the provost.

Ludtke said tenure and reappointment decisions for faculty are not made arbitrarily, therefore the faculty should treat the provost accordingly.

Speeding car hits Roxbury school bus

BOSTON [AP] — A speeding car went through a stop sign and crashed into a school bus full of children in the Roxbury section of Boston yesterday overturning the bus and injuring 39 people, none of them seriously, police said.

Lisa Ancrum, 14, was reported in good condition last night at Boston City Hospital suffering from a slight concussion. Thirty-four other children and four adults were released after treatment, officials said.

Thomas Weston, 24, identified by police as the driver of the car, pleaded innocent in Roxbury District Court to charges of speeding, failing to stop for a stop sign, driving to endanger, assault and battery with a motor vehicle, leaving the scene of an accident and possession of heroin, police said.

Police said Weston was arrested a few blocks away from his flaming car, bleeding from a cut on his head.

He was held in the county jail overnight on $30,000 bond, pending a hearing today to reduce the amount, police said.

Nixon aide blasts Wash. Post

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Richard Nixon's chief aide yesterday accused the Washington Post of "stonewalling and covering up the incompetance of its reporters" by not retracting reports Nixon discussed hush money for Watergate burglars the week they went on trial.

Col. Jack Brennan, Nixon's chief of staff, said in a telephone statement from San Clemente, Calif., the Post used an uncorrected transcript of a White House tape to find the quote in the meeting Jan. 8, 1973, that Nixon had with his special counsel, Charles Colson.

He said the final transcript, prepared by Watergate prosecutors, had no reference to hush money and showed the conversation was unrelated to Watergate and centered on Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind.

Nixon's Washington lawyer released a 15-page transcript of the Nixon-Colson meeting which he said was the official version given him by Watergate prosecutors.

In that transcript, Nixon does not use the term "hush money" and the area of the meeting that most clearly parallels the quotes in the Post do concern Birch Bayh — although large sections are unintelligible.

Earlier in the same meeting, Nixon does discuss the possibility of executive clemency for one of the burglars, E. Howard Hunt, because of his long record of service with the CIA, but he says it would be difficult for the others.

When Nixon lawyers originally protested the story Monday, executive editor Benjamin C. Bradlee said: "The Post stands by its story."

"The Washington Post is stonewalling and covering up the journalistic incompetence of its reporters," Brennan said. "The Washington Post is wrong and it knows it.

"Ben Bradlee's comment that the Post stands by its story is merely a fancy way of saying the Post is really stonewalling. We think that this conspiracy of silence is really just a form of coverup."

Food stamp plan gets tentative OK

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Agriculture Committee yesterday tentatively approved President Carter's food stamp reform program, but liberalized it to raise total potential costs another $130 million.

The plan approved by the panel includes a Carter proposal under which needy people would be allowed to get free food stamps while no longer being required to buy additional stamps for cash.

The administration stamp proposal also would adopt tightened income eligibility standards which experts estimated would eliminate 1.3 million current participants and reduce benefits for nearly 4.8 million of the more than 17 million persons currently enrolled.

At the same time, officials estimate that cutting out the stamp purchase requirement and other new steps would bring nearly 3.3 million additional people into the program, and many lower-income recipients would get unchanged or increased benefits.

The committee tentatively completed work on the stamp legislation during an all-day session devoted partly to work on other parts of an omnibus farm-food bill. A final vote on the package was scheduled at a windup session today.

The food stamp section would extend that program, due to expire in September, for two years. Carter asked that it be kept running until it can be replaced by the all-cash welfare program he intends to propose later.

Under existing stamp program rules, almost all recipients must pay cash for part of their total monthly stamp allotments.

Congress affirms tax law changes

WASHINGTON [UPI] — House-Senate negotiators yesterday approved a tax bill that will pump $12.7 billion into the economy through new tax cuts over the next two years, including an average $121 per year break for 47 million couples and moderate income single persons who use the standard deduction.

Tax forms due next April 15 also would be greatly simplified for those who do not itemize deductions.

Single persons using the standard deduction and making more than $13,750 a year would be the only losers. They would be hit with an average $54 per year tax increase as part of an effort to reduce the extra taxes that two income-earning single persons must pay when they marry.

The compromise bill also would provide tax credits for businesses which increase their employment rolls, but the House prevailed in killing a provision that would have allowed businesses the option of claiming an extra 2 per cent investment tax credit instead.

The Senate's investment credit amendment would have amounted to a $1.8 billion cut over the next two years, most of it going to big business.

The conference committee completed the bill — a compromise between House and Senate versions — in only seven hours of sessions in one day, perhaps a record speed performance on a major tax bill.

Carter halts closing of ICBM plants

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Carter administration announced yesterday it is delaying a plan to shut down the only production line for intercontinental ballistic missiles. It denied the move was linked directly to arms negotiations with the Soviets.

The Pentagon released a letter from Defense Secretary Harold Brown to the chairmen of the House and Senate Armed Services Committees which said "the decision has been made not to close the Minutemen III production line at this time."

Brown said the decision was "based on the need to maintain an ICBM production capability while a complete review of alternatives to full missile production is being made."

Asked if lack of progress in strategic arms limitation talks with the Soviets was behind the move, Pentagon spokesman Thomas B. Ross said "it has very little to do with the SALT negotiations." Ross said the decision was mainly to give Brown "time to decide how to deal with the appropriation" for the missiles.

Fakin' it

I felt good when my clock radio went off telling me to get up and get ready to go to my classes. I had a great dream the night before and I was ready to face the university, when I suddenly felt someone grab my shoulder and start shaking me.

"Honey, it's time to get up."

I didn't understand. There was a woman in my bed trying to get me up for school.

"Come on babe, you'll be late."

I managed to open one eye and look up at the person now stooping over me.

"Honey, you don't want to be late for work."

I closed the eye and tried to figure out who she was when I realized she said "work".

"Work?"

"Yes, work. You know where you go for 40 hours each week and then bring home the paycheck."

"Sweetheart, I may not know who you are but I do know that I don't work. I go to school."

"Sweetheart, you haven't been a student in over eight years."

"Look, let's get this straight. I am a student at the University of Massachusetts and...."

"You were a student of the University of Massachusetts."

"Why don't you tell me when I graduated then."

"You graduated in 1977."

"This is 1977!"

"I'm sorry babe, but this is 1985, and you have to get out of bed and go to work."

"Tell me, what kind of job do I have?"

"You're a sales manager."

"That's crazy, I'm a psych major."

"But don't you remember, you couldn't get a job in your field so you started selling."

"Say who are you, anyway?"

"Don't I look familiar?"

"No you don't!"

"They said this would happen."

"What are you talking about? Who said?"

"The doctors. They said you would forget everything, and regress to a more secure time in your life."

"What are you talking about?"

"I'm your wife."

"My wife?"

"Yes, and you see that photograph on the table? Those are our children."

"Our children?"

"Look around this bedroom. All this furniture. It took us years to pay for that."

"What are you doing to me?"

"I'm trying to tell you what you've been doing with your life."

"I don't believe you!"

"Look in the mirror, and tell me what you see."

"I see... I see... someone much older than I am. With grey in his hair and wrinkles in his face. He looks so tired."

"That's you, babe."

"Me? Then why can't I remember any of this."

"It's a new type of amnesia that's occurring these days."

"Amnesia?"

"Something to do with time and motion. Some people live their lives so fast that they don't have time for anything. Not even for themselves. They're so afraid of being left "behind" that they have to hurry and keep up with everyone else. Pretty soon they get caught up in time and return to the period just before they started getting lost."

"When I graduated."

"Right. That's when you started getting lost. You didn't take the time to slow things down so everything got faster and faster."

"And now it's eight years later and I don't even know who my wife is, or my children. I can't believe it."

"Now that you're aware of what's happening, it's time to go to work."

"I can't go to work! I'm not even sure I know what to do."

"You have to. You've got this house and a family to support."

"But I won't know the people there, or how to talk to them or anything!"

"Just do what you've been doing the last eight years of your life."

"What's that?"

"Fake it."

Selling out to insurance companies

To the Editor:

As seniors about to graduate, both my roommates and I have been bombarded with phone calls and letters from persons representing various insurance companies, advocating us to purchase life insurance plans at this particular point in our lives. These sales representatives appear to have access to University graduation lists and also have knowledge of a great deal of what I would consider to be personal information about individual UMass graduates.

I question the ethics of the University, a public, non-profit institution, becoming involved in private business through the giving out or selling of personal information regarding its students to various insurance companies [as well as magazine publishers I might add] without the students' consent or knowledge. The final blow was receiving literature in the mail on yet another life insurance deal, accompanied by a cover letter "bringing our attention to the benefits of" this particular insurance plan, written on UMass stationary by Dean of Students William F. Field. Since when are students "educated" on the benefits of a particular private business offer by officials of the University on official University stationary?

Be aware. Students may not be receiving the best end of this deal. Think about it. The officials of this University and the private companies they are aiding are the ones coming out ahead, at the expense of our rights to privacy. I demand to see this unfair practice discontinued immediately. The University should consider the rights of its students of primary importance, and the aiding of private business as not a function at all of the University system.

Leave your footballs at home

To the Editor:

*I was happy to notice the 'dos and donts' for the upcoming Spring Concert (*Collegian May 3). With the fine selection of talent the concert should be a great time for all. I say should because the concert goer suffers the chance of experiencing the same inconsiderate people who attended the Orchard Hill Concert to give us all a replay of their childish activity.

Really now, is it necessary to kick or throw a football into a crowd of people who are enjoying themselves? While you very few inconsiderate souls bombarded the audience, you made a lot of people uptight. Can't we go to a concert without fear of unwanted missles coming in, must you attempt to ruin a good time for the audience with your activity?

I enjoy throwing a football, and do often, but I hope my mind never has to answer the question of why I do something as uncool as throwing a football in a crowd of people. For you jokers, I ask you as a lover of the arts to leave your little balls home, and come to the concert, enjoy it in peace, otherwise, let the others enjoy it, and you please stay away.

Enjoy the concert, y'all, and smile —

Rights to the oldest profession

By GREG BRYANT

The profession of prostitution has been in existence ever since the beginning of civilization. However, practitioners of this trade have been ardently repressed for reasons of "morality" and "dignity". Nevertheless, prostitution has and always will continue to flourish.

Like many before it, our society has never seen it fit to recognize the legitimacy of such an occupation. As a result, we spend thousands of dollars and waste sparse police personnel in a futile effort to suppress a trade that simply provides sex for those people who cannot or do not want to find it elsewhere. Thus, sex is not recognized as a basic human need which the prostitute satisfies in the true spirit of the wage-labor system (a system I am sure that most people in this country support).

Rather, a few lawmakers have seen fit to institute a set of laws based about their own moral dogmas and have, in turn, inflicted them upon society as a whole which, in this case, consists of two or more consenting people performing a sexual act. The only difference between this and what occurs between many married and unmarried couples is simply that the prostitute gives her body for a sum of money, which to most seems disgusting and immoral. As a result, the "authorities" have self-righteously sought to eliminate prostitution, thus far to no avail.

What most people ignore is the plight of the prostitute, herself. While some are able to assume the elite position of call-girl, most are relegated to the utter degradation of hustling on the street. They are harassed by the police because of the illegality of their trade and consequently are taken up by pimps who appropriate anywhere from 60 to 80 per cent of her earnings. The pimp serves primarily as a sense of security and protection for the prostitute against the police. Nevertheless, he exploits her vulnerability while asserting his own male "prowess".

In addition, there is the stigma that many attach to females who have blatantly sold their precious commodity for money. Few people will hire an ex-hooker because it is easy to regard a woman who has whored as nothing short of abominable. However, most of these females were, in fact, forced by economics into assuming this type of existence. Apparently a person who walks into a bank with a loaded gun, threatens those inside with possible death and then steals a few thousand dollars is "rehabilitative" while a whore will always be a whore no matter what.

Decriminalization rather than legalization of prostitution is the only alternative. In this manner, prostitution would exist without criminal restraints. Legalization, on the other hand, would merely mean the replacement of the current laws with other laws regulating this so-called "victimless" crime.

Considering that over 70 per cent of all women criminals were first jailed for prostitution, the most immediate result of decriminalization would be a lowering of the crime rate among females. Consequently, law enforcement agencies could go after the real criminals and not waste our money and their time setting up prostitutes. Graft and exploitation among these vice-cops would also be eliminated. It has been estimated that about one-third of all busts are carried out after the police have had sex with their victims even though there is a passage of money before the act).

With police harassment removed, the pimp would lose his very purpose for being. As a result, these women could get together and possibly start a brothel on their own. Another alternative would be to obtain an agent who would represent the prostitute and arrange meetings with customers. Gaudy advertising would thus be more sedate. Similarly, she would be more aware that her success depended on repeat customers and thus will see to it that she is in good health. (Even though right now the VD rate among hookers is equal in incidence to that found among high school students although drug addiction among the former is rather high.)

The fight for decriminalization is growing and prostitutes are organizing themselves into unions in a few large cities. Most notable of these is COYOTE (Call Off Your Tired Ethics), based in San Francisco and founded by former prostitute Margo St. James. One of the first of its kind, COYOTE has been at the forefront of the decriminalization movement while new arrivals such as Boston's PUMA are gaining momentum.

The time has finally come to re-examine our prudish morals regarding prostitution. The positive aspects of decriminalization are apparent. All that is needed is an end to the hypocritical and senseless laws that now exist. Why should we continue to prosecute the prostitute when, in fact, it is the existence of the customer that enables such a trade to exist in the first place.

March and rally to support tenants' rights

To the Editor:

A march and rally to protest high rents and poor housing conditions will be held on Saturday, March 7 at 11:30 a.m. Marchers will assemble at the common located at the junction of North Pleasant St. and East Pleasant St. [where the boy scouts sell Christmas trees]. At 11:45, the march will proceed down North Pleasant St. to Spring St. and on to the South Common where a rally will be held. Focusing on tenant problems and solutions will be speakers, music and assorted entertainment. There will be marching contingents from complexes, rented houses, and sympathetic home owners. This march and rally is sponsored by the A.T.A. as the first of a series of special events to call attention to tenant concern.

Rent levels have escalated at a dramatic rate. This fall, tenants are faced with another increase. Projected rent increases range from ten to fifteen per cent. The landlords claim that their costs are rising proportionately, but a rent increase of this magnitude can only be justified if landlord variable costs are increased by at least thirty per cent. This is not the case in the town of Amherst.

We believe that further rent increases illustrate that the concentration of rental property ownership in Amherst completely restricts competition. Landlords continue to extort high rents from tenants with no choices. Absentee landlords, owning most of the rental property take money out of Amherst circulation while the town remains unresponsive to tax paying tenants' concerns. The high demand and low supply of housing, resulting in one of the lowest vacancy rates in the state is a product of restrictive zoning. No new construction and the lack of eligible housing for subsidy programs means a virtual monopoly for landlords in a rental market where rent levels and services do not need to respond to competitive market forces. Tenant and townsperson both lose in this situation. The town loses retail tax revenue resulting when profits are spent elsewhere, and the high cost of rental housing automatically means that tenants have less money to spend for necessities and recreation, all sources of town income.

Thus, the lack of town revenue resulting in a property tax hike and further increases in the price of town amenities, sewer, water, etc., can partially be explained by the rental situation. In addition, tenants' rising utility costs are not solely due to company increases. Housing is poorly constructed without adequate insulation. Energy is wasted because landlords cut corners to minimize construction costs with little supervision from the town's regulatory agencies. As the price of energy increases, the tenant is expected to pay to heat his home and the outside environment as well.

We believe that present rent levels in Amherst are exhorbitant and disproportionate to tenants' incomes. High rents are paying for decreasing services. With no refurbishment, the tenant pays luxury rents for deteriorating housing. Rent Control is the first step toward protecting tenant and town from a continual drain of resources. Further rent increases are intolerable.

Life is a bagel

I stopped to pick up the bagel rolling away in the wind annoyed with myself for having dropped it as if it were a portent.
Faster and faster it rolled,
with me running after it
bent low, gritting my teeth, and I found myself doubled over and rolling down the street head over heels, one complete somersault after another like a bagel and strangely happy with myself
(THE BAGEL, David Ignatow)

No David, Mr. Ignatow, I'm not saying at all that your poem says your goal is a bagel, but like chasing after a bagel. And reading your poem I think, my gosh, how true that a goal — yours, mine, or someone else's — is like a bagel or like how you express it, Mr. Ignatow, in your poem. It's like you're only happy while chasing after it, rolling down the street head over heels in one complete somersault after it — that goal. And you're happy with yourself in the chase, only in the chase. For once you catch that bagel you realize — heh, it's only a bagel!

It seems appropriate to talk about this now, Mr. Ignatow. I mean, well, if you haven't heard, UMass closed its 1977 spring semester season in two and a half weeks and another graduating class will turn their tassles over to the other side of their graduating caps and march out in time with Pomp and Circumstance to face the cold and trying "Real World".

So, all in all, we're facing an end of something, Mr. Ignatow, something in the long trail of ends we take to get to our goal, whatever it may be, this goal, to become totally fulfilled, totally happy. And I thought it would be wise to point out to everyone (myself included, of course) that the fun and happiness to a goal comes with the chase. We need to be occupied in order to be fulfilled. Wasn't it Freud who said in Civilization and Its Discontents that his work gives him a "secure place in a portion of reality, in the human condition"? Sure it was, Mr. Ignatow. And he went on to say in Creativity that his work gave him time to think and create, that working toward a goal made his life complete. Isn't that right, Mr. Ignatow?

But never take your goals all too seriously — isn't that right, Mr. Ignatow? I mean, so many people make that goal their only interest. They get tunnel-vision and can't see anything or anyone else and so they step on anything and anyone else. Never take yourself too seriously as to deprive yourself from the unpractical and most splendid times of this life. Isn't that right, Mr. Ignatow? Make sure you have enough time to play and have around you enough people to play with. And if you never reach your goal should you set one too high, it will be easier to accept life for what it is. Isn't that right, Mr. Ignatow?

So be occupied chasing after bagels or anything else half as ridiculous. Isn't that right, Mr. Ignatow?

And should you reach your goal and feel a great emptiness and boredom with yourself and your world, look as quickly and intensely as you can for another. Isn't that right, Mr. Ignatow? Mr. Ignatow? Oh! There he goes after another bagel! Oh, excuse me, I want to follow. I'll have to go now, too. Want to come along?

Aloha to finals

By BARBARA HIGGINS

Schlitz-a-rama, Quad Day, Spring Weekend, May Day, Spring Concert, Budfest, Springmania.... the names are endless and all translate into one word — TEMPTATION. From mid-April through late May, UMass students must face a whirl of social activities.

Unfortunately, right around the same time, academic authorities decide to schedule their big fling of the semester — FINALS.

Nothing can be more depressing than studying for that big exam as sunshine and concert music float through the library window.

Thoughts of buttery popcorn and ice cold beer are enough to drive anyone crazy. Why now? Why must we be forced to decide between good times and good grades?

I, for one, see this as poor planning. All winter, we've been cooped up with plenty of time to study. Spring is a time to catch a few rays, play frisbee, and celebrate. Studying just doesn't belong. Blizzards cause class cancellations — why can't sunshine do the same? After all, travel is difficult during both conditions — one due to snow; the other due to sun glare. Of course, somehow we all manage to stumble onto the shores of the campus pond or guide ourselves to the stadium, directed by those faint notes of music and the smell of beer.

If a college is an academic setting, why do they offer us such tempting lures from our books?.... to build better character? Another reason may be to control brain power. With the consumption of hundreds of kegs of beer at these events, brain cells are bound to deteriorate, along with our final grades. Are these social functions merely used to keep UMass academic standards high by not allowing us to show our full potential? Something has got to be eliminated — Spring Concert, Schlitz-a-rama? Why be so extreme? The perfect solution is FINALS — they've got to go!

Mass. welfare plan rapped

BOSTON [UPI] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' proposed Workfare program "is a political shell game," a group of welfare recipients and advocates said yesterday, urging federal officials to block it.

Recipients affected by Workfare would be required to perform state jobs in order to continue receiving welfare benefits. The program cannot be implemented without a change in regulations issued by the U.S. Department of Health Education and Welfare.

The recipients claimed the program was a ruse to force them to work for no wages.

"Workfare is a political shell game. We demand real jobs that pay real wages, that are not taken from someone else to put us to work," the Ad Hoc Coalition Against Workfare told Acting Regional HEW Administrator Warren McFague.

"We demand that HEW immediately deny Michael Dukakis' waiver request. We demand that you stop Workfare."

State paying bundle in Seabrook case

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — Money-short New Hampshire is paying up to $50,000 a day to house 1,400 antinuclear demonstrators awaiting trials and the state's court system is being bogged down by paperwork connected with the cases.

Meanwhile, UMass students who participated in the Seabrook protest are calling a meeting today at 2 p.m. in the Council Chambers of the Student Union to discuss strategies to get the demonstrators still in jail released.

It is estimated 200 to 300 Western Massachusetts residents are among those awaiting trials.

Col. Leon Parker of the state adjutant general's office said yesterday it cost $30,000 to $50,000 a day to keep the demonstrators in five National Guard armories. He said it cost $35 a day for each of as many as 800 National Guardsmen to watch the demonstrators and a minimum of $5 a day each to feed the protesters.

New Hampshire, the only state with neither a general sales nor income tax, faces a potential deficit July 1 and is tens of millions of dollars short of being able to maintain present services in the next biennium.

Police from five New England states arrested 1,414 persons Sunday and charged them with criminal trespass for occupying the Seabrook site of a proposed $2 billion nuclear power plant. Few posted bail. The rest made their refusal to post bail part of their protest.

The clerk of Hampton District court, where hearings officially are scheduled, threw up his hands in dismay when asked when trials might begin. He said the first hearings scheduled for Thursday may have to be delayed to let him cope with paperwork.

"We're just working to get this whole thing sorted out," said D. Malcolm Hamilton, who has one person to help him with paperwork.

"With the number of people involved, I can't control it. We don't have 1,400 people arrested and brought into court all the time around here," he said.

Demonstrators spent their second night in custody Monday night on armory floors, most in sleeping bags. They hung antinuclear posters on the wall and ate Egg McMuffins in Concord and hamburgers and french fries in Manchester.

The Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, main builder of the plant, is under an order from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to cease construction pending final approval of the plant's proposed cooling system. Protesters said the plant will harm valuable marine breeding grounds and pose problems of nuclear waste.

Attorney General David Souter and Gov. Meldrim Thomson met Tuesday morning to "establish a standard operating procedure." Thomson press secretary Buddy Jenkins said that procedure includes dealing with the right of counsel to visit demonstrators, right to post bail and the right of reporters to interview demonstrators.

Power Co. agrees to pay for violations

MONTPELIER, Vt. [UPI] — The Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. has agreed to pay the state $30,000 for dumping radioactive water from its Vernon plant into the Connecticut River.

"The agreement embodies virtually everything the state sought," Attorney General M. Jerome Diamond said Tuesday.

The violations occurred July 1, 1975, when Vermont Yankee discharged sodium hypochlorite, a bleach like substance, and July 18-20, 1976, when radioactive water containing tritium was dumped into the river.

The suit, filed last August, was treated as a simple water pollution violation, Diamond said.

"Nobody's rights were touched. We avoided the issue of radioactive waste control," Diamond said.

Before Vermont Yankee obtained its operating license in 1972, it agreed to let the state maintain some regulatory role over radiation at the plant.

IF YOU'RE THINKING ABOUT THE NUCLEAR NAVY, THE SHIP SAILS ON MAY 15.

One of the best ways to get into engineering is to get into the nuclear Navy. But you'd better get moving fast. May 15th is the deadline for this year's Navy Nuclear Propulsion Candidate Program.

The Navy can give you the most comprehensive nuclear training possible. Because we operate over half the nuclear reactors in America. We start by giving you a year of advanced engineering technology. This would cost you thousands in graduate school, but in the Navy, we pay you.

Once you're commissioned as a Navy Nuclear Officer, you'll earn a top salary. Over $24,000 a year after four years. And you'll get practical experience on the most advanced nuclear equipment devised by man. All the Navy asks in return is that you serve for 3 years on active duty upon completion of your training.

But remember, May 15th is the deadline for this year's class. If you are majoring in engineering, math or physical sciences, find out from your local placement office when a Navy recruiter will be on campus. Or call toll free, 800-841-8000 (in Georgia, 800-342-5855) for more information. If you're still a junior, ask about the Navy's NUPOC Collegiate Program, which pays you up to $6,000 during your senior year. And hurry. Time and tide wait for no man.

NAVY OFFICER.
IT'S NOT JUST A JOB, IT'S AN ADVENTURE.

Dance Collective performing tonight

Through their dances, The Wallflower Order has made an attempt to recreate and visualize women's events and evolution to help fill the missing pages of lost or forgotten history. This five women dance collective will be performing tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, free.

Now on their first national tour, the performers have been dancing together only since 1975, when they met in classes at the University of Oregon. Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, May 4 — Born today, you are one who learns easily and well, yet you have never impressed others, whether teachers or laymen, as being a particularly enthusiastic or even willing scholar. In fact, you prefer using your physical skills to exercising your intellectual ones, if only because you have all your life received more recognition for success achieved in sports and feats of strength than in success achieved through your academic skills. You are not an especially confident person where your mental assets are concerned, and this may lead you to underrate yourself to such a degree that you may even at times run the risk of becoming intellectually lame. It is extremely important that you gain confidence in this area; unless you do, you may be in for serious trouble.

You are a highly emotional person, but you are not at all flighty or changeable where your emotions are concerned. When once you love, you continue to love -- and the same can be true of hate, fear or any other emotion. You may well have difficulty choosing a marriage partner, for you may not trust your instincts in this matter -- but once he or she is chosen, it is for life. You have no desire to break an already-established domestic circle, nor, indeed, will you easily permit anyone else to do so. For this reason, it is essential that your choice of a mate be the right one; otherwise, it could mean a lifetime bound to one you would rather have been freed from.

Although you are by nature somewhat reserved, none who know you only slightly would ever know it. It seems to those you meet for the first time or two that you have no shyness, no feelings of intimidation, no moments of hesitation.

Thursday, May 5

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Truth may burst upon you early in the day and cause you to change your mind about a number of things. Welcome new phases of old projects.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — This should be an excellent day for you -- whether you spend it alone or with others. Children add the spice of very active life.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Bitterness may create havoc in your thinking processes today. Don't attempt to decide an issue about which you feel too strongly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You may run short of time just when it is crucial not to do so. Make an effort to schedule the hours wisely.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Many of the day's events find counterparts in events of your past, recent and otherwise. Don't confuse nostalgia for regret.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Remain aware of consequences of your actions even as you make your move. You can save yourself considerable trouble if you do.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You should have leisure time this morning. Use it wisely and you can wrest success from impending failure.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Make no serious demands either upon yourself or upon friends and loved ones. This is a good time for softening your image.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — An unsettled morning could with some effort on your part evolve into a highly productive and progressive afternoon. See to it!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — If you can enter into another's creative fancies to the point of being able to understand the thought process involved, new success is possible.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — What you are taking as tragedy may well be merely farce. Refuse to allow minor issues to develop into major ones.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — There is no need for you to justify every move you make. Take into consideration your onw natural responses to natural developments.

Pick fulfills Bell dream

NEW YORK [UPI] — The decision had been made by the Tampa Bay Buccaneers more than a year ago. So Ricky Bell felt a sense of relief yesterday morning when the waiting ended and he officially became the number one pick in the 1977 National Football League college draft.

"I've been waiting a year and a half for this," said Bell, the Southern California running back who will rejoin his former college coach, John McKay, and a number of former Southern Cal teammates in Tampa Bay. "I've known for a year and a half they were going to pick me. I think it was a matter of Coach McKay needing a big fullback with almost the equal ability of Tony Dorsett. It will be a nice reunion getting back with Coach McKay and the other guys."

Bell, carrying a Tampa Bay jersey with his name and the number 42 printed on it, was escorted to a microphone at the NFL draft headquarters immediately after he was selected by the Buccaneers.

"It's something every football player dreams about — to be the first player picked," Bell said. "It's an honor. It's like winning the Heisman, in a sense. I can feel what Tony Dorsett felt when he won the Heisman (last year)."

I never thought in my whole career I would be the number one pick," said Bell, who gained 1,957 yards in 1975 and 1,417 last year. "I guess I started thinking about it in my junior year when I was going well. The difference I think was maturity and getting the chance to play. That's why it means something for me to be rejoining Coach McKay. That's where it all started."

Bell will also be joining Anthony Davis, the electrifying runner who preceded him at Southern Cal and signed with Tampa Bay after playing his first year in the now defunct World Football League and last season in the Canadian Football League.

...And you think you've got problems. The men's and women's gymnastics teams will team up to stage a "gymnastics extravaganza" tonight at Boyden Gym in an attempt to raise some much-needed funds for the financially floundering men's squad.

Gymnasts perform in extravaganza

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

With the threat of the UMass men's gymnastics program falling slightly behind those programs of its competing schools, men's gymnastics coach Dick Swetman has decided that since the athletic department will not help him out financially, he is just going to have to do it himself.

The first step Swetman will take in trying to raise some much-needed money for the UMass men's gymnastics program will occur tonight when the men's and women's gymnastics teams will present a gymnastics extravaganza in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

Tickets for the show, which begins at 8 p.m., will be sold on a first-come, first-serve basis at the door and the price is 50 cents for students and $1 for all others.

The extravaganza has been on the planning board for three months and it will feature a little bit of everything, from tumbling and parallel bar demonstrations to vaulting comedies and juggling shows.

"It is going to be quite a show," Swetman said enthusiastically. "I think that the show will appeal to all because of the variety of acts involved.

"What we want to do is to entertain the people with a variety of things because we would like to make this a yearly thing, and we would like the people to return next year too."

The main purpose behind the gymnastics extravaganza is to raise enough money that will provide scholarships for members of the UMass men's gymnastics team.

Since the spring of 1974, the men's gymnastics program has not received great financial support from the athletic department which forced a lot of the top gymnasts to leave the school for greener pastures.

Swetman, who just completed his first year as coach of the Minutemen, realized that the only way UMass could continually compete with other top teams, would be to raise money on its own so that it could attract high school gymnasts with scholarships.

"About midway through the season," Swetman said, "I realized that our gymnastics program badly needed some money which could be put to use as a recruiting scholarship. It seemed that UMass had fallen a little behind some of its competitors, so I thought it was time to do something to turn the program around.

"The first thing that came to my mind was to hold a gymnastics extravaganza. That was something that we always held when I was in high school, and it often attracted up to 4,000 people."

So far, Swetman is very happy over the terrific response the community has given the extravaganza.

"I am very happy to say," he said, "that the show will probably be sold out. That doesn't mean there are no tickets available, I am just saying that if people plan to go, they should get there early."

Financially, Swetman doesn't plan on making a whole lot of money on the first show. Because it is the first show, there is the natural added expenses.

However, what he is hoping for in the first show is that the people will like it so much that they would pay to see a similar show with new acts next year.

"That is how we will make our money," he said. "Once we start putting on more than one show a year, we should be in excellent financial shape."

So if you have nothing to do tonight, or even if you want to take break from your final cram, head down to the Boyden Auxiliary Gym and see a gymnastics extravaganza. You'll be helping the UMass men's gymnastics team out more than anything.

★ Syracuse invades Boyden

UMass cut it down to 8-7 by half. Spooner and Menna took over in the second half to help outscore Syracuse 15-5 and take a 22-13 win.

For the Minutemen, injuries could hold back the offense. Jeff Spooner will play, but his leg muscle pull still bothers him and he will not be at full speed. Vin LoBello will definitely miss the game, according to Garber. He was injured late in the UNH game when someone kicked him in the calf.

Terry Keefe also injured his wrist late in the UNH game, this time on a check. "He will play, but he can't face off. We'll have to juggle our lines there," Garber related.

For strategy, Garber may use extra defense men to put pressure on Syracuse's attackmen. "Tom Keenan played well against UNH and Rich Donovan is back," Garber said.

Ruggers foil filthy French

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

"We were super, we put it all together," said UMass coach "Doc" Laurence after watching a combined squad of UMass and Amherst College rugby players, known as the Bar Sinisters, pound out a 36-7 win in the Commonwealth Cup Tournament last weekend in Charlotsville, Virginia.

The victim was Nevilly-Sur-Marne, a French side, and the victory took the sting out of the Bar Sinisters first game loss to Washington.

Laurence told his team to be prepared for almost anything after he saw Nevilly lose 11-6 to tournament favorite Beacon Hill in an earlier match.

"The French intimidated Beacon Hill with filthy play," Laurence said. "They did a lot of punching and head butting and we knew they would try that with us too."

"I told our boys to keep their composure and run at them," Laurence added.

And run they did, but first UMass forwards Mike McCabe and Bob Fioravanti did a little head thumping of their own and the Frenchmen learned the hard way the Sinisters were well named.

"The last thing anyone would want to do is butt heads with those two," Laurence said.

The preliminaries out of the way, the Bar Sinisters settled down and played some awesome rugby. Andy Middleton's 45 yard penalty kick provided a 3-0 lead and Barry Stewart upped the score to 7-0 on a 40-yard burst for a try. A Nevilly try and another Middleton kick made it 7-4 and then came a big play for the Sinisters.

The Frenchmen, deep in their own territory, tried a clearing kick that was gathered in by Amherst College star Danny Wack. Wack drew the French to him and roofed a high kick that UMass forward Dan Geogianna grabbed for a 10-yard try and a 16-4 halftime lead.

"It was rather apparent after the first half that we were much stronger than them," Laurence said.

The Frenchmen met their Waterloo in the second half, as trys by Wack and teammates Doug Moses and Russ Isaacs helped the Bar Sinisters roll to a 36-7 win.

"It was just a matter of when and how often we'd score in the second half," Laurence said.

Middleton, who plays fly half and kicks for the UMass B side, led the potent Sinister offense with his accurate toe and some fine running.

The Sinisters got a rude introduction to the tournament Saturday morning, losing to Washington 31-12. They got off fast as UMass captain Rick Lopes streaked 85 yards with a loose ball, got hit, and Geogianna took it the last 5 yards for the try. Middleton converted and the Sinisters led 6-0.

It was all down hill from there though, as a series of mistakes, common to all-star teams unfamiliar with each other, made it easy going for Washington.

Final standings — 1 Virginia 2 Washington 3 Beacon Hill 4 Tallahasee 5 Cincinnati 6 Sinisters 7 Pittsburgh 8 Nevilly.

Scrum Scraps — Virginia campus saw UMass version of super hero Friday night when "Spider Man" Middleton displayed his wall crawling ability. "It was a great weekend and a great party," Laurence said.

IM playoff hopefuls swing into action

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

If you think about it, there are different kinds of softball victories: the come-from-behind win, the rout, squeakers, and the heartbreak. For your reading pleasure then, yesterday's men's intramural action has been categorically placed.

The rout: Synonomously called a wipeout, the losing team during this disaster secretly prays for rain, while the routee (team doing the routing) wishes every game could be like this.

The Bucs, F-Troop, Alcoholics, Kappa Sigma, and the MacKimmie Movers were all involved in whitewash victories in this; the early round of the playoffs.

Kappa Sig plated 12 runs in their first inning vs. the Black Knights, on the strength of seven walks, two errors, and a homer. It was all they really needed as they went on to a 17-6 victory.

The Movers scored three runs in the second, two in the third, three in the fourth, and six more in the fifth to defeat Lingus 14-4.

The Bucs shutout the Schmucks 16-0, and that's all that needs to be said about that game.

F-Troop was shutout in three innings in their game with the Acujacks, but used the other two innings to score a dozen runs, dropping the 'Jacks 12-2.

The Big Macs couldn't quite live up to their name and dropped an 11-1 decision to the Alcoholics.

The Squeekers: Those close games where neither team is ever out of it, and no one wants to make a game-blowing error.

The MacKimmie Marauders leading 1-0 on a first inning homer by Tom Doyle, scraped up three more runs in the top of the fifth when Bob 'Willis' Swartz doubled across two runs, and scored one hit later, enabling the Marauders to nudge out the House of Webster, 4-0.

The Dogs and Whips were involved in a tug-o-war game. In the bottom of the fourth, the Dogs used four hits to score three runs, putting them up 6-2. The Whips attempted to come back in the top of the fifth, but could only squeeze one run, and lost 6-3.

The Patterson Red Sox utilized a grand slam off the bat of Chuck Bond and a two-run job by John Piscello, to trip the Big Sticks 9-5. Solo job by coach Bruce Bressler helped the victory along also.

Heartbreakers: Players go home and cry after this game. Pitcher Dan Cormier walked in the winning run in the fifth inning, allowing the Brown Bunts a 5-4 victory.

Also advancing were the Mushrooms, Los Boricas, Hogsters, Grapefruits, Stones, and Cannonballers (a 1-0 victory over the Maroons).

Bell goes 1st, Pats pick WR

NEW YORK [UPI] — The Tampa Bay Buccaneers opened yesterday's National Football League draft by selecting Ricky Bell, the power running tailback from Southern Calfornia, and the Dallas Cowboys, looking for the missing ingredient they hope will carry them to the Super Bowl. traded four draft choices for Seattle for Heisman Trophy winner Tony Dorsett of Pittsburgh.

Bell's name had just been announced at the Hotel Roosevelt when NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle stood up and announced that the Cowboys had traded their no. 1 pick, the 14th choice in the first round, and three second round selections to the Seahawks. Dallas then immediately grabbed Dorsett.

Bell, a 215-pound tailback from Houston, is the first running back to be made the top pick in the draft since O.J. Simpson, another Southern California star, was selected by Buffalo in 1969.

The tireless Bell, who carried 51 times for 347 yards against Washington State last season, finished fourth nationally in rushing with 276 carries for 1,417 yards. He averaged 141.7 yards and his 14 touchdowns ranked him 10th nationally.

A successor to such stars as Simpson, Mike Garrett and Anthony Davis in the USC tailback slot, Bell led the nation in rushing as a junior with 1,957 yards, then the second highest total in NCAA history. He was slowed by injuries as a senior but still managed to perform well enough to finish second in the race for the Heisman Trophy.

Dorsett, who led the Panthers to the National Title last season, set 13 NCAA Rushing records in his four-year career. A 5-10, 195-pounder from Aliquippa, Pa., Dorsett led the nation in rushing and scoring last year. He carried 338 times for 1,948 yards and 22 touchdowns, averaging 5.8 yards per carry and 177.1 yards per game.

He finished his career as the leading rusher in college football history with 6,082 yards, the first collegian ever to surpass the 6,000-yard mark, and his 1,948 yards was also a single season record. He broke Glenn Davis' record for most points in a career with 356 and tied the former West Point star's career touchdown record by scoring 59.

The New York Jets took offensive tackle Marvin Powell of Southern California and the New York Giants made it three USC players in the first five picks when they took defensive tackle Gary Jeter. Atlanta selected offensive tackle Warren Bryant of Kentucky and New Orleans grabbed defensive end Joe Campbell of Maryland. Cincinnati, on its second first round choice, took another defensive tackle, Mike Butler of Kansas, and Kansas City finally snapped the string of linemen by taking defensive back Gary Green of Baylor.

Five more linemen then were selected as Houston took offensive tackle Morris Towns of Missouri, Buffalo, on a choice from Detroit, took defensive tackle Phil Dokes of Oklahoma State, Miami selected Adam Dune, a defensive tackle from Louisiana State, and Seattle, using the pick obtained from Dallas, took Steve August, a guard from Tulsa.

Wise shelled by Mariners

BOSTON (UPI) — Bill Stein, who hit only four home runs all last year, blasted two of them last night to drive in four runs and help the Seattle Mariners snap a three-game losing streak with a 10-8 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

The Mariners jumped on Rick Wise for five runs in the first inning, Stein capping the rally with a three-run homer. Larry Milbourne led off the game with a double and Steve Braun followed with a single. A base hit by Carlos Lopes drove in one run and after a single by Dan Meyer filled the bases Juan Bernhardt brought home another run with a long fly.

Stein then knocked out Wise with a 390-foot drive into the centerfield bleachers. He hit his second homer of the year in the rightfield stands in the fourth inning and Lopes added his first major league homer, a two-run shot, in the seventh. Dwight Evans hit a two-run homer in the ninth for Boston.

John Montague, who relieved Frank MacCormack after just three batters and none out in the first inning, went 6-2/3 innings to earn his third win in five decisions. Wise, whose ERA rose to 13.50 after four starts, suffered his second loss against one win.

Both Red Sox Manager Don Zimmer and Mariner First base Coach Vada Pinson were ejected when they protested successive calls while Seattle was batting in the fifth inning.

Islanders sink Habs; 4-3

MONTREAL [UPI] — Billy Harris scored on a rebound at 3:58 of overtime last night to give the New York Islanders a 4-3 victory over the Montreal Canadiens that kept them alive in the Stanley Cup Semifinal Series.

The Canadiens' defeat ended a league-record 38-game unbeaten streak at home and set up a sixth game tomorrow night at Uniondale, N.Y. If a seventh game becomes necessary it would be played here Saturday night.

Canadiens winger Bib Gainey and N.Y. Islanders defenseman Gary Hart struggle for the puck during action in last night's semi-final playoff game. The Islanders stayed alive in the series when Billy Harris converted on a rebound in overtime. (UPI)

The winning goal came after New York's Dave Lewis took a shot from 10 feet out which hit the crossbar of the Montreal nets. Harris banged the rebound over Canadiens' goalie Ken Dryden, giving the Islanders their first win in the forum since Oct. 14, 1975.

It was only the Canadiens' second loss at home in 45 games this season, and their first overtime game since May 6, 1975.

The overtime was forced at 13:09 of the third period when New York's Jude Drouin scored on the first shot of the period against Dryden. Drouin's drive bounced past Dryden after striking Montreal defenseman Guy Lapointe to tie the score 3-3.

The Canadiens had gone ahead 3-2 less than two minutes earlier, at 11:38, when Yvon Lambert deflected Larry Robinson's drive to the right of New York goalie Chico Resch, starting his first playoff game this year. Guy Lafleur also assisted on the play to increase his point-scoring streak to 37 games.

The Islanders took a 1-0 lead in the opening period on J.P. Parise's power play goal at 8:11. Montreal tied it 57 seconds later on Jacques Lemaire's back-hander.

In the second period, Mario Tremblay got his first career playoff goal after a 3-on-1 breakaway to put Montreal into a 2-1 lead, and Denis Potvin tied it for the Islanders.

The Islanders had an apparent goal disallowed at 2:24 of the second period when referee Bob Myers ruled that Clark Gillies kicked the puck into Montreal's net.

Gorillas must squeeze Orange

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

One team will be ending its season today. The other might if it isn't careful.

The Orangemen of Syracuse will cross lacross sticks with UMass at 3:00 behind Boyden as the Minutemen seek to avoid any more damage to its record and its post season hopes.

This is the Orangemen's last game, as they come in with a 8-5 slate, and ranked 18th in the nation. Another loss by the Minutemen would depreciate their record to 7-4 and end any aspirations for the playoffs.

The wins that Syracuse has this year demonstrates its strength. The Orangemen beat Baltimore University (15-12), Bucknell (22-12), Ithaca (27-12), RPI (27-3), Union (14-9), St. Lawrence (18-10), and Colgate (30-2).

The losses have also demonstrated Syracuse's weakness: defense. Cortland State, a team UMass defeated earlier in the season 10-6, slid by the upstate New York University 20-14. In the three other losses, the Orange team has scored 15 goals which should have been enough to win but wasn't.

"They're a very explosive offensive team," UMass coach Dick Garber said. "The game plan is to cut down their scoring; if we don't do that, we don't know what will happen."

Tom Abbott is the third leading goal scorer in the nation and fellow attackman Larry Storrier is right behind him at fourth. Storrier is third overall in points with 71 in 11 games for a 6.5 average. Abbott is seventh with a 5.6 points average, 62 in 11 games.

"They have a couple of Indians from upstate New York who played box lacrosse, and they have some real hard shots," Garber said.

After Abbott and Storrier, the scoring falls off. Sophomore Bill Yudovich helps out some. Yudovich, an honorable mention all-American at midfield as a freshman, is characterized by Garber as a good face-off man and a strong dodger.

Freshman goalie Steve Malloy has shored up a weak defense this year by making 182 saves in 13 games.

"They're an exciting team to see. They have strong midfielders and an excellent attack to form a high scoring team," the head gorilla said.

Last year, the Orangemen jumped all over UMass in the first quarter and rushed to a 6-2 lead.

Batmen on spot; face No. 1 UConn

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Like the Celtics, Dick Bergquist's Minutemen face a do or die situation today as they go head-to-head with the number one team in New England — UConn. The Huskies, 21-4, will play the Minutemen today at UConn with the first game of the crucial doubleheader slated for a 1 p.m. start.

The rejuvenated (15-14) batmen, are rated sixth in New England behind UConn, Maine, Harvard, Boston College and Brown in the latest New England poll.

Bergquist plans to go all out for the games today as he sends his two best pitchers, Jeff Reardon and Tom Nigro to extend the Minutemen's winning streak which presently stands as four in a row and six of their last seven ball games.

Reardon, 2-3 with a 2.97 ERA and winner of the Rhode Island game last weekend will pitch the first game. Nigro, rated as the fifth best pitcher in District I will go in the second game with a record of 5-2 and a 2.28 ERA.

"We are very definitely capable of winning a doubleheader today... Our pitching, defense, and hitting have finally jelled together and our confidence is growing. We're going with our very best because these games today are very critical," said Bergquist.

Make no mistakes about it, the Huskies are an excellent ballclub built on pitching and defense. Their ball games are usually low scoring affairs with the winning margin of no more than one or two runs.

Pitted against Reardon and Nigro will be UConn's best pitchers, Greg Biercovicz and Tom Germano. Biercovicz is 5-2 on the season with a 1.55 ERA while Germano is the team's leading winner with eight while having lost one. His ERA is 2.53 in 57 innings.

The leading hitter for the Huskies is Matt Hukill, who is currently swinging the bat at a .397 clip with 31 hits in 78 at bats.

Hukill is really surprising because last year as a catcher, he was named to the All-New England second team but only for defensive purposes. He hit a meek .192 in the '76 season.

"I think our strength against them is that on paper our team is better hitting. We've gone against teams that have faced UConn and knocked out pitchers that have lost to UConn 1-0, or 2-0," said Bergquist.

"For example in the Rhode Island game last weekend, we knocked out Bannon of URI with eight runs, and he had previously lost to UConn by only 1-0. If we hit the way we hit in the last four ball games, we have an excellent shot of beating them," added Bergquist.

Last weekend, the Minutemen kept hopes for post-season play alive by beating the Rams in a double header 8-3, 6-1, finally going over the .500 mark for the first time this season.

The team now has four .300 hitters with outfielder — and designated hitter Mike McEvilly and infielder — lead-off man Ed Skribiski the main offensive threats with .341 and .345 averages respectively. Skribiski has collected the most hits (38) while McEvilly is the leading RBI threat with 21 and has hit four homeruns.

Gazelles streak by Lyons

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY — Nancy O'Neil scored four goals and Judy Kennedy and Evie Sneeden had three goals and an assist apiece to lead the UMass women's lacrosse team to easy 14-2 victory over Mt. Holyoke yesterday afternoon.

The victory is the sixth of the season for the Gazelles to go along with a loss and an early season tie.

If the Minutewomen were let down at all after suffering their first loss of the season on Saturday against UNH, they certainly didn't show it, because from the opening whistle until the end of the game, the Gazelles just completely dominated the play.

Mt. Holyoke did manage to take a 1-0 lead less than five minutes into the game when Mary Castner scored, but it was no indication of which team was dominating the game.

The field seemed to be titled towards the UMass offensive zone, as the Gazelles were getting several shots on net. However their shots were right on the Mt. Holyoke goalie and she didn't even have to move to make the save, which frustrated the Gazelles.

Then about six minutes into the first half, Debbie Ames came up from her defensive position and scored for the Minutewomen to tie the game, 1-1, and from that point on, UMass could do little wrong.

"That was the goal that broke it open for us," said UMass coach Frank Garahan. "We had our troubles getting the ball past their goalie in the early minutes of the game, but after Deb scored, everything seemed to fall into place.

Moments later, O'Neil netted the first of her four goals on the day when she fired the ball past the Mt. Holyoke goalie after she put on a spinning fake in front of the net after receiving a pass from Kennedy.

Carrie Nickerson made it 3-1 in favor of UMass only seconds later, as she finished off a three-on-two fastbreak for the Gazelles.

Julie Hall increased the lead to 4-1 when she scored on an unassisted goal, and Kennedy upped the UMass lead to 6-1 at halftime when she scored two quick goals right before the end of the half.

However, there was a lot more to come. You see, Garahan didn't have all of his starters in the game during the first half because he wanted to give some of the second-stringers some playing experience for the upcoming playoffs.

In the second half, with most of the first-stringers in the game, the ball was constantly in the UMass offensive zone. Cindy Hartstone, who didn't play in the first half, quickly got the Gazelles back on the scoreboard less than two minutes into the second half with her goal.

Then Sneeden, who also sat out the first half, upped the UMass lead to 8-1 on the first of her three goals in the half. Mt. Holyoke scored on a fastbreak of its own to make it, 8-2, but three more goals by O'Neil, two more by Sneeden and one by Kennedy pulled UMass out to a 14-2 lead.

"I was really happy with the way our second-stringers played in the first half, especially on defense," Garahan said. "Hopefully by playoff time this weekend, everybody on the team should have a fair amount of game experience."

Mary Murray played another fine game in goal for the Gazelles, as she was called upon to make 10 saves. In the early moments of the first half, Murray made two tough saves from shots taken at point-blank range.

The Gazelles have one more game before the New England championships this weekend at Williams College, and that is against Plymouth St. Thursday afternoon at the NOPE field.

HAMDEN, Conn. — It may not have been the best played game, but it was a victory just the same, and that is what really counts.

The UMass softball team won its 12th game in 3 attempts with a decisive, but rather sloppy 7-4 win over the Owls of Southern Connecticut.

"The team has lost some of its dazzle," commented UMass coach Dianne Thompson. "At times we look lazy on defense — the throws are not as snappy and sharp as they could be. This was not one of our better games."

The Minutewomen did manage to pound out eight hits, but they were helped by seven Southern errors. Sue Peters collected two hits, including a long triple and one RBI. Carol Bruce, Susan DiRocco, Pat Oski, Heidi Dickson, and Cheryl Meliones each had a single, while Rhonda McManus belted a triple and produced two RBI's.

The Minutewomen opened their scoring in the third inning when Peters tripled, and Bruce drove her in with a single. DiRocco followed with a single, and then McManus brought in two more tallies with her long triple. The fourth run was produced by Oski's sacrifice fly.

That was all of the earned runs that the diamondwomen would collect, as the UMass bats got quiet. The remaining three runs were all scored on Southern errors.

The Owls scored two runs of their own in the bottom of the third as a sloppy UMass defense committed three errors in that inning.

Sue Peters went the distance in the game to pick up her fifth win of the season without a loss. She allowed five hits, three walks, and had two strikeouts. Only two of the four Southern runs were earned. Even though the Minutewomen did not play one of their better games, Thompson is very pleased with the way they have held together this season.

"This team has made great strides forward to increase the respectability of UMass softball," said Thompson. "They are a team who keeps proving that they are one of the best in New England even though they are unable to compete in post season play."

In summarizing the team's success this year, Thompson said:

"The greatest asset of this team is personality — they have the ability to keep on an even keel. We never are really high or low. It's hard to shake up a stable team like ours."

The softballers have five games remaining in their schedule, including a rematch with the Springfield team that they defeated earlier in the season. In order to keep on the winning track, Thompson believes that her team must get sharper on defense.

"We sometimes get ourselves into defensive jams — but usually do a superb job to get ourselves out of them. The reason for the stability of our team is confidence. It has brought us a long way."

The UMass JV's dropped their game to a very tough Southern team. They could only muster four hits en route to a 3-1 defeat.

Uncle Jack wants you!

Any college coach, whether it be football, wrestling, gymnastics or basketball, will relate that the most ungratifying part of their profession is the business of recruiting. UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman is no exception, but like most coaches he accepts the task as a hazard of the job.

Since the NIT loss to Villanova, Leaman and his two assistants, Fan Gaudette and Ray Ricketts, have been busy trying to sell the UMass program to prep and high school phenoms from the eastern area.

They have met with varying success. Two standout performers have committed themselves to the school, however, the coaches are experiencing the anguish of recruiting that results from losing a blue chip prospect.

Felton Sealey, who led Don Bosco high school from Boston to two Massachusetts schoolboy championships, and was named the Boston Globe's outstanding high school player this season, was very close to choosing UMass to further his already highly refined basketball skills.

"We think we were awfully close to getting him," said Leaman. "If he had decided to play in the New England area it was going to be at UMass."

Sealey was heavily sought after by the major collegiate powers around the country and eventually chose to accept an offer from the Ducks of Oregon. That decision may have been influenced by the impact of Ron Lee's success. Lee, now a member of the Phoenix Suns, graduated from Lexington HS and went west to acquire fame and idoltry at the campus.

The coaches also tried to lure two other top performers from Massachusetts. Ed Thurmon of Lynn Classical, another Globe All-Scholastic and Parade magazine third team All-American, was approached by Leaman. Thurmon didn't show much interest in UMass and eventually signed a letter-of-intent with ACC power Wake Forest.

George Cheevers, a standout 6'9" forward from Worcester Academy, was the other local product highly scouted by Leaman. But Leaman ended up 0-for-three when Cheevers opted for the more stoic confines of Harvard and the possibility of playing under the tutelage of Tom "Satch" Sanders.

This experience concerns Leaman who is worried about this institution's reputation across the state.

"We're having a tough time trying to sell this school and drawing top players to come here," said Leaman. "I'm disappointed, not that we lost them, but because they were Massachusetts kids."

This lack of interest by area phenoms in their state university is a unique situation in the country and one which may force Leaman to broaden his boundaries in search of talent.

"We've won more than 20 games in four of the last five years, yet we just don't have the image of an outstanding school, both athletically and academically. "If these kids won't come here," said Leaman, "and don't want to be part of our program, we'll reach out to other areas."

Thus far Leaman and his staff have been able to attract two prospects to the program. Tom Witkos, a 6'2" guard from nearby Hadley and Hopkins Academy will be attending UMass in the fall. He averaged 17 points and 7.5 assists per game while leading his team to a 20-6 record this season. Witkos will be a welcome addition to the backcourt which will be losing the servides of Alex Eldridge and Derick Claiborne after next season. The other recruit is Jay Stewart, another product of UMass' long affiliation with New Jersey schools. The 6'8" forward earned second team All-State honors last season by averaging 17 points and 11 rebounds a game.

"We have always recruited in the Long Island, middle New York state, New Jersey and New England areas," informed Leaman. "But with the new league we're going to have to move into the Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and Washington, D.C. areas."

Leaman may sound like the head of a mafiosa family plotting to take over another Dons territory, but that's the type of move UMass is going to have to make if it continues to be neglected by the state's top ballplayers.

"The thing about recruiting," continued Leaman, "is that there's no set system that works. What works for one kid may not necessarily work on another. Like campus visitation, this campus is beautiful but when it rains the campus takes on a different look."

Nothing in the hypocritical world of recruiting is a sure thing, and after the events of the past few weeks, no one knows better than Jack Leaman.

Guitarist Willie Rush and Southside Johnny Lyons exchange some hot licks in preparation for this Saturday's Spring Concert.

Saturday Live!

By ROSS NERENBERG
Below The Salt Staff

This coming Saturday, May 7, is the date for UMass' annual spring concert and a gala event it promises to be. A splendid time is guaranteed for all; lots of music and lots of refreshment for one and all. The gates to the stadium will open at 10 a.m. with the musical festivities scheduled to commence at 10:30.

The concert committee has worked long and hard in their efforts to secure some big-name musical performers and have indeed come up with a concert bill which virtually features something for everyone.

The event promises to be the biggest outdoor concert held at UMass within recent memory, so all those withing to participate in the good vibrations should plan on getting there as early as possible. Leave the brew home; you can buy it at the concert.

Appearing during the day onstage will be Southside Johnny and The Asbury Jukes, Procol Harum, The Pousette-Dart Band, Richie Havens, Melanie, and Conjunto Libre. Following is a capsule preview of each of the six talents slated to appear.

Southside Johnny and The Asbury Jukes: Direct from Asbury Park, New Jersey, Johnny Lyon (an alumnus of Bruce Springsteen's E Street Band) leads his ten man rock and roll machine back for a return engagement at UMass. Well-received during their February appearance in the Student Union Ballroom, the band has recently released their second album on Epic, This Time It's For Real (preceded by I Don't Want To Go Home). Attempting to categorize as well as explain his group's music, Lyon says, "We blend rock and roll and the R&B sound from the '50s and the sound from the '60s and what we hear today. When we do old songs, it's because we believe they're great songs — not because they're old songs. Harkening back to the roots of anything is good. When you build on something that's gone before that really moves you, that's when you're going to move forward. And that's what our band is all about."

Each member of the band sports a colorful nickname, ranging from drummer Kenny "Popeye" Pentifallo to saxophonist Carlo "Saxy" Novi. Southside Johnny is scheduled to be onstage with his Asbury Jukes at 6 p.m. A dynamite live act!

Procol Harum: Led by pianist and vocalist Gary Brooker, this progressive English quintet has been enhancing the music scene since the mid-60s. Surviving several personnel changes (guitarist Robin Trower has established himself as a star since leaving the band), Procol fuses R&B with classical rock. The band is probably best known for its hit singles "A Whiter Shade Of Pale" and "Conquistador."

Technically proficient and occasionally innovative, their current album (number ten overall) on Warner Brothers is aptly titled Something Magic. Commenting on his group's longevity, Brooker states, "The things we do stand up to time. And I guess for the truly great people their greatness comes from the fact that their work is as enjoyable in five years' time as it was when it was created." Procol is scheduled to take the stage at 4:30 p.m.

Pousette-Dart Band: A Boston band rapidly on the rise, due in part to Impressive live performance as well as favorable critic and public response to their current Capitol elpee, Amnesia. Made a minor impression a few years ago when they toured as opening act for Yes. Fronted by guitarist-vocalist Jon Pousette-Dart, the quartet's country rock sound is based upon varied guitar work; electric, acoustic, and slide. Having been compared favorably to the Eagles, this is definitely a band to keep your eyes on in the future. Plans call for Pousett-Dart Band to begin their set at 3 p.m.

Richie Havens: After serving stints as a Western Union messenger, restaurant counterman, yarn winder, doll factory worker, and portrait painter, Havens turned

Arts Festival Highlights Weekend

By E. PATRICK McQUAID
Below The Salt Staff

In close competition with the Spring Concert this weekend will be the Second Annual New England Artist Festival and Showcase at the Tri-County Fairgrounds on Bridge St., Northampton. Sponsored by the Arts Extension Service of Continuing Education at UMass with the cooperation of the Valley Advocate newspaper, the festival will feature over 33 different professional performing groups as well as hosting approximately 250 craftspeople, visual artists, filmmakers, poets, and small presses. Unlike the one day-long concert series, the festival will run Saturday, May 7 from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. and Sunday, May 8 from noon until 6 p.m.

"It's the largest of its kind in New England," Bob Lynch of the Arts Extension Service tells us. "It's produced entirely by the staff and students of the University. The event could mean a lot for the University because it means a lot for the community right now."

"Community" is what the Arts Extension Service is all about. Their objective is to assist in organizing and developing effective, self-sufficient community arts programs and committees.

"We are an advising service," Lynch explains. "We're concerned with group dynamics and community interaction in the arts."

The Arts Extension Service holds an annual Community Arts Day in which various groups get together and discuss related problems. This year's session, to be held on May 29, will be the third that they've sponsored. At their first meeting, two years ago, it was decided that the communities needed a listing of all the area craftspeople. Some 3,000 artists were contacted and asked if they'd be interested in advertising themselves. Arts Directory, just such a listing of regional artists, is published each year now by the Arts Extension Service.

At the second session the need for the community to view all the artists and their wares in one spot was discussed.

"Over 14,000 people attended the first festival last year. This year we've advertised for it as far as Boston, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut... here, did you see our ad in the Boston Phoenix?" He displayed the paper and opened to the page showing us the ad.

The Pocket Mime Theatre will appear at the 2nd annual New England Artist's Festival and Showcase in Northampton this weekend.

"The festival is a major marketing event for the artists and provides access for the community group members. Last year a children's act traced 41 bookings to the festival." Cash prizes will be drawn this year that must be used towards the booking of a performing group. A $150, $100, and three fifty dollar prizes will be up for booking agents and 25 cent chances for 13 prizes of $15, $10, or $5 for the general audience that must be applied to the purchase of a crafts item on display for sale by one of the craftspeople or artists.

A showcase will allow the performers a half hour each. Booking agents and performance sponsors from throughout New England have been invited to see and hear the performers which will range from classical, bluegrass, jazz, and folk music and a number of programs for children. The New England Artist Showcase is a unique event in that it not only allows but encourages public attendance where usually a showcase is limited only to booking agents and invited guests.

Among the several visuals artists at the festival will be Below The Salt's own graphic artist Marty Maceda. Accompanying Maceda will be other members of the Pioneer Valley Graphics Guild, a loosely formed collective of cartoonists and graphic artists that grew out of a credit free workshop in comic art taught some two years ago by Brian Turner, an MFA student in Creative Writing. Other members who will be there include former Salty Kris Jackson now with the Advocate, Rob Engman, also with the Valley Advocate, and UMass students Mike Moyle, Steve Lafler, Peter Tolan, John Hayman, Kate Swohl, Joe Caroll, and Brian Turner.

New England poets will be creating a festival within the festival this year according to poetry coordinators Steve Miles and Robert Abel of the Lynx House Press. About 15 to 20 poets from small presses such as the Massachusetts Review, Panache, Chomo-Uri, Python Press, The Four Zoas Press, the New England Small Press Association, and of course Lynx House Press will be reading from their selections on both Saturday and Sunday.

Among the poets will be Joyce Thomson ("The Blue Chair"), Ray Amorosi ("A Generous Wall"), Robert Hahn ("Crimes"), Margret Robison ("The Naked Bear"), Thomas O'Leary ("A Fool at the Funeral"),

Poetry

This venereal room I lay in now, Used only for the routines of sleeping — and other emotionless indulgences

Another puff lingers on —
Her bed, and I realize I've wandered
Into one full of naked inertia.

As the pages are unfolded, I read;
The stains that tell of many;
Such as I,
Staring blankly through brass bedposts,
wondering,
But I choke again on the foulness —

I never could stand cigarettes.
Then sort of a tremulous gaze hits me —
I've stayed too long.

This skin is soft
if you blow on it
swirls will rise and settle in different patterns.
Here it is pink where the bearings were, there its whithered up tube waits for someone with feathers to tickle it.
The sun puts the whiter shades on these surfaces contours form from shape and shadows pale white and dark hairs share space everywhere pin-prick bumps push out towards cold air like a thousand tiny mountains.
Something secret waits here beneath the navel, or somewhere on venus look before it goes
there,
its disappeared.

my beard itches

before the antipasto and beyond the pasta they ask me all those questions that relations always ask with engaging disinterest surely they must sleep with their arms

living expended in expensive things smothering

their gentler dreams

O,
how I hate them

Farewell, All, Strew Roses In My Wake

"Strange events allow themselves the luxury of occurring" — Charlie Chan.

"I am everything" — Sun Ra.

"The only thing between me and the gutter is a suitcase full of nothing" — Richard Widmark from Pickup On South Street.

"Of course I will!" — me, October 1974.

The above quotations are all significant of something, but, like a college education, you will never find out what. Or whether it was necessary. Instead, you will consider yourself richer for the experience and ignore the practical explanations which explain nothing in the long run. So will I.

Some will argue that the UMass experience is a mundane one and about as far from profound as you can get and still be in Massachusetts. As a four year veteran here, I totally disagree. For some, the Happy Valley lifestyle is profoundly dull or profoundly confused, while still others consider it profoundly depressing or profoundly useless. And as for me? I vacillate between profoundly laughable and laughably profound. I approach everything with a grinning interest, but whether the grin or the interest comes first I never know.

Two things at least have become clear to me after the existential travails of eight straight semesters of scholarly servitude. One is that nothing ever turns out as expected (meaning courses, careers, emotional relationships, parties and eggplant parmagiana); the other is that it is entirely possible to actually do something constructive or different or important while at UMass providing you limit your expectations of the results (see above). I have never seen anything pan out exactly as the planners expected it to, but I have seen many individuals involved in personal projects that, to some degree, are important to the UMass community. Despite the fact that many people are unaware of them, these groups of individuals have meant something and their effect, though often subliminal, is felt. Sulaiman Hakim and the Unity Ensemble, Student Video Project, the jugglers around campus, Outfront, Nummo News, the anti-nuke Clamshell Alliance, Archie Shepp, the various coops, the organizers of Earth Day and Women's Week, certain snidely delightful Collegian editorialists, Spectrum, Below the Salt; these are a few of the many.

For me personally (and that's who we're talking about), Below the Salt and the accompanying personal contacts and experiences have served as my real university. To put my last four years into perspective, I look at three things: the scraps of my address book, the balance page of my check book and every Below the Salt I worked on for the last four years which is most of them. There is an illogical progression in those issues that reflects my own admittedly strange mental growth. Under the wise and wild-eyed tutelage of professeurs-conferees Mike Kostek, Gary Gomes, Your Sacred Cowboy, Dee Greaze et al., I let my brain loose to fly around like a parakeet in a living room and grew proficient in the techniques of mind-to-mouth reflex, realization of absurdity and appreciation of oddities. I absorbed and was changed by it because I needed and wanted that sort of delirious inspiration. Nor was this happy, creative madness available at any other school no matter what the price.

Jack Himself

Where else could I return from summers spent dumping garbage to my established status as hot jazz critic-cum-professional wrestling correspondent? Where else could there be a "fine art—real world" publication that relentlessly defied the obscure and assembled little schizoid collages with titles like "Appeals for castration met with brutal stupidity?" Where else could so much be said to so many and be comprehended by so few? Only in America, only in Massachusetts, only at Zoomass. And I am grateful that I could make my voice heard and play the role of campus media luminary hot shot for a while.

In the same breath, I can say that this whole editorialist-purveyor of public taste role that I've played for the past few years is really just a self-inflation, an ego boost. It was; I'll never deny that...but a great deal of knowledge came from it nonetheless. And there was at least a little bit of the truth at the bottom of whatever I wrote. I did fulfill my original purpose for joining the Salt — informing people of the importance of jazz music in their lives — and I can look back on that with a smile and several hundred records.

Look at who I've been able to meet and talk to in the course of my four years with the Salt: Count Basie, the Mighty Sparrow — King of Calypso, the amazing Penn Jillette and Weir Chrisemer of the Asparagus Valley Cultural Society, Kennedy assasination expert Mark Lane, Tom Wolfe, several New York zoot toot record company producers and promo people, Gil Evans, Barry Harris, Billy Harper, Max Roach and other "unknown" musicians of that ilk who are my heroes including an outrageously drunk Sonny Stitt, and, of course, the uncountable individuals of the UMass community whose mad actions made them influential and near legendary in their own small circles. I'm talking about the Sebastian Baines, David Letters, Brian Harringtons of this population and the other, lesser known, less apparent but no less significant nuts who give flavor to this community, who provide the spark of interest that keeps our heads and hearts alive and who have indirectly fueled my occasional magic moments of inspiration. May I (and You) always have a few of these court jester-medicine men nearby to keep the blood flowing.

Among the things of value, necessity and no immediately discernible worth that I've picked up between then and now are an intermittently fearsome cheap cigar habit, an elastic metabolism that can adapt involuntarily to lack of sleep, the virtue of patience that has stood the test of bureaucracy and professorial incompetence, one case of the crabs and several of the Southwest flu, a blonde tuft of hair on my chin, quite a few useless books, a love for the country over the city and a large and bulky legacy of Collegians and Below the Salts that I will pore over and laugh over and reminisce over in years to come.

I never had the blues, though; not once that I can remember and I don't have them now on my leave taking. It's the logical end, the final chorus. Sayonara, y'all.

fiction Another Sunny Day

By James Odato

Tony was holding four cards; the fifty lay on the curb where Donny had just dealt it.

Donny lit a cigarette with a turn of his lighter, keeping his large, green-in-pink eyes on Tony.

"Just get lost Junior. Just get lost will ya." Tony demanded.

King City, tilting his head so his eyes were clear of his bangs and the smoke from his cigarette, walked into the Last Resort Variety Store with an empty container of milk. Junior Lawrence turned and followed him.

"I'll be right back Tony," he warned, and then kicked the orange Dreikorn's Bread plate of the screen door, sending it into the wall phone inside the store.

The proprietor, Mr. Oss, did not go for that. "Hey, Junior, wize guy. You want I should do that to the back of your azz?"

Donny's eyes glared at Tony, leaning his long frame before his friend. Exhaling a full breath of smoke, he said, "Beat the shit out of that asshole when he comes out here. Kick his ass. You know you can."

Tony glanced into the store. King City stood at the counter with a gallon of milk. Mr. Oss was reaching behind the counter into the cigarette rack.

"I can kill that jerk," Tony said.

He manipulated the cards in his small, tanned hands. His dark face, smooth and sweaty, showed no anger, but his knit brows hinted concern.

The curb; Donny; the hot sun; a game of cards. It was just another summer afternoon, Tony figured. No sweat.

Tony looked down the street. Children played about a dingy, white station wagon. A boy standing on the hood of the car shouted down to the rest. He jumped up and down, clasping a toy rifle. He pivoted, sweeping the aim of the gun to the faces of his peers. Suddenly, three bodies lay quiet on the sidewalk; a fourth was still kicking after being filled with imaginary gunfire.

A garbage truck idled down the street, with a pair of men holding onto the back edges. A dark, stenchy liquid spilled into the streets from it.

"This city stinks," Tony said. He stood up, grabbing the deck of cards.

"What ya gonna do?" asked Donny. He stood up too; his shadow blanketing Tony.

"Let's move into the shade," Tony said. He jutted his chin in the direction of the corner house across the street where a split-rail fence enclosed a sharp, dark-green lawn. The whole corner was surrounded by elms.

Tony perched on the fence. Donny positioned himself opposite him. Tony shuffled the deck.

"It's better here," Tony said.

The door of the Last Resort opened. Donny watched without moving his head as King City, carrying a gallon of milk, and smoking a cigarette approached. Junior followed, carrying a smirk, talking loudly.

"There he is. Tryin' to hide," said Junior, entering the shade of the corner.

"Hey listen Junior, I don't want nothin' to do with ya. Just keep on walkin' and my life will be that much pleasanter." Tony did not look up from his hand.

King stood on the street side of the sidewalk; Junior was standing closer to the fence, pointing his finger at Tony.

"Don't threaten me," Tony said.

"Come on man, let's go," King City motioned. Junior stared at Tony.

"I'll threaten anybody I want to threaten. If you want a fight, just open your mouth. Anytime. If you don't want to fight, just keep your mouth shut. And don't think Rufus, here scares me — I can beat his head too."

Junior stared, waiting for some return. Nothing was said. The pair began walking away. Junior was turning to King City, gesturing with his head, punching his palm.

"The suck!" Donny uttered. Immediately his faced turned to the ground. He leaned toward Tony, his back to Junior.

Junior spun at them. "Okay Tony that's it. You little chicken," he hollered. He came boldly, holding his boney shoulders up as if to tackle.

Tony left the fence and took solid stance on the sidewalk. "OK Junior...OK Junior...OK Junior." Tony's eyes squinted and he unbuttoned his shirt. He looked directly into Junior's eyes and threw his shirt on the ground. He raised his open hands to his waist, ready.

Junior said nothing, but began unbuttoning his shirt. Tony, standing bare-chested, faked a lunge at Junior who fell back a few steps, startled. He stared at Tony with uncertainty.

King City passed behind Junior slowly and sat on the fence next to Donny. Donny stood up, faced Tony and Junior, and put his hands in his pockets.

Junior threw down his shirt.

Tony was silent; arms up; Donny out of sight. He waited.

Junior jumped at him, locking his hands on Tony's shoulders. Tony took him by the arms, and they wrestled. The audience was wordless as the pair danced, kicked, struggled, arm in arm.

Tony slipped his leg behind Junior's, and pushed him off balance. They landed on a shoulder; wasps of heavy breathing, manly gasps, came from both. Tony grabbed a lock of Junior's short, red hair. A chilling howl let loose out of Junior. A dog barked somewhere.

Junior's face was into the sidewalk, and Tony hacked the posed back of Junior's head with a swift tatoo of blows.

Junior squirmed, grunting. Tony slid on top of him, knees on his chest, pinning Junior down to the sidewalk. A tight grip on Junior's forehead kept him down.

With his free hand, Tony lashed punches into Junior's face. A dull, operating room, silence was broken with every earth-pounding blow; like the stillness broken when rocks are thrown into a quiet pond; a Pa Wop!, penetrating deep down, sending out waves of ripples that rebound off every shore.

Tony's face was coiled in confused malice. He moved unconsciously, mechanically, compelled by a delirious throbbing from within.

Junior lay trapped and bleeding. He could offer no defense. His eyes were nearly closed, his mouth open. Crooked teeth jutted from bleeding gums. He kicked his legs in desperation. His one free arm reached out and grabbed Tony's hair.

Tony crawled over Junior's body, letting go the grip on his thin red locks, and released Junior's hand of its hold with a squeezing twist and a chop of his jaw. He stretched out to hold down Junior's arms with his hands, his knees holding down the rest of Junior's thin frame.

"I'm gonna fucking kill you!" Junior screeched, opening his eyes wide.

Tony began pumping his right knee into Junior's face. A knocking, chattering of teeth sound could be heard.

"Oh, Jesus..." muttered King City. He threw his cigarette into the street.

Donny sweated, watching. Each blow to Junior's face was a blow from him; each trickle of blood from Junior's mouth was smeared with another thrash from him.

Tony stopped kneeing, and started throwing punches with both arms. He no longer needed to hold down Junior by the hair or arms.

Connected to a thin, veiny neck, and supported by the grey concrete, Junior's head dangled. It swayed with each punch. Bruises puffed his lips. His mouth was spit and blood.

Tears crept in Tony's mad eyes as a pounding head and a racing heart beat out hypnotic orders.

Suddenly, everything stopped. A boy knelt on a boy. Both were soundless; both were hurt. Tony looked down solemnly at Junior. His eyes were slits. Words came — slowly.

"Junior...I'm off...I'm gonna, gonna get off ya," Tony stuttered.

Junior lifted a feeble arm and swung at Tony's face, nipping his chin. He began to rattle his body, kicking his feet.

Tony spilled a loud slap across Junior's already reddened face, and in the same movement, swung back and delivered a backhand. Junior lay still.

A deep, tired voice ordered: "Now listen!...Junior! You want some more?" Tony pressed his fist to Junior's eyebrow.

"Don't say a word!"

Junior looked into Tony's eyes, blinking with pain.

"Now I'm gonna get off you. When I get up, I don't want you to say anything — nothing! Don't tell me a thing. I don't want to hear your voice. Don't ever talk to me about the fight. Never! Don't ever talk to me about fightin'! I don't want to hear your voice!" Tony stared into Junior's eyes, waiting.

"I can stay on you all day if I want. Allright!"

Junior nodded, mutely. Tony got up. He rubbed his knuckles which were scraped and raw. His eyes saw a blurred image of a boy slowly standing — and nothing else.

Without sound, as if night had fallen and the world was turned off, Junior walked away.

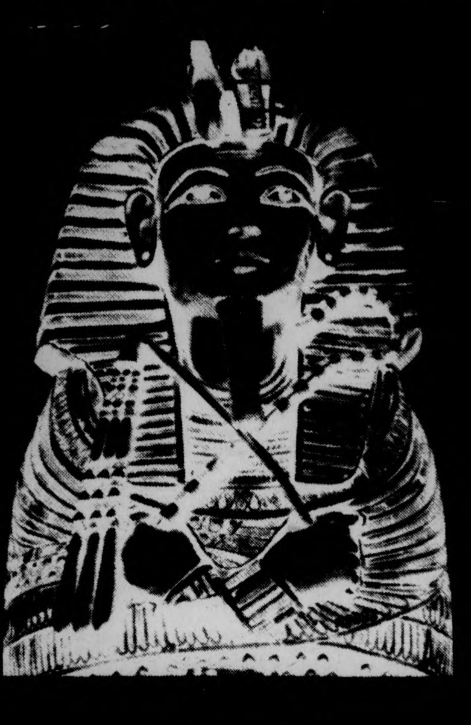
TUTANKHAMUN LIVE AT THE MET



By E. Patrick McQuaid

King Tut is back in the news today. The 18-year old boy pharoah who tried to take it with him was buried under Egyptian sands for some 3,000 years until 1922 when British archeologist Howard Carter first brought Tutankhamun and his treasures to light. The world has not yet caught its breath; the priceless "wonderful things" as Carter blurted out upon their discovery, stand unparalleled in the world of art.

If you find Cairo a bit too dusty, or you happened not to be in Moscow in 1974 or London in '72, you have until April 15, 1979 to view these magnificent treasures currently on tour through six American museums. The exhibition of 55 of the most precious artifacts, in honour of the 55th anniversary of their unearthing, opened in Washington DC's National Gallery of Art last year and was visited by over 235,000 people by February of this year alone. It is now at the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago and will remain there until August 15 and will open a month later in New Orleans. Los Angeles and then Seattle will host the display and finally the Metropolitan Museum of Art in nearby New York City will wind up the tour starting on December 15, 1978 and running through April 15, 1979. You have two years to prepare yourself for this fabulous event, 3,000 years in the making, and the Metropolitan with both Random House and Alfred A. Knopf publishers have made it easy and enjoyable, expensive and modest.

Tutankhamun: His Tomb and Its Treasures edited by Katharine Stoddert Gilbert and designed by Alvin Grossman is the Alfred A. Knopf publishers' lavish contribution on the occasion of the exhibit. It is the most expensive and most beautifully arranged volume of the lot. Each of the 55 display pieces is given considerable attention by writer I. E. S. Edwards, the former Keeper of Egyptian Antiquities at the British Museum, and photographed in colour by Lee Boltin in Cairo shortly before the exhibit left for this country. Accompanying the history of the actual expedition are 103 black-and-white photos taken by Harry Burton who rushed away from another expedition just beyond the Valley of the Kings in 1922 to chronicle the momentous event as well as assist Carter in photo-cataloguing several of the artifacts. Burton was working for the Metropolitan Museum's Egyptian Department at the time. His photographs are property of the Metropolitan but are on loan to the other five museums as part of the overall exhibition. With the touring of the Tutankhamun treasures an important step has been taken in inter-museum cooperation, both on a national and international scale. From the first it has been a record of disinterested scientific concern and not museum competition. The Metropolitan did all it could to assist the unaided Carter when he first opened the tomb; for years the Egyptian Organization of Antiquities discussed the possibility of such an exhibit with several American museums; in 1974, while visiting Egypt, former President Nixon opened the way for the gathering with Egyptian President Anwar el-Sadat; and the final clincher was when Gerald Ford signed the Arts and Artifacts Indemnity Act on December 20, 1975 which allowed full insurance on the masterpieces; the Federal Council on the Arts and Humanities granted the indemnity; the National Endowment for the Humanities matched funds from the Robert Wood Johnson, Jr., Charitable Trust and, of course, the Exxon Corporation.

Thick glossy pages, large, clean typeface, this book is an extremely impressive, well-polished package. At nearly an ounce of gold, it is well worth its weight.

—$7.95—

A considerable step down in price is the 176 page, large format paperback TREASURES OF TUTANKHAMUN from Ballantine (Random House) Books.

The major differences between the two publications lay in the production costs and general layout. The Ballantine edition contains 64 colour plates spreading out in each direction from the centerfold whereas the Knopf volume has gone all out with colour on nearly every page.

The TREASURES OF TUTANKHAMUN is more of a catalog of the exhibit also compiled by I. E. S. Edwards; it does not attempt to reproduce the exhibition in all its splendor as the TUTANKHAMUN: HIS TOMB AND ITS TREASURES does, and quite successfully.

In addition to the definitive catalog which examines each of the 55 displays in close detail there is also an article by New York Times reporter Tom Buckley on "The Discovery of Tutankhamun's Tomb" and an essay entitled "Tutankhamun and His World" by Edward F. Wente, Professor of Egyptology at the Oriental Institute, University of Chicago, which looks at the boy-pharoah in a historical perspective.

Basically we have two approaches to the exhibit: the luxury and the economy catalog. Both books are written by Edwards and photographed in colour by Boltin and black-and-white by Burton.

"I'm not sure why anyone would want to own them," Dr. David Van Blerkom, UMass professor of Physics and Astronomy tells us. Van Blerkom teaches a course in hieroglyphics every spring through the Honours Department. "They're not reference books, they're coffee table books that you don't look at more than a few times. I suppose if you're absolutely infatuated by King Tut and you don't have a modest budget...they're elaborately produced but these books as well as many other excellent volumes on Egypt can be seen or borrowed from our own library."

The two Tut books, according to Van Blerkom, are not for the serious student of Egyptology though they are enjoyable to those both familiar and unfamiliar with the subject matter. "It's such spectacular stuff," he commented, "it would be very hard to make a dull book with that material."

A number of books by E. A. Wallace Budge, an early 19th century Egyptologist, have been re-released by Dover Books recently and provide an entertaining as well as scholarly look into ancient Egyptian life, folklore, and language. A number of them contain line drawn hieroglyphics with modern transliterations and textual translations written below each character.

—$1.25—

You may want to check the March edition of National Geographic magazine which sells on the newstands for a dollar and a quarter. Back issues are often held for sale or can also be found in the library.

Two articles on Egypt, both ancient and modern, are its lead feature. Some dazzling photographs of the Tut treasures and other Egyptian artifacts and temples provide some interesting insight into Egypt's past, present and future.

As December 15, 1978 draws nearer and the exhibition closer to New York, the number of publications on King Tut will most likely increase. A novel by Allen Drury, RETURN TO THEBES (Doubleday & Co., $8.95, illustrated 272 pps hardcover) has attempted to recreate the mood of the Nile, circa 1362-69 BC

It only seems a matter of time (he's waited 3,000 years) before young Tutankhamun finds his gilded profile on the American postage stamp or steals the cover of Time Magazine.

ANNIE HALL
Written by Woody Allen and Marshall Brickman
Directed by Woody Allen
Starring Woody Allen and Diane Keaton

By Mark Leccese

Each of Woody Allen's previous movies have been, to some degree, as is his writing, satires of the ways other people look at life; that is, satires of movies and books. Take The Money And Run was a satire on gangster documentaries as much as it was a satire of crime. Sleeper satirized futuristic movies, Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Sex was a satire on several kinds of film in addition to being a direct satire of a best-seller, and Love and Death, his most intelligent film before Annie Hall, was a brilliant satire of Swedish movies and Russian literature.

Annie Hall cannot be called a satire. It is a story of a relationship, sometimes funny, sometimes sad, but always very real. The movie is so much more than what we have ever seen before from Woody Allen. It's much more than a comedy or a satire. It may be silly or funny, but it is silly or funny. The way life is silly or funny.

Annie Hall is Woody Allen all the way. It was written, directed and starred in by him, and this is very important to the final product. Chevy Chase, in a New York Times interview, talking about how crucial it is for an artist to have total control said, "Woody Allen has learned this. What he thought of going in is what you see coming out."

What comes out in Annie Hall is wonderful. Even the story is Woody Allen; it is about a neurotic stand-up comedian and his love for a singer-actress, Annie Hall. The movie closely parallels the relationship between Woody Allen and Diane Keaton, his co-star, but this is superflous.

No other American film maker could have handled this subject so simply, so touchingly and so wittily. With this film, one critic went so far as to call Woody Allen the American Bergman.

Annie Hall is full of twists and surprises, comic and otherwise. The camera work is very good, showing that Allen has learned from the film masters he satirized. The acting is excellent. Keaton and Allen are two of the best comic actors in recent memory and in this film they show what fine "serious" actors they are as well.

Woody Allen succeeds with Annie Hall on every level he tries; the comic, the sensative, the crazy, and, most importantly, it succeeds as a film. It is very entertaining throughout, and there are no slightly tedious sections where he is setting up for a joke, as in Take The Money And Run or Bananas.

Allen has made the transition from comic to writer to film maker, and with Annie Hall he arrives in the circle, simultaneously, of the best American directors, actors and screenwriters. With this much talent, he is probably in a class by himself, and Annie Hall is the best American film since Nashville.

Art Provoking Thought

RICHARD FLEISCHNER
University Gallery through May 8

By Lesley Lawrence

An exhibition by a thought-provoking artist, Richard Fleischner, is currently on display at the University Gallery.

Pieces in the show range from small scale pewter and bronze casts to impressive large scale environmental sculptures. The artist mainly concerns himself with space and light and the physical and emotional effects which these elements evoke in an individual.

The nude fiberglass figures in this exhibit exemplify the relationship of figures in space. These sculptures, Standing Figure and Wall and Seated Figure (1971), are both startling and impressive in the realistic depiction of the female nude. The figures are attached to the plaster medium from which they have been created and are constructed as a separate unit in space.

Fleischner's Wood Interior, which existed for only three weeks as a temporary installation for the exhibition Art Park in New York, is represented in this exhibition at the Univ. Gallery by several photographs.

This project dealt with the effects of a controlled environment created by natural illumination. It was made entirely of wood and consisted of a series of four adjoining corridors. Each corridor became progressively darker as the artist selectively controlled the amount of light which was allowed to filter in. This was possible as light entered from one or two sources.

Other notable works done on a smaller scale are Fleishner's pewter and bronze casts. The ideas behind these works are derived from the handball courts of his home town, the Bronx, New York. Several of these works employ miniature walls not unlike those found in an outside handball court. These plaques utilize "ready mades," ranging from a Dixie cup to model railroad figures.

Fleischner also created a series of lead drawings that follow a logical, systematic manner, like the pages of a notebook. Lead was selected as the medium as it was pleasing to the artist's touch, thus enhancing hand and finger expression.

Formerly an assistant professor at Brown University, Fleischner has travelled extensively in Egypt and Europe. This experience has left a significant impression on the artist, which becomes apparent through the use of pyramid and triangular forms in some of his many small scale cast pewter and bronze sculptures.

While at the Gallery, one should also give special consideration to several other large-scale environmental sculpture pieces for which Fleischner is becoming increasingly well recognized. Included as part of this collection are Fleischner's Diner (1968), Hay Interior (1971), Sod Maze (1974), and Sited Works (1976). Since these projects are large scale endeavors, one can only view them in his collection as photographs and prints.

Fleischner has proposed a project for the University of Mass. entitled Chain Link Maze. This proposal, when completed, would be situated near Stadium Drive, to the south of Mass. Ave. It would be made of white, vinyl coated chain link, measuring 52 sq. feet by 8 feet high. Unlike his other mazes, Chain Link Maze would be unicursal, challenging an individual to make several choices to find a way out. As of now, funding for this project is insufficient.

Hugh M. Davies, director of the University Gallery, recognizes Fleischner as a major environmental sculptor and has this to say about the artist, and the exhibit on display:

"This current exhibition affords the opportunity to appraise the breadth of his achievement over the past ten years. The exhibition reveals the diversity of his work, ranging as it does from hand-sized cast sculpture to environmental projects, from life-size figurative pieces to abstract embossings.

"Yet despite such diversity, Fleischner's oeuvre has unfolded with a consistent logic and intriguing continuity," added Davies.

A review can do little more than spark one's curiosity. Fleischner's genius and innovative approach cannot be captured by words; it must be seen first-hand to be fully appreciated. Gallery hours are Tues. 11:30 - 8:00, Wed. and Fri. 11:30 - 4:30, and Sat. and Sun. 2:00 - 5:00. Admission is free.

THEATRE /

C'MON BACK TO HEAVENLY HOUSE
by Ed Bullins
at Kirby Theatre, Amherst College

By James F.B. Sawyer

C'Mon Back to Heavenly House by Amherst College's present Mellon Drama Professor, Ed Bullins, is currently being produced in its premier at the Kirby Theatre on the Amherst College campus.

A series of short scenes communicating the one-way-street type of morals of the contemporary human condition, the play as a whole carries no message, no story, no point.

Bullins asks the audience to sit and watch his shallow characterizations perform elementary school level antics with a twist of the bawdy. His soliloquies attempt to drive home a point by bludgeoning the audience with repetitions of lines, robbing them of any comic impact or serious import.

At points, though, laughter can force itself to the surface in a few scattered lines given to even more scattered characters. Due to the knee-depth the characters are given in the script, the good lines could even have been uttered by a lamppost and retained their humor.

As far as social statement is concerned, as much could have been accomplished in one sentence as is accomplished in this entire script.

The stage action is nearly upstaged by the splendid lighting and backdrops by Timothy Buchman and Karl Eigsti. Electric-neon lights and a mobile office window shine on a plain black stage, mobile props and stage-splitting spotlights. This richness in set design only points up the poverty in the characterizations which simply can't compete with it.

For the premier of a play by a playwright with as many credits as Ed Bullins, C'mon Back to Heavenly House is terribly unsatisfying. The characters, the plot, the very logic behind staging this play are all so scanty, that no benefit can be wrung from attending a performance of it.

Ed Bullins can do better. The Amherst Masquers can do better. And you can do something better than seeing C'mon Back to Heavenly House.

THE SHOPPING-BAG LADY

By Ann Whitehead

The Shopping-Bag Lady wouldn't go anywhere without her shopping bag. She never shops. She just goes up and down the street looking into trash cans and collecting junk. The children tease her and say, "What valuable things did you get today?" She doesn't seem to mind though. One day the children were waiting for her to pass by but she doesn't come. They start to look for her but they can't find her. Then they see a shop that's sign said 'The Valuable Antique Shop' and people had their own shopping bags carrying the valuable things.

I think this book is very good. It sort of tells what things you can do with old things.

No one likes Jason Bear because he acts like a big shot. He gives himself a star on his forehead whenever he does something terrific. He gets into a lot of trouble. At the end, he finds someone to appreciate him.

I thought it was a good book, especially the parts where Jason puts stars on his forehead. A lot of my friends would like to own this book, I am sure.

UNIVERSITY DANCERS AND CONCERT DANCE GROUP
Bowker Auditorium
April 29

By Robin Costello

One of the most impressive and enjoyable elements of the University Dance concert II on Friday night was the diversity and originality of each individual dance. Out of thirteen pieces, five were choreographed by the dance faculty and the others were done by members ot the University Dancers and the Concert Dance Group.

The music ranged from a light, classical Chopin piece to a jazz number composed by Duke Ellington and Count Bosie. The themes were equally as varied; a few serious pieces combined with humorous and even theatrical performances had no trouble captivating the full attention of all who attended.

"Driftwood on her Shores", a short piece choreographed by Susan McDevitt Morrall and Amy J. Swanson, began the program with a light and carefree tempo. Five dancers, dressed in bright pink and green costumes, emphasized arm movement to create a flowing, relaxing atmosphere. This mood was further developed by the stage setting, which used shades of blue and green lighting projected on a screen in the background.

"Bulves Fum Schtetl", a Bartok piece, choreographed by Robin MacRostie, recreated a matchmaking scene, similar to those one may have seen in "Fiddler on the Roof". The three dancers, prompted by a large kerchief, which they each took a corner of and held over their heads, performed several traditional folk dance steps. Here the "art of facial expression" was an additional part of their success in dramatically and humorously conveying the story.

A clever piece, fittingly named, "Together...-Forever?", choreographed and performed by Peggy Atkinson and Stephen Gibbons amused the audience with it's simple and direct them. Both dancers wore convincing prison attire; black and white striped suits with matching caps. As they pretended to be "breaking out" of jail, a silver chain held their wrists together. Once free of this, they went through a series of individual movements. It wasn't long though, before they both returned to the center of the stage and happily rejoined the chain.

"Rodin's Atelier", choreographed by Richard Jones, was an outstanding human recreation of several pieces of sculpture. One piece of work, "Adam", vividly came to life through an excellent performance by John Kujawski. A picture of each particular sculpture was projected on a screen behind the dancer during their performance. In addition to this, a white sheet was draped over a stand in the right hand corner of the stage to give the effect of an unveiling of the art work.

"Anima Rising", choreographed by Rebecca Renaud, was a very moving piece dedicated in memory of her father, Philip Renaud. The dance was divided into three stages: "Inner Moods"; performed by Donna Nelson and Rebecca Renaud; "Space and Light", done by Wendy Stauss and finally "Trinity", where all three women appeared on stage together. The dancers, all dressed in black, wore long skirts and scarts around their heads. Renaud's theme, though very deep and complex, was sensitively executed and created a very tranquil and peaceful mood.

"Mobiles: Two Into One", was choreographed by John Kujawski, a University dancer, and Marilyn V. Patton, a member of the dance faculty. The overall movement of the piece was restricted to a small area of the stage, where the two together created a variety of original shapes, which clearly showed the strength and perfection of both dancers.

The program ended, as it had the previous week, with Richard Jone's piece, "Tears of Joy", written by the master of Jazz themselves-Duke Ellington and Count Basie. The piece was performed by Linda Buckley, Richard Jones, Donna Potter, Kathleen Rugo and William Soleau, and was an exceptionally fine indication of true jazz movement.

For many students, this concert will be their last performance at the University. "The dance faculty and students want to express their thanks to those seniors who will be graduating in 1977. Their contributions to dance at the University will long be remembered. We wish them peace of mind, health, fulfillment of their dreams, courage to persevere, and love and laughter to fill their hearts."

Thanks and Goodluck; Daniel Albert, Nina Anderson, Linda Buckley, Brenda Charron, Margaret Chase, Ellen Inkellis, Kathleen Kealey, Genevieve Nass, Donna Nelson, Denise Pietrocatella, Donna Potter, Rebecca Renaud, William Soleau, Amy J. Swanson, Andrew Stoessel, Michelle Taylor, and Deborah Waldron.

BRYAN FERRY
In Your Mind
(Atlantic)

Bryan Ferry has got himself into one fine pickle these days; his solo career threatens to eclipse Roxy Music's popularity, while this same solo career appears to be much to do about nothing. In Your Mind is his fourth album and differs from all others in that Ferry has composed all the material.

Sporting a cast that's tried, true and hot, In Your Mind is a substantial offering. If Let's Stick Together was the ultimate refinement of Ferry's remake and remodel efforts, In Your Mind is good enough to forsake the same and strike out on his own, Roxy or no Roxy. Ferry's cool and detached delivery meshes perfectly with his impossibly wonderous studio band — one that includes three Roxy Music people, John Wetton, Mel Collins and Chris Spedding. A talented bunch too, but Ferry knows how to deploy such a star-studded cast. This is especially true of "Party Doll", "Tokyo Joe" and "All Night Operator".

In Your Mind is a perfectly acceptable piece of vinyl. Ferry, alas, is no fool and knows just what he's doing. Yet despite the talent Bryan Ferry is, he remains something less than when he fronted Roxy Music. The punch just isn't as deadly.

Let It Flow
(Columbia)

Let It Flow is as apt a name as any for this new Dave Mason album. To be sure, the music does definitely flow — right in one ear and out the other. Mason has become too mellow and too static in his musical approach. He apparently is afraid to rock out and turn himself loose on his guitar as he did in his Traffic and post-Traffic glory days for awhile. It sounds as if he's been taking Eric Clapton "Am I Alive Or Dead?" pills. Let It Flow suffers from the blandness as many of today's recordings; too much puff and not enough substance. The hokey horns and orchestrations are totally unwarranted; they serve little purpose.

Only three cuts here rate above mediocre. They are "Let It Go, Let It Flow," "You Just Have To Wait Now," and "Mystic Traveler." The remaining seven? Forget them. For that matter, you might as well forget this album. It's probably Mason's all-time low. Gradewise, it limps home with a "as useful as a square basketball" D.

DEAF SCHOOL
2nd Honeymoon — Don't Stop The World
(Warners)

Russ Mael of the Sparks once said that "talent is an asset, everybody has it"; which means obvious mutants like Deaf School are allowed to have record contracts and such devilishly twisted excellence is allowed to reach our ears. Like Split Enz, Deaf School is something strange and special. You know something's funny when big bucks Warner Brothers sees fit to release both their albums together for the first time in the States.

Describe these loonies? Well one of them goes by the handle of Cliff Hanger — he was also in Portsmith Symphonia. One Point. They're all pretty much Art School dropouts. Two Points. They're a cross be-ween Roxy Music, Bonzo Dog Band and an English Orchestra Luna. Score Ten Points. And oh yes, a little Dan Hicks & His Hot Licks; add five more.

There's eight of them in all — each makes some unique and earfully pleasing noise.

Of the two disks, 2nd Honeymoon is the most accessible. And knowing these clowns, it comes as no surprise that their first recorded song is titled "What A Way To End It All". See what I mean! Make a mental note — an incredible debut at an incredible price.

MIKE AULDRIDGE
Dobro Music
(Flying Fish)

Of the essential elements of successful country music, simplicity is foremost. Still, there are a lot of complex variables that combine to create the sharp precision of the music that sounds so clear and simple. Bluegrass and country music aren't simple because they're easy to play. As with other styles, it is a matter of the tastefulness of the musicians involved: what you put in and what you leave out are what counts.

Mike Auldridge is one of those musicians whose tastefulness graces every composition he touches. When he plays, he surrounds himself with musicians of the same calibre, and the results are documented on records like his new effort for Flying Fish. The record features the rich, fluid tones of Mike's dobro, augmented by the virtuoso playing of Vassar Clements, banjoist Vic Jordon, and guitarists Dick Feller and David Bromberg.

Auldridge avoids come of the typical drawbacks of country instrumental records by varying moods and alternating the emphasis between the guitars, banjo, fiddles and dobro. But I think I like this album most for the surprises it offers. Herein lie the first recorded bluegrass versions of "Last Train To Clarksville" and "California Dreamin'." The initial effect is weird, especially for unknowing friends, but you'll marvel at the creative arrangements. Honestly can't say what these songs are doing here, except that Mike Auldridge probably figured that he and his gang were good enough to do 'em right. The proof that they are runs throughout this album.

HERBIE HANCOCK
V.S.O.P.
(Columbia)

The music on this two-record set, recorded live at the Newport in New York Jazz Festival in June 1976, is a document of the three phases of Herbie Hancock's career, and a tribute to the man who inspired that career, Miles Davis.

Mr. Hancock began his career playing true 'jazz' and so too does he begin this album. After a pleasant opening piano solo, he is joined on-stage by jazz luminaries Tony Williams on drums, Freddie Hubbard on trumpet, tenor man Wayne Shorter and Ron Carter on acoustic bass. The opening cut, Hancock's 'Maiden Voyage', is merely a backdrop for solos, Mr. Shorter leading off enthusiastically and the others following suit. The five men play together extraordinarily well for a unit that had not played as a group in years. They follow with Shorter's 'Nefertiti' and continue the straight ahead jazz, "walking bass, a swining drum beat", that encompasses the first two sides.

For side three Mr. Hancock is joined by his old sextet (1969-73). They play a loose crossover music that was revolutionary but is often stifling and dull. It has neither the intense soloing of the previous sides nor the obvious care for structure.

On side four we have made the complete transition and now listen to Mr. Hancock's present assembly of funkified, synthesized beat and bleat. The stand-up bass gives way to electric and two guitarists — Ray Parker Jr. and Wah Wah Watson — take center stage. Fortunately for both live audience and record listener, these boys came to play and they can 'get down' with the best.

This album gives the listener to compare and contrast the three phases of Herbie Hancock and, as Columbia acknowledges by granting two sides to the jazz, there is no doubt which phase is the best.

SOUTHSIDE JOHNNY AND THE ASBURY JUKES
This Time It's For Real (Epic)

Every so often there appears on the music scene a first album of such brilliance as to cause all following albums to be compared rather than critiqued. Southside Johnny's first effort, I Don't Want To Go Home, was such an album and, happily, This Time It's For Real not only makes it on its own, but lives up to its predecessor as well.

Southside's music is 60's, white rhythm & blues with a few 50's riffs and choruses, and the tightest horn section this side of Tower of Power. Inspired by Bruce Springsteen, who co-wrote 3 of this LP's 10 tunes, and producer, guitarist, writer Miami Steve Van Zandt (Springsteen's regular guitarist), these boys rode in from Asbury Park, New Jersey on Springsteen's coat-tail and have since eclipsed the master, at least until his next album.

The songs are all smooth and snappy, nice hooks throughout (except for one misplaced, semi-humorous disaster, "Check Mr. Popeye"). Guest-star oldsters — The Coasters, The Drifters and The Five Satins — sit in for one song each and demonstrate just how choruses should be sung. "Little Girl So Fine" with The Drifters is the sweetest thing since "Spanish Rose In Harlem," and The Five Satins oohh and aahh agelessly on "First Night."

Southside and the boys must have remembered Dirty Harry saying "a man's got to know his limitations." The musicianship is always fine; no one tries to stretch out too far. Southside's harmonica shines on 'I Ain't Got The Fever No More," the sequel to Springsteen's "Fever" from the first album. Van Zandts guitar work is always tight and brief.

This Time It's For Real has been, and will continue to be knocked by critics for its references and riffs from the previous album. I like to believe these are merely clever touches, put in because they fit and not because they had nothing better.

One thing is certain. As anyone who saw them at the S.U.B. concert can attest, Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes is one of the best live bands playing, and there isn't a white man alive who can sing rhythm & blues like Southside. By some miracle they'll be playing at the Spring Concert. Don't miss 'em.

—Greg Tarlin

RETURN TO FOREVER
Music magic
(Columbia)

The new edition of Return to Forever features some new members and a radical shift in musical direction. Gone are Al DiMeola Lenny White, and gone with them is the heavily electrified, often rock-based style of Romantic Warrior and No Mystery. In their place is a five-piece horn section (including Joe Farrell on sax) and the emergency of Stanley Clarke as a stronger force than ever within the group. In addition to his usual roles as bassist and composer, he appears here as co-producer and occasional vocalist.

Despite the changes in personnel (and the absence of any lead guitar), the creativity and virtuosity of Return to Forever remains intact. One of the most welcome additions to the band is Gayle Moran, whose vocals are one of the most immediately attractive features of each song and prepare the listener for the instrumental excursions which follow. As usual, Chick Corea is excellent, whether he is providing a flashy solo on the Moog or a grand, symphonic background on the acoustic piano.

In the liner notes to this album, Chick Corea states that "our largest reward is your pleasure in listening." An abundance of reward is due to Chick and Return to Forever.

DEXTER
GORDON

Homecoming
(Live At The Village Vanguard)
(Columbia)

Dexter Gordon left the U.S. in 1962 and settled in Copenhagen, Denmark where he found life more peaceful and the fans more enthusiastic about his music. In 1976 he came back to the U.S. for the first time and discovered that his timing couldn't have been better, what with the long shadow of John Coltrane, the continuing rut of Sonny Rollins and an infrequently inspired Stan Getz. Dexter Gordon filled something of a void for followers of Mainstream or Neo-bebop Jazz and consequently his "homecoming" has been marked by fervent acclamation and standing room only crowds. This double album, recorded live at the fame Village Vanguard with the Woody Shaw-Louis Hayes group (minus saxophonist Rene McLean) is a fitting testament to the continuing vitality of Jazz and the greatness of Dexter Gordon.

Like the late Coleman Hawkins, Dexter Gordon has continued to grow as a musician from those days when he was the tenor saxophonist to the present when he has assimilated in his own way the influences of his followers, Sonny Rollins and John Coltrane.

Dexter Gordon and Gene Ammons were the first important tenor saxophonists to reflect in their playing the influences of Charlie Parker (mainly an alto player) and Lester Young. Gordon was a key soloist of the important Billy Eckstine Orchestra of 1944-46 which was the first big band to assimilate bebop and has since then, recorded as a leader. His Panther recording in the late sixties received a great deal of critical acclaim. Many critics have said that this double album is his best recording, but whether or not this is true, one thing is clear: Homecoming is a superb album!

As Robert Palmer explains in his excellent liner notes, this recording was made after the group had played together for some time in rehearsal and live. Homecoming is taken from the group's December 11, 12, 1976 gigs. Compositions featured are "Fenja" and "Backstairs" by Dexter Gordon, "Little Red's Fantasy" and "In Case You Haven't Heard" by Woody Shaw, "Let's Get Down" by Ronnie Matthews, the classic "It's You or no One", "Gingerbread Buy" by Jimmy Heath and Monk's standard, "Round Midnight".

The rhythm section demonstrates a consistently fine harmonic sense with unusualy effective piano coming from Ronnie Mathews, strong lines by bassist Stafford James and the fluid, pulsing drumming of Louis Hayes. Hayes and Shaw on trumpet and fluegelhorn trade solos on a number of compositions to good effect. Shaw, with his thinner toned playing and consistently fine solos, provides a nice contrast to Gordon's full tone.

Mr. Gordon utilizes relatively few changes in accent or tempo, relying on superb use of tone and melodic variation. His improvisations are also characterized by their logical, organic nature: every phrase has its place. There is a constrained urgency to all of Mr. Gordon's playing that is brought out to particularly good effect on "Fenja" and "Round Midnight" which are, I think, among the greatest tenor saxophone improvisations. I don't find Mathews's piano solos as good as Palmer's, though they contribute with their rhythmic lift and counterpointed chording. This is music which radiates honesty and pride. A must for jazz fans. (A+)

JESSIE COLIN YOUNG Love On The Wing
(Warner Bros.)

Jesse Colin Young's new album, which he co-mixed and co-produced, features seven of his songs, a version of Hank Williams' "Hey Good Lookin," and two other songs, including the title song, "Love On The Wing" by Blue Hazelburst. Young, as always, sings pretty well and within his superficial perspective writes excellent lyrics.

The music, though, is stale. "Love On The Wing" and "Workin" are very good songs but after that, the quality drops off. Young's version of "Hey Good Lookin" is enjoyable but the arrangement is clumsy. The other songs, while not bad, are eminently forgettable. Only recommended for Jessie Colin Young stalwarts. (BC)

BRECKER BROTHERS

Don't Stop The Music
(Arista)

After living with this album for more than a week, and after numerous sessions, I shall now pose the ultimate question. Why are people, with such proven talent and prowess as the Brecker Brothers, continuing to produce such unsophisticated formula funk (a euphemism for disco)?

The Brecker Brothers past, as sidemen and studio musicians for such artists as Billy Cobham, Hubert Laws, Larry Coryell, David Sanbourn, and Dreams, has proven that they are amongst the finest in their field, (Michael Brecker as a tenor sax player, and Randy Brecker as a trumpet player) but does this fine reputation as versatile jazz men with a studio discography that could fill up this entire page mean that they are turning out good jazz on their own albums? I say, "no way." If it's a good "partyn' dance" record that you're looking for, this album is filled with the back-beat, funky alembic bass lines (Stanley Clarke style) and disco lyrics that you're just waiting to play for your guests. But for those of you who correlate the Brecker name with creative jazz, please look somewhere else. This album along with their second album, Back to Back is their worst yet. If you are really itching to try out a Brecker Brothers album, I would suggest their first one, entitled simply The Brecker Brothers. That one shows a bit more creativity and has the least amount of vocals, which says something in itself.

Although three-fourths of this album is the mechanized funk that causes people to ask whether or not the album is skipping, there are some bright musical moments that almost save it.

Honorable mention goes to Michael Brecker's composition "Funk Sea Funk Dew," which although it has a disuading title, has some very persuading tenor sax work by its composer. And to brother Randy for his piece entitled, "Petals" which is the only non-funk, ballad-like tune on the album, which includes its composer playing some very promising trumpet and fluegelhorn. I say promising because maybe one day Randy and Michael will pool their talents and create the jazz that we have seen hints of on their three albums. But for now, and only fitting, since the end of the semester is upon us; we'll give you a 3.5 as a dance album; and sorry guys, but as a jazz album we're going to have to put you on academic probation.

FINDING OUR FATHERS
A Guidebook to Jewish Genealogy
By Dan Rottenberg
Random House
401 pgs. — $12.95

Ancestor hunting, once considered by many to be a hobby reserved for experts and for little old ladies in dusty libraries, has recently become the newest American sport. Everyone is looking for their roots and dozens of "how-to" books have appeared on the market, but none of them offer much help for the American Jew.

Until now.

Dan Rottenberg's Finding Our Fathers is a goldmine of information and sources for any person of Jewish descent who had given up hope of tracing their family tree extensively. For most American Jews, consulting early American war records or European coats of arms is a useless venture. Rottenberg provides a step by step outline of where to search and what to do, especially for those Jews whose relatives arrived in America during the last century.

Perhaps even more exciting than the step by step guide in Finding Our Fathers is Rottenberg's listing of over 8,000 Jewish names and their origins, from Aaron to Zydowsky.

Finding Our Fathers is the only book of its kind with such an extensive store of information and sources. It includes extensive bibliographies and addresses to write to for more information.

I read this book in one evening, and now I'm ready to sit down at my typewriter to try and contact some sources of information about my own family. I never had the slightest notion of how to go about it until I read Finding Our Fathers. It's exciting to think that, with a little luck and a lot of diligence, I might be able to trace my ancestors back to some medieval village in Eastern Europe.

It is not an easy task, Rottenberg warns us, but it is also not impossible to do. Finding Our Fathers is a very reassuring book, and I am positive that any Jewish person will find most useful and most fascinating.

I consider it a bargain even at its price of $12.95. It, and any other book reviewed in Below the Salt is available through the University Store.

Now thirty years old, the Atlantic recording star'srepertoiremixes jazz, blues, rock, gospel, and country. Analyzing her compositions, she notes, "My songs aren't meant to be persuasive. Some are autobiographical, some are ways of leaving the body behind and becoming somebody else." Melanie intends to appear onstage at noon.

Various group members have seen service with such musical superstars as Dizzy Gillespie, Louis Armstrong, Tito Puente, Quincy Jones, Larry Young, and Tito Rodriguez. This is a band which concentrates heavily on music in the style of Salsa and Latin jazz. According to plan, Conjunto Libre is scheduled to open up the concert at 10:30 a.m.

That's how the day's groups stack up. Everyone who's anyone will be there. Will you? You'd better be. After all, just keep in mind that music is something to sing about and there'll be lots of it this Saturday at the stadium. See ya'll there.

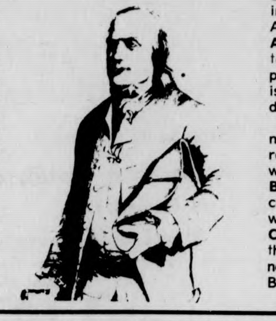
POOR RICHARD'S ALMANACKS
By Benjamin Franklin
Illustrated by Norman Rockwell
Ballantine
300 pgs. $6.95



I'm glad that the editors at Ballantine Books waited until after the Bicentennial year to publish this handsome edition of Ben Franklin's Poor Richard's, or else it might have been ignored by many as just another part of the flood of Bicentennial kitsch.

It really is "classic Americana" with the complete text of 25 years of Poor Richard's witticisms and advice, and the full color illustrations by one of the nation's favorite artist-illustrators. This Ballantine edition also has an introduction by Van Wyck Brooks. All in all, Poor Richard's Almanacks makes a nice addition to anybody's bookshelf. A paperbound large format edition, it is affordably priced at under seven dollars.

Poor Richard's will provide many hours of amusement and reading pleasure. Take it from us, we know! Back in the days before Below the Salt was given its curious name (1973 - '74), the weekly supplement to the Collegian called itself none other than Poor Richard's, though it never did quite manage to match Ben Franklin's wit.

JOHN CALE Guts
(Island)

In 1976, John Cale's Helen Of Troy was released, in Europe only, to rave reviews. After a long and baited wait, copies began to filter over here. I got mine in July and couldn't quite figure what all the excitement was about. It was a good record, but not a great one.

I eventually discovered that "Leaving It Up To You," allegedly a great rocking screamer in the Calesian tradition, had been censored from most copies of the album because of some reference to Sharon Tate. In its place was some sappy ballad named "Choral Moon".

In 1977 Island has finally seen fit to release "Leaving It Up To You" as a track on Guts, Cale's greatest hits collection. Although it is the great rocker it was cracked up to be, and probably would have made Helen Of Troy the great album, that it wasn't, I cannot see anything in its lyrics sufficient to have had it banned. But it comes included for us now as a welcome surprise. Also included on Guts is "Mary Lou", yet another great unreleased pounder.

The rest of the album is composed of impeccably-selected numbers off Slow Dazzle, Fear and Helen of Troy. But in the eternal wisdom of including these two previously unheard-of cuts, Island has given Cale fans yet another must-have. (A)

Robbie Gordon ("The Sandwich Man's Daughter"), and Robert Cohen ("A Few Pianos"). A complete listing of poets and times of readings will be available at the gates of the festival.

The performances cover many different art forms and include children's performers such as The Pocket Mime Theatre, The Elfin (puppet) Theatre, The Enchanted Circle, Storylady Theatre, Tattletales, Roger the Jester, Ha Ha Puppet Theatre, and the Clown Show of Henry Brown. In music there will be classical samples from Juan de la Sierra on Flamenco Guitar and the New England Arts Trio; folk music will be represented by Linda Worster, Tex La Mountain, Andy May and Texas Tabby Crabb, Geoff Bartley, Ruthanna, Skinny Bob, and the Howling Jacob Review; bluegrass music will be showcased by the Rattle Hill Ramblers, Raintree, the Possum Pickers String Band, and Foxfire and Jazz will be provided by Trillium, the L.A. Schneider Trio, Do'a, the Bricker Band, and Rosenshontz. There will also be performances by adult theatre groups such as Boston's Lunchtime Theatre, and the New England Repertory Theatre, Mime by Suzanne Fox, Dance by Middle Eastern Dance, and the M. J. T. Movement Theatre and some special category performances from Drumsong, a one man percussion experience, and the Glouster Hornpipe and Clog Society.

On Sunday Dr. Clayton Thomas, the "high-flying doctor from Dingley Dell" in Palmer, will attempt an ascension in his 77,000 cubic foot hot-air baloon "Ode To Joy." There will also be an exhibition featuring the baloonists from the Baloon School of Massachusetts, Inc.

The children's area has been coordinated this year by Maryann Curley, a student from Mt. Holyoke College, and Carolyn Mazel from Amherst. Both women have been working with the Arts Extension staff, artists and recreation personnel to set up an area which will be fun, safe and educational.

Among the artists on hand will be Ann Wolpert, a potter from Amherst who has given several children's workshops. Harlane Radler, who will perform with her almost human hand puppets. Children's theatre will be represented by Shakespeare and Co., and cartoonist Brian Turner will demonstrate and teach.

A great number of people have gone into making the Second Annual New England Artist Festival and Showcase possible. "The Valley Advocate has been just great," Lynch tells us. "They've provided the advertising space and helped out a lot with the promoting of the festival."

This week the Valley Advocate has published an attractive and informative special pull-out guide to all of the festivals events. They may be obtained at several locations throughout the area and on campus free of charge.

The fairgrounds are located just after the Cooley-Dickinson Bridge as you enter Northampton from Hadley and are a short walk from Smith College via the Five College Bus. There is also ample parking space for those with their own transportation.

Admission is $1.50 for adults, $1.00 for senior citizens, and fifty cents for children. Lynch tells us that the Arts Extension Service approached the Spring Concert Committee and requested funding for a joint arts project. The AES had hoped to supply buses for students to and from the fair grounds as well as either allowing a reduced rate or even free admission to the festival for students. "They turned it down flat," said Lynch.

The Arts Extension Service also works with the various arts departments on campus such as the Theatre and Music Departments. They helped 80 people from UMass alone get bookings last year.

SPEAK FOR ENGLAND

By Melvyn Bragg
Alfred A. Knopf Publishers
499 pps illustrated $15.00

"Tell it like it is", an over-popular cliche nearly beaten to death these days yet the echo of Orwell's statement is the raison d'etre for a new vitality in journalism and a new market in mass trade books. This latest narrative style, a la Terkel, is to pound the pavement with a tape recorder (in most cases) and transcribe from reel-to-reel, word for word to the finished product in print. Naturally this process can get quite wordy and lends itself to book-length documents of which Speak for England by author-journalist Melvyn Bragg is the most recent success of its kind.

Books of this nature have generally segregated one area of discussion, such as Terkel's Working, and amassed a vast number of spontaneous commentary from a variety of interviews with people ranging from farm or factory workers to executives and professionals. Speak for England is, via interviews with the inhabitants of the English village of Wigton, Cumberland, an oral history of that nation during the 20th century. Although Bragg has not changed any of the quotes, "no lines are switched from one person to another for effect...No lines are added by me..." he somehow, mysteriously maintains a control over the manuscript and the result is an extremely patriotic statement for his country. But, this does not weight heavy against his book. It is very interesting and often times amusing reading provided the reader bear in mind that the author-journalist-chronologist is not the tape recorder with which he has gathered these "facts". A very thick line must be drawn, not necessarily a straight one, however, where Bragg the observer, microphone in hand, leaves off and becomes Bragg the analyst; selecting, arranging, and editing the voices of his people.

GAY AMERICAN HISTORY

By Jonathan Katz
Thomas Y. Crowell Co.
690 pgs. $9.95

HOMOSEXUALS IN HISTORY

By A. L. Rowse
Macmillan Publishing Co.
346 pgs. $12.95

Two books came into the office where I work, and both of the books were about gay people. I immediately said to myself: "I should find a gay person to review these books, since they would know most about the subject and would be able to write the best review." On second thought, though, I decided to bring the books home and read them myself in hopes that I might possibly learn something about a subject which I had ignored much too long.

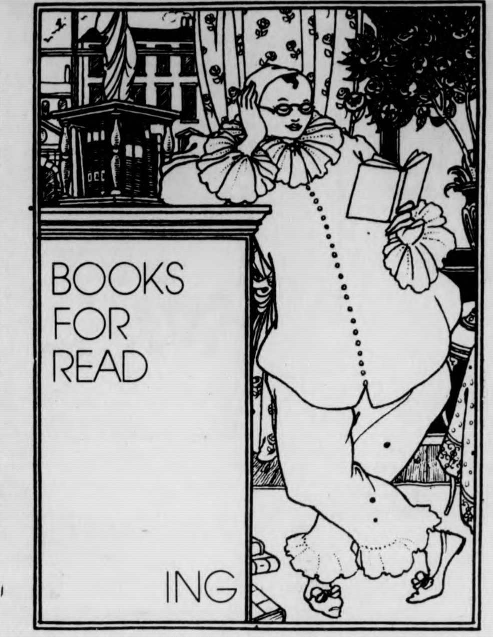
There was never a conscious fear or dislike of gay people on my part, or the opinion that "they're okay, as long as they keep to themselves and leave me alone." Truth of the matter is that I had never given gay people very much thought at all.

During high school, my friends and I never used to talk about the "lezzies" that hung out in the girl's lavatory simply because there were never any "lezzies" to be found there; all of the gay people at school were safely "in the closet" back then. And after almost four years of college I only have a couple of gay friends, who moved away recently.

"Out of sight, out of mind" as the saying goes.

So when Homosexuals in History and Gay American History arrived in the mail I kept them, in an attempt (remembering how I was taught as a child that girls must wear dresses and that boys must not cry) to close that gap in my learning which left out gay people.

These books bring gay people "out of the closet" and into the history books, at last. It is an accomplishment which is long overdue.



Back to high school for a moment. In history class we were all made well aware that George Washington Carver was black, but the teacher never bothered to mention that Walt Whitman was gay, nor was it ever explained to us just why Leonardo da Vinci never married.

A. L. Rowse, eminent Elizabethan historian and Oxford Fellow, not only tells us who in our history book was homosexual, but how that factor may have affected their achievements in his book, Homosexuals in History. It is a scholarly work that merits close scrutiny. Rowse begins with the medieval era and such persons as Erasmus, and progresses chronologically to the twentieth century and such diverse people as T. E. Lawrence ("Lawrence of Arabia") and Japanese novelist Yukio Mishima.

Homosexuals in History ought to become a required text in many historical survey courses, as well as art history and literature courses. My only complaint with this book is that it deals almost exclusively with homosexual men, and contains only a few brief references to Lesbianism. While taking a notable step forward in compiling a work that deals with a neglected subject, namely homosexual men throughout history, Rowse discouragingly leaves out the equally important (and neglected) subject of gay women. We can only hope that another volume may be in the works, one which examines Lesbians in history.

Although it is more of a contemporary American history volume, as opposed to Rowse's broader survey, in 690 pages Gay American History includes just about everyone. References to Lesbianism are specially notated as such in the extensive table of contents of this unique volume.

Jonathan Katz, a member of the Gay Activists Alliance and a founding member of the Gay Academic Union, spent the last few years in full time research for Gay American History and his work shows. He has assembled a huge group of documents and primary source material that is arranged into six chronological sections.

It is Katz's intent to provide an historical context to the concept of homosexuality in history, and Gay American History thus provides fascinating reading for a general (and heterosexual) audience as well as offering a wealth of historical source material for the more specialized researcher.

In addition to the material presented by Katz, there is an extensive section of notes and bibliographies. Gay American History is truly a phenomenal work, and at under ten dollars it is well worth the price.

As Katz writes in his introduction, "The people of the shadows have seen the light; Gay people are coming out..."

I would recommend reading Gay American History and Homosexuals in History to everyone regardless of sexual orientation, but especially to those people who, like myself, never gave much thought to the existence of gay people.

I won't pretend that reading them will make one instantly aware, or erase one's stereo-typed images (conscious or not). That would be about as realistic as expecting that anyone can become instantly well-adjusted by memorizing the text of I'm O.K., You're O.K. It just doesn't happen that way.

But the next time a book like Gay American History or Homosexuals in History comes to the office I'll give it to someone else like me. And maybe, just maybe, they will be a bit more aware after they read it, a tiny bit more sensitive to the people around them.

It's worth a try.

WORLDS OF PAIN: LIFE IN THE WORKING CLASS FAMILY

by Lillian Breslow Rubin
Basic Books, Inc.
268 pgs. $11.95

Worlds of Pain is a stylish study of an unfashionable subject: the white working-class parodied in the media as in "Archie Bunker on television and Joe on film" (p 5) and ignored by journalists and social scientists except in their stereotypical capacity of "white backlashers." (p 4) Rubins's concern is to capture the daily texture of a working-class family's life and to "be true to the spirit of the lives of the people who made this book possible." (p 14) Thus she does not deny the resistance of the white working-class to social change or ascribe to them a more glamorous role a la the Marxist proletariat. But she does reject the assumption that the working class is inherently reactionary or short-sighted. Rather she explores and postulates the economic and psychological imperatives that circumvent the choices working-class people can make. For example, she suggests that the supposedly "authoritarian" relationship between working-class parents and their children is not due to the parent's overly rigid personality but to the combined awareness that a working-class parent's ability to maintain his-her children's respect is precarious and there are more opportunities for a working-class child "to go bad." Similarly, working-class people cannot afford to be tolerant of "bohemian" lifestyles because exposing themselves at all to "such a permission-giving environment might bring their own conflicts and questions about their own lives more readily to the surface. They already have trouble enough keeping these conflicts in check..." (pp 194-95) Simple, even obvious, explanations; all the more compelling for their directness.

As Rubin is mindful of, one cannot evaluate the worth of her insights without knowledge of the manner in which they were acquired. In response perhaps to sociology's image as a fuzzy, somewhat bogus science, some sociologists have come to rely almost exclusively on collecting and interpreting "hard data", that is, statistics. But more sociologists are aware of the abuses and excesses of both these approaches and are striving towards a contemporary mode of social research that interates theory and practice without slighting either. Worlds of Pain is extremely significant of this new politically-committed and socially responsive perspective. Within this framework it meets al the criteria for judging the value and success of any particular piece of social research.

Rubin is very clear about the methodology used. It is empirically-based but not objective. She utilized indepth interviews along with her own perceptions as a white working-class child who went to college, became involved in radical politics, and moved into the middle-class as the wife of a professional and a family therapist herself. What she seeks to reveal is the subjective reality of working-class life, what its members see and feel. Hence she notes details that a film-maker would consider important but a "scientist" would tend to overlook: "Some homes have no lamps at all in the living room; only a few have anything that approaches adequate reading light." (p 18)

Because her purpose is not to present facts that "prove" a thesis, she avoided an interviewing format consisting of brief answers to a standard set of questions in favor of a series of loosely-structured meetings and discussions with each spouse separately. By using a more fluid technique she was able "to 'hear' what was important to them" because ". . .in such situations people want to talk about their concerns as well as yours." (p 14) In keeping with her general aim she submitted the manuscript, before it went into print, to the scrutiny of a few of the people interviewed. She also followed up on a lot of the families after the completion of the project all of this a departure from the more traditional mode in which the sociologist enters into the life of the community only insofar and for as long as is necessary to test the appropriate number of subjects.

Along with refusing to distance herself from the material ("it is my personal and political background that gives it its special meaning and that facilitates deeper levels of comprehension..."), Rubin implores us to make our own connections, use our own sense of "species-feeling" in reading the book. She speaks of "its ability to persuade by appealing to a level of 'knowing' that exists in all of us but is not very often tapped. . ." (pp12-13)

This is an eloquent and elegant work. Like the people it is for and about (and in a large part, by) unpretentious and undramatic but authentic. Rubin selects a verse by John Masefield as an epigraph: "To get the whole world out of bed, — and washed, and dressed, and warmed, and fed, — To work, and back to bed again, —Believe me, Saul, costs worlds of pain." For me the underkeyed, undogmatic but raw clarity of the book summoned forth a short poem by Sarah Cleghorn: "The golf links lie so near the mill — That almost every day — The laboring children can look out — And see the men at play."

A MAN CALLED INTREPID

By William Stevenson
Ballantine Books
$2.25 520 pages

It has been over 30 years since World War II ended. In that time hundreds of books have been written about nearly every part of the war. For thirty years, this secret was kept from the world. A secret which quite possibly won the war.

Early in the war, the Polish underground succeeded in capturing a German code machine intact and sending it to Britain. Using this and some of the best minds in the world, the Allies were able to crack the German code and thus read nearly every German message, including top level communications from Hitler to his generals.

Intrepid is not only the story of this but the story of most of the British secret operations and the man who directed them.

There are also some rather startling and disturbing revelations in the book. British intelligence operations were run from secret headquarters in Rockefeller Center. For nearly two years before the US entered the war, Roosevelt conducted a secret war, most of which was in violation of US neutrality laws.

US planes and ships aided the British in their search for the German battleship "Bismark", for example. British intelligence agents opened US mail bound for Europe at a base in Bermuda.

The book is also the story of the man who headed these operations Sir William Stephenson (no relation to the author). Stephenson, who was a pilot of some note in WW I, had as much effect on the course of the war as anybody, but his role has been concealed up to now.

His influence with Roosevelt was probably as much as any other person had. He presented the British side of the war to Roosevelt and convinced him to aid the British even to the point that he, Roosevelt, could have been impeached if these actions had become known.

The questions raised by this book are serious ones. How far should our respect for the law extend? To the point where it could endanger our country and our civilization? And who should decide where this point is?

In the wake of Watergate and other abuses of power, this book should be read and thought about by any person concerned about our freedoms.

THE COMIC MARK TWAIN READER

Charles Neider, ed.
Doubleday and Co.
$8.95 483pgs.

If your library doesn't include a single Mark Twain book, then The Comic Mark Twain Reader, edited by Charles Neider and publihed by Doubleday and Co. is the first you should get.

Neider has collected "the most humorous selections from his stories, sketches, novels, travel books and speeches" and housed them all under one cover.

Twain, aside from being a novelist, was also a lecturer and this book draws heavily on material Twain used in his lectures; his accounts of the Sandwich Islands (published in Roughing It), an attempt to master "the awful German language" (published in A Tramp Abroad), among others — all funny.

I laugh out loud when I read something funny, but the walls shake and the neighbors complain when I read Mark Twain. If there were a Richter scale for laughter, California would have slid into the sea halfway through this book.

And if you don't believe Twain is still current, read "Punch Brother, Punch" from this collection. It was written 101 years ago and deals with a relentless and mindless jingle that runs through Twain's head, completely ruining his day. I mean, if it's really true that Coke adds life, then you deserve a break today. Ad pollution ad nauseum is nothing new — but never more humorous than when related by Twain.

The Comic Mark Twain Reader is an $8.95 hardcover tribute to a fine writer and humorist. Seems worth it to me.

HERMIT OF PEKING, THE HIDDEN LIFE OF SIR EDMUND BACKHOUSE

By Hugh Trevor-Roper
Knopf Books 316pp.

Much of that which was China before 1900 has escaped us due to immense loss through destruction and upheaval during the Boxer Rebellion. Because of this "China Under the Empress Dowager" and "Annals and Memoirs of the Court of Peking" published in 1910 and 1914 respectively by J. O. P. Bland and Sir Edmund Backhouse remained virtually the only authorities on a very tasty morsel of history. It has been cited even within recent years by authors studying the era. But, with new light thrown on the works and escapades of Sir Edmund Backhouse, Hugh Trevor-Roper has not only uncovered the brilliant forgery of the important papers of the above books but also the even more criminally inspiring forgery of an entire library of books, the masterful duping of the British government over arms, a fantastic bank note fraud and the general practice of swindling the most out of the best diplomats and politicians in China. All this is part of the new findings on the life of recluse Sir Edmund Backhouse in the Hermit of Peking.

When "China Under the Empress Dowager" first received attention shortly after publication in 1910, it was hailed as a masterpiece of insightful information and persuasive because of the closeness of the authors to their subject matter. The book definitely presented an insider's view to the great court and contained a very valuable piece of evidence, the diary of Ching-shan, supposedly found by Backhouse soon after the Boxer Rebellion. Now, under Trevor-Roper's Holmesian detection we are carried through each successive veil of mystery until he leads us to the brilliant conclusion of Backhouse's forgery. All that was told in the diary had actually been written by Backhouse himself. And after forging it he translated it, wrote it into his collaborative effort with the unsuspecting J.O.P. Bland, concocted a phoney discovery story and continued to remain convinced of its authenticity whenever asked about it.

All this is revealed in so suspenseful a biography that I cannot hesitate to recommend it as your next mystery novel to read. Hugh Trevor-Roper's love for the bizarre little project can be felt by the reader as he winds his way through this hazy fog till the daylight seeps more into the action and all is finally revealed. Truly an amazing stunt to have uncovered all this after so long a time and to put it into an unscholarly and still very commanding suspense-filled style; one becomes attached to this world of intrigue and filthy Eastern ways. You begin to adore so unassuming a man like Backhouse; you cherish the strangeness and perfect bizarreness as you read about his reclusive nature and how he would turn his face when his rickshaw traveled past other Europeans.

What more could you ask for? Even in fiction there can be no more than you will find here. After donating a priceless library of Chinese books in order to procure for himself a professorship at Oxford, Backhouse was hailed by scholars as one of the greatest living authorities on China. Of course that statement dwindled back into obscurity with Backhouse's name when it was discovered that many of the donations were complete forgeries. Again Backhouse played his part right up to the last scene, denying everything vehemently.

Aside from these activities Backhouse in his own memoirs purported to be a great lover covering many of the most important in his generation, including the poet Verlaine and the Empress Dowager. How much closer to the court of Peking need one get? Astoundingly enough Backhouse was an excellent scholar above all other things; he had mastered the Chinese language and Calligraphy. However his dualistic tendencies also led him into a stint as a pornographer. All in all not a bad array of accomplishments for a hermit.

One of the most enjoyable aspects of this book is the way in which it is structured to resemble almost a work of fiction. There is no giving the whole game away too early, and as Backhouse is a person most may have never heard about before, there is nothing anyone can already expect to hear about.

The Hermit of Peking was a particularly extraordinary man whose life if we are to believe what we are reading is of incredible interest if only because it is full of the imaginary concoctions of the kind of life he wanted people to believe, and they did. They even liked him for his gentlemanly manners and intellect after he had duped them. That in itself is worth hearing more on. As it is however, Backhouse provides such entertainment for all of us today that it seems very far from our realities. How could it have been true? The feast of a world of intrigue very different from the galactic, multi-national schemes we witness here today is available to you; a cheap price for this entertainment and it's yours. Witness this incredible story about a loveable man who would thoroughly disgust you when his fantasies failed.

BOTTICELLI

By L.D. and Helen S. Ettlinger
Oxford University Press
$10.95 cloth $6.50 paper
216 pps

The latest volume in a series of art and artist studies from Oxford University Press is Botticelli by L.D. and Helen S. Ettlinger both of the University of California, Berkley. This short but intense study of Mariano Filipepi, as he was named at his birth in 1444, offers us some flesh and blood as compared to past studies of Botticelli. The Ettlingers have taken a new look at one of the world's best loved artists, perhaps even given us a new Botticelli while certainly offering new guidelines to our understanding and appreciation of his work.

Attention is appropriated to the famous religious paintings such as the Adoration of the Magi and the mythological and allegorical masterpieces like the Birth of Venus as would be expected. However, the authors have also given a close examination to Botticelli's three frescoes located in the Sistine Chapel that have gone without proper attention what with the Michelangelo ceiling and to a series of drawings, unfamiliar to most of us, that he did to accompany the text of Dante's Divine Comedy.

With the Ettinger's close scrutiny of this man's life we can also gleam valuable information about 15th century Florentine social structures and the political changings taking place at that time and their effect on the art world for centuries to come.

SENSUAL DRUGS

Deprivation and Rehabilitation of the Mind
By Hardin B. and Helen C. Jones
Cambridge University Press
$7.95

Sensual Drugs is to seventies drug literature what the screenplay to Reefer Madness was to drug information in the Twenties.

That is, the book purports to be a scholarly, scientific treatment of an admittedly important issue in our times. What it is more of a compilation of biased psuedo-facts and medical opinions on drugs, with particular emphasis on marihuana, and its relationship to that common denominator, sex.

The cover is an initial tip-off, a naked individual strolling down a beach. Soft core drug porn hints. And face it, if someone wants to try to convince one that pot is bad, the bad drugs equals bad sex angle can be powerfully convincing.

But the attempt breaks down when the book is closely read. Terms are tossed out blurring and confusing addiction and 'drug addict' (grouping ether and psilocybin together as sensual drugs... ether?! Sensual!?) ending in a meaningless semantic monologue.

The crux of the book is that pot causes brain damage. Better watch out, all of you. This central point has recently been refuted, but as is the case with other of the Jonse's facts, that probably wouldn't stop them from using the statement as a 'fact.' Other 'facts' prove fun. Did you know that marihuana users find that: they are susceptible to any and all sexual invitations, lacking the will to resist (Take me); some have painfully over extended erections (most often men) but also painful anal spasms; users can develop symptoms akin to Parkinsons disease, and may permanently damage their livers. Thwarted users become aggressive, so let them get high, and, perhaps best of all, that the drug known as STP on the streets is synthesized from the motor oil additive of the same name. Let's take a trip with Andy Granatelli, right?

The problem with books like this is that they fuel one-sided arguments and opinions. Many of the clinical facts have been drawn from the 1974 Internal Security hearings led by Sen. James Eastland, which flat out refused to hear any scientific information that might have softened their standpoint that pot is harmful. I had been frustrated by the touted 'Conclusive facts' mention in this book, but had no counter information until a friend pointed me toward the Dec. 1976 issue of Psychology Today which neatly summarized arguments and conclusions on both sides of the marihuana debate.

So far, that debate has proved little. Many opinions and positions, charges and counter-charges have been made, but no Answer has been found. Books the likes of Sensual Drugs will never aid that eventual conclusion.

By JOE MAGLITTA

Negotiations between Hampshire College administrators and students demanding the school sell all stock in firms with interests in South Africa continue today as protesters begin their second day occupying the administration building.

Talks are scheduled to begin again at 10 a.m. today.

Shortly before 4 a.m. yesterday about 20 members of the Hampshire Committee for the Liberation of South Africa locked themselves inside the Coles Science Center, which also serves as administration building.

While the building's top two floors opened for classes during the day, the committee refused to allow anyone into the first floor administrative offices.

School administrators met with the group for an hour during the morning yesterday to discuss demands, but reached no agreement.

Hampshire College Vice-President Robert C. Birney said yesterday the session "clarified positions" but declined further comment on negotiations.

"I don't want to give the impression that we're negotiating through headlines," Birney said.

Committee Coordinator Joel Saxe said yesterday in a telephone interview from the administration building that in addition to selling the South African Stocks, the college should make a statement denouncing the South African government's segregationalist policies.

In addition, the committee's demands called for the establishment of moral and political guidelines for the college's ownership of stocks, Saxe said.

"Everybody here is prepared to stay until at least Monday, and longer if necessary. We're not going to stay here for the rest of our lives, but we will wait. We have the power right now and they'll have to deal with us," Saxe said.

Earlier in the day, a crowd of about 150 students at Hampshire attended a rally supporting the takeover. They later set up picket lines outside the occupied building.

The UMass Committee for the Liberation of South Africa staged a smaller supportive rally yesterday on the steps of the Student Union building.

Last March Saxe and two other students confronted the Hampshire College Board of Trustees Finance Commission with the South African stocks issue.

Arrangements were made to formulate a comprehensive financial policy which could be completed by June.

"Every effort has been made to formulate a responsible policy," said Birney, "and the trustees have been meticulous in meeting guidelines and taking steps."

Birney explained the committee was still in the process of writing guidelines which would be completed early in June.

The protesters, however, claimed the college was too slow in completing the guidelines and that no definite dates had been established for their completion. "We are arguing that they get rid of the holdings first, then make the policy. They say we are doing it backwards," said protester Sebastian M. Belle.

UM Trustees—'go'

BOSTON — The UMass Board of Trustees yesterday acknowledged an additional $20,000 investment in corporations operating in South Africa, even though a subcommittee was appointed last month to investigate the possible support by these corporations of apartheid policies in South Africa.

The board also approved motions for long range planning guidelines, increased student fees, a collective bargaining agreement with University police, and appointment of an economics professor at the Amherst campus.

Student Trustee Pinky Batiste said she disagrees with the additional corporation investments because the subcommittee, which she serves on is currently involved with an investigation that could propose divestments of the funds if apartheid practices are uncovered.

According to Batiste the subcommittee will be meeting in mid-May to critique reports from each of the 20 corporations UMass owns stock in.

Batiste also voiced concern over the motion the Board approved yesterday for long range planning. Passed by a 12-9 vote, the motion directs President Robert C. Wood to provide the three UMass chancellors "preliminary planning assumptions" as guidelines for long range planning.

"There is no specified statement that students will be a part of the planning," pointed out Batiste.

She said she intends to propose to the administration that students be allowed to share the planning responsibilities.

Student fee increases discussed and approved by the Budget and Fees Committee were approved by the full board in a series of motions listing each charge.

"It's not something we like," explained Batiste, "but we all realized it had to happen."

Total costs listed in the report for next year will be $2,921. Hikes in Campus Center and Health Services fees average $15, while room and board will be raised $50 in academic year 1977-78.

The report for increased fees noted Financial Aid office had been notified about possible increases early enough for it to request more federal funds for next year.

The board voted to recognize the UMass-Amherst local of the International Brotherhood of Police Offices, provided no wage increases in the agreement "shall become effective until the governor has transferred additional funds." UMass-Amherst faculty representative addressed the board about faculty pay increases.

George T. Sulzner, of political science dept., spoke about the six month delay UMass employes have endured since Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said their cost of living increases were allocated.

Sulzner said it is "intolerable this exists" and asked Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks for an explanation.

Parks answered the funds were approved in the governor's office, but the legislature said "hold on."

Neither Rep. James S. Collins, D-Amherst, nor Rep. John J. Finnegan D-Dorchester, chairperson of the Ways and Means Committee, could be reached last night for comments about the salary problem.

The board also approved the appointment with tenure of Australian economist Douglas Vickers, effective January, 1978.

While UMass Trustees voted to increase student fees, 100 UMass-Boston students demonstrated outside against level funding and academic decisions by school administration. (Staff photo by Joe Quinlan)

'I let down nation'—Nixon

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

Exactly 1,000 days after he resigned from office in disgrace over the Watergate scandal, former President Richard M. Nixon last night broke his long silence and conceded "I let down my friends, I let down the country, I let down our system of government."

In a 90-minute television interview with British journalist David Frost, Nixon admitted mistakes in handling the Watergate scandal, but insisted he did not obstruct justice. "I did not commit, in my view, an impeachable offense," he said.

Alternately combative, hesitant, contrite, and somber, Nixon admitted he lied in some of his public statements while in office. He smiled infrequently, in the tense manner that became so familiar to Americans during his aborted term.

Nixon said he considered resigning in April of 1973, 15 months before he did so, but added he remained in office to continue his foreign policy initiatives.

Although he spoke with contempt about the Washington Post investigation into Watergate, Nixon said he didn't "go with the idea" that a conspiracy ousted him from office. "I brought myself down," said the 37th President, "I gave them a sword and they stuck it in and twisted it with relish. I guess if I had been in their position, I'd have done the same thing."

Frost, criticized in some quarters for paying Nixon more than $600,000 for a series of four interviews, relentlessly pressed Nixon on his role in the payment of hush money to convicted Watergate burglars G. Gordon Liddy and E. Howard Hunt.

Nixon admitted knowledge of hush money payments, but argued such knowledge did not constitute criminal obstruction of justice. He said the money was paid to limit political damage stemming from the Watergate scandal.

Frost then quoted Nixon from a tape transcript as saying, "this tremendous investigation rests unless one of the seven (Watergate burglars) begins to talk. That is the problem." Frost said such a remark could not have been expressed more clearly by someone running a cover-up.

Nixon said he was concerned about men who worked the kind of covert activity as the Watergate burglars. "Once they're apprehended, they are likely to say anything. I certainly believe a man like Howard Hunt, who was a prolific book writer, or any one of the others under the pressure of the moment, could have started blowing and putting out all sorts of stories to embarrass the administration, or as it later turned out in Hunt's case, to blackmail the President to provide clemency, or money, or both."

Although Nixon insisted he did not have a role in a cover-up, he outlined his actions and admitted he may have acted improperly subsequent to March 31, 1973 — when John Dean outlined the whole affair for the President.

"I came to the edge," he said, "and under the circumstances, I would have to say a reasonable person could have called that a cover-up. I didn't intend it as a cover-up. Let me say, if I intended a cover-up, I would have done it. I could have done it immediately after the election by simply giving clemency to everyone and the whole thing would have gone away. I couldn't do that because I said, 'clemency is wrong.' "

Nixon's voice cracked noticeably only once during his talk — when he said his political career was over.

"It snowballed," said Nixon, "and it was my fault. I'm simply saying to you that as far as I am concerned, I not only regret it; I indicated my own beliefs when I resigned. People did not think it was enough to admit mistakes. If they want me to get down and grovel on the floor, no. Never."

Area still dislikes Dick

A UMass professor of political science said last night's interview of former President Richard M. Nixon by British journalist David Frost "answers no questions."

Harvey F. Kline, who teaches a course at UMass inspired by Watergate called "Political Misbehavior," said the interview had an "all too familiar tone and "we learned nothing new."

"He (Nixon) used many of the same tactics in the interview that he used during the time in office. His method of selective recall was shown again. He remembered what he wanted to and forgot where he felt it convenient," said Kline.

Kline added Nixon shifted the blame to others, made constant references to people taking information out of context and made a reference to the Adams case in the Eisenhower Administration. When he referred to the Adams case, he was reiterating a claim there has been corruption in every presidential administration.

"There was only one piece of information in the whole thing. He denies he will hold public office, although some say he's using these interviews as a springboard to launch another political career," Kline said.

The points that came out strongly, said Kline, were three "impeachable" offenses involving a near-abuse of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), an obstruction of justice and a clearcut violation of the presidential oath of office.

"Nixon thought about using the CIA to block the FBI investigations. This is clearly against the law. The man admitted that he considered committing a crime.

"When he was talking about obstruction of justice, he made a distinction about the motive. Nixon said he would have been guilty of obstruction if he covered up with a corrupt motive, but he said his were to protect himself and the presidency. I don't believe the statute distinguishes between the two.

"He also admitted that for a while he behaved as a defense attorney for some of his White House aides, like Haldeman, Ehrlichman and Dean. Yet, in his oath of office, he pledged to "faithfully execute the office of the Presidency.

"Another of the points that came out strongly in the interview was that he admitted his aides were doing illegal things, but he again denies any knowledge of them. He uses the term plausibly deny which is merely a form of insulation for himself."

Kline said he felt like Nixon was "the exiled ruler coming back from his island (San Clemente) to reiterate and defend his past deeds."

"I feel like I've just been to Elba to talk with Napoleon after Moscow," said Kline.

"The real tragedy of this whole thing is that the man, because of the Ford pardon, will never be tried. What we should have had was a series of legal processes to see if this man should be legally culpable.

"But instead of being on trial, he stands to make somewhere between $600,000 and a million dollars.

STUDENT REACTION

Kevin Mayo of North Pleasant Street in Amherst said, "Frost did a good job — to Nixon and for the country."

Nancy Garber of Rolling Green Apartments called the interview "a sympathetic plea by Nixon."

"I don't think this whole thing is necessary. I know it's an important part of our history, but sometimes I'd just like to forget the whole thing. Let's just say I have mixed emotions about it," said Garber.

Janice Gosselin of Puffton Village said she thought the interview was "real bogus" and turned it off after a few minutes.

Pam Daley of John Quincy Adams dorm in Southwest said "I thought it was real informative," but added that she couldn't watch the entire program because of an intramural softball game.

Marilyn Feldman of Sunderland said, "It's the same old thing — Nixon sucks. He's just making excuses. Oh, I disdain him!"

Greek Council votes to fund 'New Games'

The Greek Area Council voted last night to give the "New Games Tournament" $50. Norm Berger, a representative from "New Games," a form of games stressing cooperation instead of the traditional competition, appealed for funding at the last meeting.

The council also voted in Steve Aznavorian as Co-chairperson for Activities. His appointment was approved at an executive meeting Tuesday night and announced formally last night.

A new Arcon guide chairperson of Guide services, Charles Pecevitch, was approved. Arcon supplies guided tours of campus on weekdays and weekends.

The '77-'78 academic school year budget was preliminarily approved last night. The budget will be finalized and voted on at the beginning of next semester.

The resignation of Edward Bowe, Greek Area Director was announced at last night's meeting. His resignation will not be official until next semester. A search committee for a new director is being formed and will meet over the summer.

Boston students like UM

By NIKKI ARONSON

Students from 18 Boston public high schools formed positive impressions about UMass after a two day "Boston Day" event sponsored by the University that organized activities to "show students what UMass is all about."

Today more than 100 members of the junior class spent the remainder of their visit in small groups participating in sessions concerned with academic programs, student activities, special programs, campus support, and special programs for minority students.

The sessions, held between 9 a.m. and noon were conducted by volunteer undergraduates and coordinators of the "Boston Day" program.

Former Student Government Association President, Paul M. Cronin said the event had been "good for the university but more important, good for the students themselves.

The students left campus at 1:30 this afternoon taking with them their impressions of the buildings, classes and programs.

Rouday Austin, a junior from Roxbury High summed up his experience:

"I once was lost but now I'm found, was blind but now I see. Covered up by a very large campus and under a lot of lies and rumors I know now the truth about UMass, Amherst. The time that I've spent on campus has been both pleasant and profitable and for the time I've been here I've been seriously thinking. I just want to say to those who don't know that the only thing you get out of anything is what you put into it.

"I've seen with my own eyes and come to the conclusion that UMass, Amherst had a lot put into it and it has a lot to offer to all.

"I could go on and tell how much I was impressed but I think this sums it up."

Boycott suggestion stirs SGA controversy

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

A motion requesting the "faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences (CAS) to cease and desist their racist harassment of the Provost" and urged "a boycott of the classes of those faculty and departments that openly make and conduct racist remarks about the Chancellor and Provost" met with heated debate on the floor of the Undergraduate Student Senate last night.

The motion, presented by Student Government Association co-President Pinky Batiste, read that faculty of CAS had undermined student confidence by "the intrusion of open expression of racism and the prevalence of a lynch mob atmosphere."

Batiste said the Faculty Senate "asked for Puryear's and Wood's resignation and made racist remarks" during their meeting yesterday afternoon.

Batiste further criticized the Faculty by saying "they would not listen to anything the students had to say."

Senator Paul Wong objected to the wording of the motion that dealt with senate disagreement "with some aspects of the Administration's proposed five year plan." He asked a deletion of the sentence saying the current wording would address "the racist issue only and not the five year plan."
